By touch the first pure qualities we learn,
Which quicken all things, hot, cold, moist and dry;
By touch, hard, soft, rough, smooth, we do discern;
By touch, sweet pleasure, and sharp pain we try. Davies.
The spiders touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.
The fifth sense is touch, a sense over the whole body. Locke.
3. The act of touching.
The touch of the cold water made a pretty kind of shugging come over her body, like the twinkling of the fairest among the fixed stars. Sidney, b. ii.
The time was once when thou unurg'd would'st vow,
That never touch was welcome to thy hand Unless I touch'd. Shakespeare.
With one virtuous touch
Th' archchemick fun produces precious things. Milton.

To dally thus with death is no fit toy,
Go find some other play-fellows, mine own sweet boy. Fairy Queen, b. i.

What a profusion of wealth laid out in coaches, trappings, tables, cabinets, and the like precious toys. Addison.

In Delia's hand this toy is fatal found,
Nor could that fabled dart more surely wound. Pope.

3. Matter of no importance.
'Tis a cockle or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakespeare.

4. Folly; trifling practice; silly opinion.
The things which so long experience of all ages hath confirmed and made profitable, let us not presume to condemn as follies and toys, because we sometime know not the cause and reason of them. Hooker, b. iv.

5. Play; sport; amorous dalliance.
Ye sons of Venus, play your sports at will;
For greedy pleasure, carelets of your toys,
Thinks more upon her paradise of joys. Spenser's Epithal.

So said he, and forbore not glance or toy
Of amorous intent. Milton.

TRA

6. Odd story; silly tale. I never may believe These antick fables, nor these fairy toys. Shakespeare.
7. Frolick; humour; odd fancy. Shall that which hath always received this construction, be now disguised with a toy of novelty. Hooker, b. v.
- The very place puts toys of desperation,
Without more motive, into every brain,
That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
- TO TOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to dally amou-ously; to play. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
- TO'YISH. adj. [from toy.] Trifling; wanton.
- TO'YISHNESS. n. f. [from toyish.] Nugacity; wantonness.
- Your society will discredit that toyishness of wanton fancy, that plays tricks with words, and frolics with the caprices of frothy imagination. Glanville's Scept.
- TO'YSHOP. n. f. [toy and shop.] A shop where playthings and little nice manufactures are sold.
- Fans, silks, ribbands, laces, and gewgaws, lay so thick together, that the heart was nothing else but a toyshop. Add.
- With varying vanities from every part
They shift the moving toyshop of their heart. Pope.
- TO TOZE. v. a. [See TOWSE and TEASE.] To pull by violence or impetuosity. Shakespeare.
- Think'st thou, for that I infirmate, or toze from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier. Shakespeare.
- TRACE. n. f. [trace, Fr. traccia, Italian.]
1. Mark left by any thing passing; footsteps.
- These as a line their long dimension drew,
Screaking the ground with sinuous trace. Milton.
2. Remain; appearance of what has been.
- The people of these countries are reported to have lived like the beasts among them, without any traces of orders, laws, or religion. Temple.
- There are not the least traces of it to be met, the greatest part of the ornaments being taken from Trajan's arch, and let up to the conqueror. Addison on Italy.
- The shady empire shall retain no trace
Of war, or blood, but in the Sylvan chase. Pope.
3. [From trasser, French; trassés, traces.] Harness for beasts of draught.
- Her waggon spokes made of long spinner's legs;
The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;
The traces, of the smallest spider's web. Shakespeare.
- The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came. Milton.
- While lab'ring oxen, spent with toil and heat,
In their loose traces from the field retreat. Pope.
- Twelve young mules,
New to the plough, unpractis'd in the trace. Pope's Odyss.
- TO TRACE. v. a. [Trace, Fr. traciere, Italian.]
1. To follow by the footsteps, or remaining marks.
- I feel thy power to trace the ways
Of highest agents. Milton.
- You may trace the deluge quite round the globe in profane history; and every one of these people have a tale to tell concerning the refutation. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
- They do but trace over the paths beaten by the ancients, or comment, critic, or flourish upon them. Temple.
- To this haste of the mind a not due tracing of the arguments to their true foundation is owing. Locke.
2. To follow with exactness.
- That fertile path thou nobly dost decline,
Of tracing word by word, and line by line. Denham.
3. He allows the soul power to trace images on the brain, and perceive them. Locke.
- His pen can trace out a true quotation. Swift.
4. To walk over.
- Men as they trace,
Both feet and face one way are wont to lead. Fa. Qu.
- We do trace this alley up and down. Shakespeare.
- TRA'CE. n. f. [from trace.] One that traces.
- Ambassadors should not be held the tracers of a plot of such malice. Howell.
- TRACE. n. f. [trace, old French; traccia, Italian.]
1. Mark left upon the way by the foot or otherwise.
- Following the track of Satan. Milton.
- Hung by the neck and hair, and dragg'd around,
The hostile spear yet sticking in his wound,
With tracks of blood inscrib'd the dusty ground. Dryden.
- Consider the exterior frame of the globe, if we may find any tracks or footsteps of wisdom in its constitution. Bentley.
2. A road, a beaten path.
- With track oblique sidelong he works his way. Milton.
- Behold Torquatus the same track pursue,
And next, the two devoted Decii view. Dryden's En.
- TO TRACK. v. a. [from the noun.] To follow by the footsteps or marks left in the way.
- As shepherd's cur that in dark evening's shade
Hath tracked forth some savage beast's tread. Fa. Qu.

TRA

- He was not only a professed imitator of Horace, but a learned plagiary in all the others; you track him everywhere in their flow. Dryden.
- TRA'CKLESS. adj. [from track.] Untrodden; marked with no footsteps.
- Loft in trackless fields of shining day,
Unable to discern the way,
Which Nature's virtue only could explore. Prior.
- TRACT. n. f. [tractus, Lat.]
1. Any kind of extended substance.
2. A region; a quantity of land.
- Only there are some tracts which, by high mountains, are barred from air and fresh wind.
- Heav'n hides nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of hell.
Monte Circeo, by Homer called insula Æea, is a very high mountain joined to the main land by a narrow tract of earth. Milton.
3. Continuity; any thing protracted, or drawn out to length.
- The myrtle flourisheth still; and wonderful it is that for so long a tract of time she should still continue fresh. Howell.
- Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit, Improv'd by tract of time, and wing'd ascend Ethereal as we. Milton.
- As in tract of speech a dubious word is easily known by the coherence with the rest, and a dubious letter by the whole word; so may a deaf person, having competent knowledge of language, by an acute sagacity by some more evident word discerned by his eye, know the sense. Hooker.
4. Course; manner of process; unless it means, in this place, rather, discourse; explanation.
- The tract of every thing
Would, by a good discourse, lose some life
Which action's self was tongue to. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
5. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for track.
- The weary fun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright tract of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shakespeare.
6. [Tractatus, Lat.] A treatise; a small book.
- The church clergy at that time write the best collection of tracts against popery that ever appeared. Swift.
- TRA'CTABLE. adj. [tractabilis, Lat. tractabile, Fr.]
1. Manageable; docile; compliant; obsequious; practicable; governable.
- For moderation of those affections growing from the very natural bitterness and gall of adversity, the scripture much allegeth contrary fruits, which affliction likewise hath, when-soever it falleth on them that are tractable, the grace of God's holy spirit concurring therewith. Hooker, b. v.
- Noble Ajax, you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
- Tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shakespeare. Henry VII.
- If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
- As those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempters to urge them on in an evil course; so those who yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the spirit of God more ready to encourage them. Tillotson's Sermons.
- If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable, and quietly submit to it. Locke on Education.
2. Palpable; such as may be handled.
- The other measures are of continued quantity visible, and for the most part tractable; whereas time is always transient, neither to be seen nor felt. Holder on Time.
- TRA'CTABLENESS. n. f. [from tractable.] The state of being tractable; compliance; obsequiousness.
- It will be objected, that whatsoever I fancy of childrens tractableness, yet many will never apply. Locke.
- TRA'CTATE. n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a tract; a small book.
- Though philosophical tractates make enumeration of authors, yet are their reasons usually introduced. Brown.
- We need no other evidence than Glanville's tractate. Hol.
- TRA'CTION. n. f. [traction, Lat.] The act of drawing;
the state of being drawn.
- The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inwards to bring the terms of that line nearer in proportion as it is curved, and so gives a tension to the tympanum. Holder.
- TRA'CTILE. n. f. [tractus, Lat.] Capable to be drawn out or extended in length; ductile.
- The consistencies of bodies are very divers; fragile, tough;
flexible, inflexible; tractile, or to be drawn forth in length, intractile. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 839.
- TRA'CTILITY. adj. [from tractile.] The quality of being tra-ctile. Silver.

TRA

- Silver, whose ductility and tractility are much inferior to those of gold, was drawn out to so slender a wire, that a single grain amounted to twenty-seven feet. Derham.
- TRADE. n. f. [tratta, Italian.]
1. Traffick; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods; or for money.
- Whoever commands the sea, commands the trade; whosoever commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself. Rel.
- Trade increases in one place and decays in another. Temple.
2. Occupation; particular employment whether manual or mercantile, distinguished from the liberal arts or learned professions.
- Appoint to every one that is not able to live of his freehold a certain trade of life; the which trade he shall be bound to follow. Spenser on Ireland.
- How dizzy! half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade. Shakespeare.
- Ill mountebank their loves, and come home below'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
- Fear and piety,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakespeare.
- The rude Equicola
Hunting their sport, and plund ring was their trade. Dryden.
- Fight under him; there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade. Dryden's Jew.
- The whole division that to Mars pertains,
All trades of death, that deal in steel for gains.
The emperor Vertanax applied himself in his youth to a gainful trade; his father, judging him fit for a better employment, had a mind to turn his education another way;
the son was obdurate in pursuing for profitable a trade, a sort of merchandise of wood. Arbutnot on Coins.
3. Instruments of any occupation.
- The shepherd bears
His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden's Virgil.
4. Any employment not manual; habitual exercise.
- Call some of young years to train them up in that trade;
and so fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.
- TO TRADE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To traffick; to deal; to hold commerce.
- He commanded these servants to be called, to know how much every man had gained by trading. Luke xix. 15.
- Delos, a sacred place, grew a free port where nations warring with one another reformed with their goods, and traded. Arbutnot on Coins.
- Maximianus traded with the Goths in the product of his estate in Thracia. Arbutnot.
2. To act merely for money.
- Saucy and overbold! how did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macheth,
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare. Macbeth.
3. Having a trading wind.
- They on the trading flood ply tow'rd the pole. Milton.
- TO TRADE. v. a. To sell or exchange in commerce.
- They were the merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market. Ezek. xxvii. 13.
- TRADE-WIND. n. f. [trade and wind.] The monsoon; the periodical wind between the tropics.
- Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more;
A constant trade-wind will securely blow,
And gently lay us on the spicy shore.
His were the projects of perpetuum mobiles, and of increasing the trade-wind by vast plantations of reeds. Arbutnot.
- Comfortable is the trade-wind to the equatorial parts, without which life would be both short and grievous. Cheyne.
- TRA'DED. adj. [from trade.] Verfed; practised.
- Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villainy is not without such a rheum:
And he long traded in it makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare.
- Eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
- TRA'DER. n. f. [from trade.]
1. One engaged in merchandise or commerce.
- Pilgrims are going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
- Now the victory's won,
We return to our lasses like fortunate traders, Triumphant with spoils. Dryden.
- Many traders will necessitate merchants to trade for less profits, and consequently be more frugal. Child on Trade.
- That day traders sum up the accounts of the week. Swift.
2. One long used in the methods of money getting; a practitioner.
- TRA'DERSFOLK. n. f. [trader and folk.] People employed in trade. Swift.
- By his advice victuallers and tradersfolk would soon get all the money of the kingdom into their hands. Swift.

TRA

- TRA'DESMAN. n. f. [trade and man.] A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman; and it seems distinguished in Shakespeare from a man that labours with his hands. Shakespeare.
- I live by the awl, I meddle with no tradesmen's matters.
They rather had beheld Diffident numbers pelt'ring streets; than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their functions. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
- Order a trade thither and thence to some few merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them. Bacon.
- Tradesmen might conjecture what doings they were like to have in their respective dealings. Granville.
- M. Jordain would not be thought a tradesman, but ordered some silk to be measured out to his partner's friends: now I give up my shop. Prior.
- From a plain tradesman with a shop, he is now grown a very rich country gentleman. Arbutnot. Hist. of N. Bull.
- Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesmen. Swift.
- Boastful and rough, your first son is aquire;
The next a tradesman, meek and much a liar. Pope's Ep.
- TRA'DEFUL. adj. [trade and full.] Commercial; busy in traf-fick.
- Ye tradeful merchants that with weary toil
Do seek most precious things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure spoil,
What needeth you to seek so far in vain. Spenser.
- TRA'DITION. n. f. [tradition, Fr. traditio, Lat.]
1. The act or practice of delivering accounts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.
- To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from predecessors, and they from theirs, have received. Hooker, b. iii.
2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.
- With superstitions and traditions taint, Left only in those written records pure. Milton.
- Our old solemnities
But sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the God of day. Pope's Statius.
- TRA'DITIONAL. adj. [from tradition.]
1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.
- Whence may we have the infallible traditional sense of scripture, if not from the heads of their church? Tillotson.
- If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the same traditional sloth and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits. Swift.
2. Observant of traditions, or idle rites. Not used, nor proper.
God forbid.
- We should infringe the holy privilege Of sanctuary!
—You are too senseless obstinate, my lord; Too ceremonious and traditional. Shakespeare. Rich. II.
- TRA'DITIONALLY. adv. [from traditional.]
1. By transmission from age to age.
- There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from Saint John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials.
- It crolieth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchiale and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day. Brown's Vulgar Err.
- TRA'DITIONARY. adj. [from tradition.] Delivered by tradition.
- Suppose the same traditionary strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain, Inveterate truth, an old plain Sabine's heart. Dryden.
- Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditionary sense of texts of scripture. Tillotson.
- The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages. Addison on the Christian Religion.
- TRA'DITIVE. adj. [traditive, Fr. from tradere, Latin.] Transmitted or transmissible from age to age.
- Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide. Dryden. H. and Pant.
- TO TRADUCE. v. a. [traduce, Lat. traducere, Fr.]
1. To censure; to condemn; to reprove; to blame; to calumniate; to decry.
- The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the publick devout prayers of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, to bring them into contempt, and so slack the force of all mens devotion towards them. Hooker, b. v.

TRA

These particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly lift, when other things also traduced in the public duties of the church are, together with these, to be touched. Hooker, b. iv.

Whilst calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth; as long as men are malicious and designing they will be traducing. Gov. of the Tongue.

From that preface he took his hint; though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel. Dryden's Fab.

2. To propagate; to increase by deriving one from another. None are so gross as to contend for this, That souls from bodies may traduced be; Between whose natures no proportion is, When root and branch in nature still agree. Dowd.

From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth. Hale.

Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it be immediately created or traduced hath been the great ball of contention to the latter ages. Glanville's Scelf.

TRADUCEMENT. n. f. [from traduce.] Censure; obloquy. Rome must know The value of her own: 'twere a concealment Wrote than a theft, no less than a traducement, To hide your doings. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

TRADUCER. n. f. [from traduce.] A false censor; a calumniator. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

TRADUCIBLE. adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived. Though oral tradition might be a competent discoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet such a tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages. Hale.

TRADUCION. n. f. [from traduce.] 1. Derivation from one of the same kind; propagation. The patrons of traduction accuse their adversaries of affronting the attributes of God; and the asserters of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of things. Glanville.

If by traduction came thy mind, Our wonder is the less to find A soul so charming from a stock so good; Thy father was transfus'd into thy blood. Dryden.

2. Tradition; transmission from one to another. Touching traditional communication and traduction of truths conatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that derivation. Hale.

3. Conveyance. Since America is divided on every side by considerable seas, and no passage known by land, the traduction of brutes could only be by shipping: though this was a method used for the traduction of useful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions should have so much care used for their transportation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

4. Tradition. The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon.

TRAFICK. n. f. [from traffico, Fr. traffico, Italian.] 1. Commerce; merchandising; large trade; exchange of commodities. Traffick's thy god. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

My father A merchant of great traffick through the world. Shakespeare.

As the first of these was, for his great wisdom, titled the English Solomon, he followed the example of that wise king in nothing more than by advancing the traffick of his people. Addison's Freeholders, N. 41.

2. Commodities; subject of traffick. You'll see a draggled daniel From Billingsgate her filthy traffick bear. Gay.

TO TRAFICK. v. n. [from traffico, Fr. traffico, Italian.] 1. To practise commerce; to merchandise; to exchange commodities. They first plant for corn and cattle, and after enlarge themselves for things to traffick withal. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

2. To trade meanly or mercenarily. Saucy and overbold! how did you dare To trade and traffick with Macbeth, In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

How hast thou dar'd to think so vilely of me, That I would condescend to thy mean arts, And traffick with thee for a prince's ruin? Rowe.

TRAFFICKER. n. f. [from traffico, Fr. from traffick.] Trader; merchant. Your Argosies with portly sail, Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood, Do overpeer the petty traffickers That curtsy to them. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

In it are so many Jews very rich, and so great traffickers, that they have most of the English trade in their hands. Add.

TRAGACANTH. n. f. [from tragacantha, Lat.] A sort of gum to which this name has been given, because it proceeds from the incision of the root or trunk of a plant so called. Trevaux.

TRAGEDIAN. n. f. [from tragedia, Fr. tragedia, Lat.] 1. A writer of tragedy. Many of the poets themselves had much nobler conceptions of the Deity, than to imagine him to have any thing corporeal; as in these verses out of the ancient tragedian. Stillingfleet.

2. An actor of tragedy. I can counterfeit the deep tragedian; Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side, Tremble and start at wagging of a straw, Intending deep suspicion. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

To well-long'd tragedian's rage They recommend their labours of the stage. Dryden.

TRAGEDY. n. f. [from tragedia, Fr. tragedia, Lat.] 1. A dramatick representation of a serious action. Thousands more, that yet suspect no peril, Will now conclude their plotted tragedies. Shakespeare's All our Tragedies are of kings and princes; but you never see a poor man have a part unless it be as a chorus, or to fill up the scenes, to dance, or to be derided. Taylor's Holy Living.

Imitate the fitter of painting, tragedy; which employs the whole forces of her art in the main action. Dryden.

An anthem to their god Dionysus, whilst the goat food at his altar to be sacrificed, was called the goat-song or tragedy. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

There to her heart sad tragedy address'd The dagger, wont to pierce the tyrant's breast. Pope.

2. Any mournful or dreadful event. I shall laugh at this, That they, who brought me in my master's hate, I live to look upon their tragedy. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

I look upon this now done in England as another act of the same tragedy which was lately begun in Scotland. K. Ch.

TRAGICAL. adj. [from tragicus, Lat. tragicus, Gr.] 1. Relating to tragedy. The root whereof and tragic effect, Vouchsafe, O thou the mournfullest muse of mine, That won't the tragic stage for to direct, In funeral complaints and wailful time Reveal to me. Spenser's Muirpatriot.

Thy Clarence he is dead that stab'd my Edward; And the beholders of this tragic play, Th' adulterer Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Gray, Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves. Shakespeare's R. III.

2. Mournful; calamitous; sorrowful; dreadful. A dire induction I am witness to; And will to France, hoping the consequence Will prove as bitter, black, and tragic. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remoriel day, Is crept into the bosom of the sea: And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades, That drag the tragic melancholy night. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Why look you still so stern and tragic? So tragic and merited a fate Shall swallow those who God and justice hate. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

I now must change those notes to tragic. Milton.

The tale of this song is a pretty tragic story; and pleases because it is a copy of nature. Addison.

Bid them dreis their bloody altars With every circumstance of tragic pomp. Rowe.

TRAGICALITY. adv. [from tragic.] 1. In a tragical manner; in a manner befitting tragedy. Juvenal's genius was sharp and eager; and as his provocations were great, he has revenged them tragically. Dryden.

2. Mournfully; sorrowfully; calamitously. TRAGICALNESS. n. f. [from tragic.] Mournfulness; calamitousness. Like bold Phaetons we despise all benefits of the father of light, unless we may guide his chariot; and we moralize the fable as well in the tragicalness of the event as in the influence of the undertaking. Dewey of Piety.

TRAGICOMEDY. n. f. [from tragicomedia, Fr. from tragedy and comedy.] A drama compounded of merry and serious events. On the world's stage, when our applause grows high, For acting here life's tragicomedy, The lookers-on will say we act not well, Unless the last the former scenes excel. Denham.

The faults of that drama are in the kind of it, which is tragicomedy; but it was given to the people. Dryden.

We have often had tragicomedies upon the English theatre with success: but in that sort of composition the tragedy and comedy are in distinct scenes. Gay.

TRAGICOMICAL. adj. [from tragicomique, Fr. tragicomical and comical.] 1. Relating to tragicomedy. The whole art of the tragicomical farce lies in interweaving the several kinds of the drama, so that they cannot be distinguished. Gay's What d'ye call it.

2. Consisting of a mixture of mirth with sorrow. TRAGI-

TRAGICOMICALLY. adv. [from tragicomical.] In a tragicomical manner. Laws my Pindarick parents matter'd not, Brampton.

So I was tragicomically got. Brampton.

TO TRAJECT. v. a. [from trajectus, Latin.] To cast through; to throw. The disputes of those assuming confident, that think so highly of their attainments, are like the controversy of those in Plato's den, who having never seen but the shadow of an horse trajected, eagerly contended, whether its neighing proceeded from its appearing mane or tail. Glanville's Scelf.

If there are different kinds of ether, they have a different degree of rarity; by which it becomes so fit a medium for trajecting the light of all celestial bodies. Grew's Cosm. b. i.

If the sun's light be trajected through three or more cross prisms successively, those rays which in the first prism are refracted more than others, are in all the following prisms refracted more than others in the same proportion. Newton.

TRAJECT. n. f. [from trajectus, Latin.] A ferry; a passage for a water-carriage. What notes and garments he doth give thee, Bring to the traject, to the common ferry, Which trades to Venice. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

TRAJECTION. n. f. [from trajectus, Lat.] 1. The act of darting through. Later astronomers have observed the free motion of such comets as have, by a trajection through the ether, wandered through the celestial or interstellar part of the universe. Boyle.

2. Emulsion. The trajection of such an object more sharply pierce the martyred soul of John, than afterwards did the nails the crucified body of Peter. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. vii.

TO TRAIL. v. a. [from trailer, Fr.] 1. To hunt by the track. 2. To draw along the ground. Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully: Trail your steel pikes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Faintly he staggered through the hissing throng, And hung his head, and trail'd his legs along. Dryden.

3. To draw after in a long floating or waving body. What boots the regal circle on his head, That long behind he trails his pompous robe, And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe? Pope.

4. [from trahere, Dutch.] To draw; to drag. Because they shall not draw me through their streets Like a wild beast, I am content to go. Milton's Agonistes.

Thrice happy poet, who may trail Thy house about thee like a snail; Or harness'd to a nag, at ease Take journeys in it like a chaise; Or in a boat, when'er thou wilt, Canst make it serve thee for a tilt. Swift.

TO TRAIL. v. n. To be drawn out in length. When his brother saw the red blood trail Adown so fast, and all his armour steeped, For very felicity he gan to weep. Fairy Qu. b. ii.

Since the flames purf'd the trailing smoke, He knew his boon was granted. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

From o'er the roof the blaze began to move, And trailing vanish'd in th' Idean grove. It swept a path in heav'n, and thence a guide, Then in a steaming fench of sulphur dy'd. Dryden's Zen.

TRAIL. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Scent left on the ground by the animal pursued; track followed by the hunter. See but the issue of my jealousy: if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

How cheerfully on the false trail they cry! Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

I do think, or else this brain of mine Hunts not the trail of policy so sure As I have us'd to do, that I have found The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. Any thing drawn to length. From thence the fuming trail began to spread, And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryden's Zen.

When light'ning shoots in glittering trails along: It shines, 'tis true, and gilds the gloomy night; But when it strikes, 'tis fatal. Rowe's Royal Convert.

3. Any thing drawn behind in long undulations. And round about her work the did empale With a fair border wrought of sundry flow'rs, Enwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser's Muirpatriot.

A sudden star it shot through liquid air, And drew behind a radiant trail of hair. Pope.

TO TRAIN. v. a. [from trahere, Fr.] 1. To draw along. In hollow cube he train'd His devilish enmity. Milton.

2. To draw; to entice; to invite. If but twelve French Were there in arms, they would be as a call To train ten thousand English to their side. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. To draw by artifice or stratagem. For that cause I train'd thee to my house. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Oh train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note! To drown me in thy fillet's flood of tears. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Sing, Siren, to thyself, and I will doat: Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair, And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. To draw from act to act by persuasion or promise. We did train him on, And his corruption being ta'en from us, We as the fying of all shall pay for all. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

4. To educate; to bring up: commonly with up. I can speak English. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

For I was train'd up in the English court. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

A most rare speaker, To nature none more bound; his training such That he may furnish and instruct great teachers. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

A place for exercise and training up of youth in the fashion of the heathen. 2 Mac. iv. 9.

Call some of young years to train them up in that trade, and to fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.

Spirits train'd up in scalt and fong. Milton.

The first Christians were by great hardships trained up for glory. Tillotson's Sermons.

5. To breed, or form to any thing. Abram armed his trained servants born in his house, and pursued. Gen. xiv. 14.

The warrior horse here bred he's taught to train. Dryden.

The young soldier is to be trained on to the warfare of life; wherein care is to be taken that more things be not represented as dangerous than really are so. Locke.

TRAIN. n. f. [from trahere, Fr.] 1. Artifice; stratagem of enticement. He cast by treaty and by trains Her to persuade. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Their general did with due care provide, To save his men from ambush and from train. Fairfax.

This mov'd the king, To lay to draw him in by any train. Daniel's Civil War.

Swol'n with pride into the snare I fell Of fair fallacious looks, venerable trains, Soft'ned with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton's Agon.

Now to my charms And to my wily trains! I shall ere long Be well stock'd with as fair a herd as graz'd About my mother Circe. Milton.

The practice begins of crafty men upon the simple and good; these easily follow and are caught, while the others lay trains and pursue a game. Temple.

2. The tail of a bird. Contracting their body, and being forced to draw in their fore parts to establish the hinder in the elevation of the train, if the fore parts do part and incline to the ground, the hinder grow too weak, and suffer the train to fall. Brown.

The bird guideth her body with her train, and the ship is steered with the rudder. Hatewill.

3. The part of a gown that falls behind upon the ground. A thousand pounds a year, for pure respect! That promises more thousands: honour's train Is longer than his fore skirts. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Costly followers are not to be liked, lest while a man makes his train longer he makes his wings shorter. Bacon.

4. A series; a consecution. Distinct gradual growth in knowledge carries its own light with it, in every step of its progression, in an easy and orderly train. Locke.

If we reflect on what is observable in ourselves, we shall find our ideas always passing in train, one going and another coming, without intermission. Locke.

They laboured in vain so far to reach the apostle's meaning, all along in the train of what he said. Locke.

Some truths result from any ideas, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions; other truths require a train of ideas placed in order, a due comparing of them, and deductions made with attention. Locke.

What wouldst thou have me do? consider well The train of ills our love would draw behind it. Addison.

The author of your beings can by a glance of the eye, or a word speaking, enlighten your mind, and conduct you to a train of happy sentiments. Watts.

5. Process; method; state of procedure. If things were once in this train, if virtue were established as necessary to reputation, and vice not only loaded with infamy, but made the infallible ruin of all mens pretensions, our duty would take root in our nature. Swift.

6. A retinue;

6. A retinue; a number of followers or attendants.
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That in the most exact regard support
The worship of their names. Shakespeare.
Our fire walks forth, without more train
Accompany'd than with his own complete Perfections. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
Thou should'st be seen
A goddess among gods, ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton's Par. Lost.
Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
If better thou belong not to the dawn. Milton's Par. Lost.
He comes not with a train to move our fear. Dryden.
The king's daughter, with a lovely train
Of fellow nymphs, was sporting on the plain. Addison.
He would put a check to the fury of war, that a stop might be put to those fins which are of its train. Smolridge.
7. An orderly company; a procession.
Who the knights in green, and what the train
Of ladies dress'd with dainties on the plain? Dryden.
8. The line of powder reaching to the mine.
Since first they fail'd in their designs,
To take in heav'n by springing mines;
And with unanswerable barrels
Of gun-powder, dispute their quarrels;
Now take a course more practicable,
By laying trains to fire the rabble. Hudibras, p. iii.
Shall he that gives fire to the train pretend to wash his hands of the hurt that's done by the playing of the mine?
L'Estrange's Fables.
9. TRAIN of artillery. Cannons accompanying an army.
With an army abundantly supplied with a train of artillery, and all other provisions necessary, the king advanced towards Scotland. Clarendon, b. ii.
TRAINBANDS. n. f. [train and band: I suppose for trained bands.] The militia; the part of a community trained to martial exercises.
He directed the trainbands of Westminster and Middlesex, which consisted of the most substantial householders, to attend. Clarendon.
To some bold man, whose loyalty you trust,
And let him raise the trainbands of the city. Dryden.
A council of war was called, wherein we agreed to retreat: but before we could give the word, the trainbands, taking advantage of our delay, fled first. Addison's Freeholder.
TRAINOIL. n. f. [train and oil.] Oil drawn by coercion from the fat of the whale. Mat. vii. 6.
TRAINING. adj. [from train.] Belonging to train oil. A bad word.
Here steams ascend,
Where the huge hogheads sweat with training oil. Gay.
To TRAINSE. v. a. [A low word, I believe, without any etymology.] To walk in a careless or fluttish manner.
Two slipshod mules trainse along,
In lofty madnels, meditating song. Pope.
TRAIT. n. f. [trait, Fr.] A stroke; a touch. Scarce English.
By this single trait Homer marks an essential difference between the Iliad and Odyssey; that in the former the people perish by the folly of their kings; in this by their own folly. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.
TRAITOR. n. f. [traitre, Fr. traditor, Lat.] One who being trusted betrays.
The law laid that grievous punishment upon traitors, to forfeit all their lands to the prince, that men might be terrified from committing treasons. Spenser on Ireland.
If you flatter him, you are a great traitor to him. Bacon.
I'll put him thus far into the plot, that he should be secured as a traitor; but when I am out of reach, he shall be released. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
There is no difference, in point of morality, whether a man calls me traitor in one word, or says I am one hired to betray my religion and sell my country. Swift.
TRAITORLY. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious.
These traitorly rascals miseries are to be smil'd at, their offences being so capital. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
TRAITOROUS. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious;
faithless.
What news with him, that trait'rous wight? Daniel.
Pontinus knows not you,
While you stand out upon these trait'rous terms. B. Johnson.
The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, he would have severely punished, and the neutrals noted. Bacon.
More of his majesty's friends have lost their lives in this rebellion than of his traitorous subjects. Addison's Freeholder.
TRAITOROUSLY. adv. [from traitorous.] In a manner suiting traitors; perfidiously; treacherously.
Good duke Humphrey traitorously is murder'd
By Suffolk. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
Thou bitter sweet! whom I had laid
Next me, me traitorously half betray'd;
And unsuspected half invisibly
At once fled into him, and stay'd with me. Donne.

- They had traitorously endeavoured to subvert the fundamental laws, deprive the king of his regal power, and to place on his subjects a tyrannical power. Clarendon.
TRAITRESS. n. f. [from traitor.] A woman who betrays.
I, what I am, by what I was, o'ercome:
Traitors, restore my beauty and my charms,
Nor steal my conquest with my proper arms. Dryden.
Nor did my traitress wife these eye-lids close,
Nor decently in death my limbs compose. Pope's Odyssey.
By the dire fury of a trait'ess wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope's Odyssey.
TRALATITIOUS. adj. [from tralatius, Lat.] Metaphorical; not literal.
TRALATITIOUSLY. adv. [from tralatitius.] Metaphorically; not literally; not according to the first intention of the word.
Language properly is that of the tongue directed to the ear by speaking; the purpose of this discourse is to set down the particular tralatitios of this treaty. Clarendon, b. viii.
TRANSANIMATION. n. f. [trans and anima.] Conveyance of the soul from one body to another.
If the transmigration of Pythagoras were true, that the souls of men transmigrating into species answering their former natures, some men cannot escape that very brood whose fire Satan entered. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.
To TRANSCEND. v. a. [transcende, Latin.]
1. To pass; to overpass.
It is a dangerous opinion to such popes, as shall transcend their limits and become tyrannical. Bacon.
To judge herself, she must herself transcend,
As greater circles comprehend the less. Davies.
2. To surpass; to outgo; to exceed; to excel.
This glorious piece transcends what he could think;
So much his blood is nobler than his ink. Waller.
Deserve their greatness and unenvy'd stand,
Since what they act transcends what they command. Denb.
High though her wit, yet humble was her mind,
As if the cold not, or the word not find,
How much her worth transcended all her kind. Dryden.
3. To surmount; to rise above.
Make distinction whether these unusual lights be meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Hewel.
To TRANSCEND. v. n. To climb. Not in use.
To conclude, because things do not easily sink, they do not drown at all, the fallacy is a frequent addition in human expressions, which often give distinct accounts of proximity, and transcend from one unto another. Brown.
TRANSCENDENCE. n. f. [from transcend.]
TRANSCENDENCY. n. f. [from transcend.]
1. Excellence; unusual excellence; supereminence.
2. Exaggeration; elevation beyond truth.
It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God: this would have done better in poetry, where transcendence is more allowed. Bacon's Essay.
TRANSCENDENT. adj. [transcendens, Lat. transcendant, Fr.]
Excellent; supremely excellent; passing others.
Thou, whose strong hand, with so transcendent worth,
Holds high the rein of fair Parthenope. Crashaw.
There is, in a lawgiver, a habitual and ultimate intention of a more excellent and transcendent nature. Bishop Sanderson.
If thou best he—But O! how fal'n, how chang'd
From him who in the happy realms of light, Cloath'd with transcendent brightness, didst outline
Myriads, though bright.
Oh charming princess! Oh transcendent maid! A. Phillips.
The right our Creator has to our obedience is of so high and transcendent a nature, that it can suffer no competition; his commands must have the first and governing influence on all our actions.
TRANSCENDENTAL. adj. [transcendentalis, low Lat.]
1. General; pervading many particulars.
2. Supereminent; passing others.
Though the Deity perceiveth not pleasure nor pain, as we do; yet he must have a perfect and transcendental perception of these, and of all other things. Grew's Cymol. b. ii.
TRANSCENDENTLY. adv. [from transcendent.] Excellently; supereminently.
The law of Christianity is eminently and transcendently called the word of truth. South's Sermons.
To TRANSCOLATE. v. a. [trans and colo, Latin.] To strain

Still glorious before whom awake I stood. Milton.
TRANSELEMENTATION. n. f. [trans and element.] Change of one element into another.
Rain we allow; but if they suppose any other transelementation, it neither agrees with Moses's philosophy, nor Saint Peter's. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
TRANSEXION. n. f. [trans and sexus, Lat.] Change from one sex to another.
It much impeacheth the iterated transexion of hares, if that be true which some physicians affirm, that transmutation of sexes was only so in opinion, and that those transmutated persons were really men at first. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To TRANSFER. v. a. [transferre, Fr. transfere, Lat.]
1. To convey, or make over, from one to another.
He that transfers the laws of the Lacedemonians to the people of Athens, should find a great absurdity and inconvenience. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Was't not enough you took my crown away,
But cruelly you must my love betray?
I was well pleas'd to have transferr'd my right,
And better chang'd your claim of lawless might. Dryden.
The king
Who from himself all envy would remove,
Left both to be determin'd by the laws,
And to the Grecian chiefs transferr'd the cause. Dryden.
This was one perverse effect of their sitting at ease under their vines and fig-trees, that they forget from whence that ease came, and transferred all the honour of it upon themselves. Asterin's Sermons.
Your sacred aid religious monarchs own;
When first they merit, then ascend the throne:
But tyrants dread you, lest you just decree Transfer the power and set the people free. Prior.
By reading we learn not only the actions and the sentiments of distant nations, but transfer to ourselves the knowledge and improvements of the most learned men. Watts.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet
In kinky films and thape his oary feet. Addison.

TRANSFORMATION. n. f. [from transform.] Change of shape; act of changing the form; state of being changed with regard to form.

Something you have heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,
Since not th' exterior, nor the inward man, Remembers that it was. Shakspeare. Hamlet.

What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a met?

And what a beast art thou already, and feinst not thy loss in transformation! Shakspeare. Timon of Athens.

The menuration of all manner of curves, and their mutual transformation, are not worth the labour of those who design either of these of the three learned professions. Watts.

TRANSFRETATION. n. f. [trans and fretum, Latin.] Pallage over the sea.

Since the last transformation of king Richard the second, the crown of England never lent over numbers of men sufficient to defend the small territory. Davies on Ireland.

TO TRANSFUSE. v. a. [transfusus, Lat.] To pour out of one into another.

Between men and beasts there is no possibility of social communion; because the well-spring of that communion is a nature's delight which man hath to transfuse from himself into others, and to receive from others into himself, especially of things wherein the excellency of this kind doth most consist. Hooker's b. i.

Transfus'd on thee his ample spirit rests. Milton.

When did his muse from Fletcher scenes purloin,
As thou whole Ethridge doest transfuse to thine R. Drayden.

But lo transfus'd, as oil and waters flow, Shakspeare.

How often hast thou,
 Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
 When I have feasted. Shakspeare. Henry VI.

3. Food; pleasures of the table.

It could be no ordinary declension of nature that could bring some men, after an ingenious education, to place their summum bonum upon their trenchers, and their utmost felicity in wine. South's Sermons.

TRENCHERMAN, n. f. [trencher and man.] One that haunts tables; a parasite.

He found all people came to him promiscuously, and he tried which of them were friends, and which only trencher-fies and spongers. L'Estrange.

TRENCHERMAN, n. f. [trencher and man.] A feeder; an eater.

Palladius assured him, that he had already been more fed to his liking than he could be by the skillfullest trenchermen of Media. Sidney.

You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he's a very valiant trencherman; he hath an excellent stomach. Shakspeare. Much ado about nothing.

TRENCHMATE, n. f. [trencher and mate.] A table companion; a parasite.

Because that judicious learning of the ancient sages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trencher-mates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery, an art of contradiction by way of scorn. Hooker, b. v.

To TREND, v. n. To tend; to lie in any particular direction. It seems a corruption of tend.

The scouts to several parts divide their way,
 To learn the natives names, their towns explore
 The coasts and trendings of the crooked shore. Dryden.

TRENTALS, n. f. [trente, Fr.]

Trentals or trentals were a number of masses, to the tale of thirty, said on the same account, according to a certain order instituted by Saint Gregory. Ayliffe's Pervogon.

TRENDLE, n. f. [trenel, Saxon.] Any thing turned round.

Now improperly written trundle.

TREPAIR, n. f. [trepan, Fr.]

1. An instrument by which surgeons cut out round pieces of the skull.

2. A snare; a stratagem by which any one is ensnared. [Of this signification Stimmer assigns for the reason, that some English ships in queen Elizabeth's reign being invited, with great show of friendship, into Trepani, a part of Sicily, were there detained.]

But what a thoughtless animal is man,
 How very active in his own trepan. Reformers.

Can there be any thing of friendship in snares, hooks, and trepan. South's Sermons.

During the commotion of the blood and spirits, in which passion consists, whatsoever is offered to the imagination in favour of it, tends only to deceive the reason: it is indeed a real trepan upon it, feeding it with colours and appearances instead of arguments. South's Sermons.

To TREPAN, v. a. [from the noun; trepaner, Fr.]

1. To perforate with the trepan.

A putrid matter flowed forth her nostrils, of the same smell with that in trepanning the bone. Wifeman's Surgery.

Few recovered of those that were trepanned. Arbutnot.

2. To catch; to ensnare.

They *trepan*d the state, and fix'd it down
 With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras, p. iii.

Those are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority but bereaved of power, which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South's Sermons.

TRE

The citizens of Corioli have issued forth
 And given to Lartius and to Marcus battle:
 I saw our party to the trenches driven,
 And then I came away. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

William carries on the trench,
 Till both the town and castle yield. Prior.

TRESCANT, adj. [trenchant, Fr.] Cutting; sharp.

He fiercely took his trenchant blade in hand,
 With which he struck so furious and so fell,
 That nothing seem'd the puillance could withstand. F. 2.

Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
 Were sharp and trenchant, not their words. Hudibras.

TRENCHER, n. f. [from trench, Fr.]

1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.

No more
 I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish. Shakspeare. Tempest.

My estate deserves an heir more rais'd,
 Than one which holds a trencher. Shak. Timon of Athens.

When we find our dogs, we set the dish or trencher on the ground.
 Their homely fare dispatch'd; the hungry band
 Invade their trenchers next, and soon devour. Dryden.

Many a child may have the idea of a square trencher, or round plate, before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

2. The table.

How often hast thou,
 Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
 When I have feasted. Shakspeare. Henry VI.

3. Food; pleasures of the table.

TRE

TREPPIRE, n. f. A small trepan; a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.

I threw a trepan and trephine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull. Wifeman's Surgery.

TREPIDATION, n. f. [trepidatio, Lat.]

1. The state of trembling.

The bow tortureth the string continually, and holdeth it in a continual trepidation. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 137.

All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirits to retire; upon which the parts, in some degree, are destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 793.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and fears,
 Men reckon what it did and meant;
 But trepidation of the spheres,
 Though greater far, is innocent. Donne.

TRI

TRIABLE, adj. [from try.]

1. Possible to be experimented; capable of trial.
For the more easy understanding of the experiments triable by our engine, I intimated that notion, by which all of them will prove explicable. Boyle.

2. Such as may be judicially examined.
No one should be admitted to a bishop's chancellorship without good knowledge in the civil and canon laws, since divers causes triable in the spiritual court are of weight. Ayliffe.
TRIAL, n. f. [trias, Lat. triade, Fr.] Three united.
TRIAL, n. f. [from try.]

1. Test; examination.
With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakespeare.

2. Experience; act of examining by experience.
I leave him to your gracious acceptance,
Whole trial shall better publish his commendation. Shak.
Skillful gardeners make trial of the seeds by putting them into water gently boiled; and if good, they will sprout within half an hour. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 520.

3. Experiment; experimental knowledge.
Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Heb.

4. Judicial examination.
Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the laws of our realm: the trial is the issue, which is tried upon the indictment, not the indictment itself.

He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall from him further trial
Than the severity of publick power. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

5. Temptation; test of virtue.
Left our trial, when least sought,
May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,
The willinger I go. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

No such company as then thou faw'st Intended thee; for trial only brought,
To see how thou could'st judge of fit and meet. Milton.

Every station is exposed to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears. Rogers.

6. State of being tried.
Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love?
—It is to be all made of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service,
All humbleness, all patience and impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare, As you like it.

TRIANGLE, n. f. [triangle, Fr. triangulum, Lat.] A figure of three angles.

The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones. Locke.

TRIANGULAR, adj. [triangularis, Lat.] Having three angles.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular; O work divine!
These two the first and last proportions are. Fairy Queen.

Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey,
And most convenient for the bee; yet did the not chuse that, because then there must have been triangular spaces left void.

RAY on the Creation.

TRIBE, n. f. [tribu, Fr. tribus, Lat. from treu, b and v being labials of promiscuous use in the ancient British words; treu from trif, his lands, is supposed to be Celtic, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government; to prove which Mr. Rawland offers many reasons, which he mentions by imagining that centuria is derived from treu, supposing it to be the same with our centres, importing a hundred treu or tribes.]

1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other characteristic.

I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes
And centuries for their voices, to help Catiline
In his election. Benj. Johnson's Cataline.

If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the mislead multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from th' ambrosial fount. Milton.

Straggling mountaineers, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build. Tate.

I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners. Addison.

2. It is often used in contempt.
Folly and vice are only to describe,
The common subjects of our scribbling tribe. Resolomon.

TRIBLET or TRIBULET, n. f. A goldsmith's tool for making rings.

TRIBUTION, n. f. [tribulation, Fr.] Perfection; distress; vexation; disturbance of life.

Tribulation being present causeth sorrow, and being imminent breedeth fear. Hooker, b. v.

TRI

The just shall dwell,
And after solve them in a trick,
So when the war had rais'd a storm,
I've seen a snake in human form,
All stain'd with infamy and vices. Swift.

Leap from the dunghill in a trick.
It seems incredible at first, that all the blood in our bodies should circulate in a trick, in a very few minutes; but it would be more surprising if we knew the short periods of the great circulation of water. Bentley's Sermons.

TRICK, n. f. [tribunal, Latin and French.]

1. The seat of a judge.
P' th' market-place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publickly enthron'd. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

2. A court of justice.
Where the whole nation does for justice come,
Under whose large roof flourishes the gown,
And judges grave on high tribunals frown. Walker.

Here the tribunal stood. Dryden's En.

There is a necessity of standing at his tribunal, who is infinitely wise and just. Greco's Com. b. iii.

3. Summoning arch-angels to proclaim Thy dread tribunal. Milton.

TRIBUNE, n. f. [tribun, tribunus, Lat.]

1. An officer of Rome chosen by the people.
These are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' th' common mouth: I do despise them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. The commander of a Roman legion.
TRIBUTIAL, adj. [tribunitius, Lat.] Suiing a tribune;
TRIBUTIOUS, relating to a tribune.

Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitious manner; for that is to clamour counsels, not to inform. Bacon.

Oh happy ages of our ancestors,
Beneath the kings and tribunitious powers
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shakespeare.

I entertain you with somewhat more worthy than the stale exploded trick of fulsom panegyrics. Dryden.

3. Some friends to vice pretend,
That trick of youth too roughly blame. Dryden.

4. A juggle; an antic; any thing done to cheat jocosely, or to divert.

A rev'rend prelate stopp'd his coach and fix,
To laugh a little at our Andrew's tricks. Prior.

5. An unexpected effect.
So fellish foes who broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

6. A practice; a manner; a habit.
I spoke it but according to the trick: if you'll hang me you may. Shakespeare.

The trick of that voice I well remember. Shakespeare.

Behold,
Although the print be little, the whole matter
And copy of the father; eye, nose, lip,
The trick of 's frown, his forehead. Shak. Winter's Tale.

7. A number of cards laid regularly up in play: as, a trick of cards.

TRICK, v. a. [from the noun; tricker, Fr.]

1. To cheat; to impose on; to defraud.
It is impossible that the whole world should thus conspire to cheat themselves, to put a delusion on mankind, and trick themselves into belief. Stephens's Sermons.

2. To dress; to decorate; to adorn; properly to knot [trica, in low Latin, signifies a knot of hair; treccia, Italian: hence traces. Matt. Westminsteriana says of Godiva of Coventry, that she rode trica capitis & crines difsolvens.]
And trick them up in knotted curls anew. Drayton.

They turned the imposture upon the king, and gave out, that to defeat the true inheritor he had tricked up a boy in the likeness of Edward Plantagenet. Bacon's Henry VII.

Horridly trick
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires. Shakespeare.

This pillar is but a medley, or a mass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by stealth; and though the most richly tricked, yet the poorest in this, that he is a borrower of all his beauty. Watson's Architect.

Their heads are trick with tassels and flowers. Sandys.

For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead;
Sunk, though he be, beneath the wat'ry floor;
So sinks the Day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks his beams, and with new fangled ore,
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky. Milton.

A daw that had a mind to be sparkling, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster. L'Estrange's Fab.

Their heads are trick with tassels and flowers. Sandys.

For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead;
Sunk, though he be, beneath the wat'ry floor;
So sinks the Day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks his beams, and with new fangled ore,
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky. Milton.

A daw that had a mind to be sparkling, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster. L'Estrange's Fab.

TRICK, v. n. [from the noun; tricker, Fr.]

1. To cheat; to impose on; to defraud.

It is impossible that the whole world should thus conspire to cheat themselves, to put a delusion on mankind, and trick themselves into belief. Stephens's Sermons.

2. To dress; to decorate; to adorn; properly to knot [trica, in low Latin, signifies a knot of hair; treccia, Italian: hence traces. Matt. Westminsteriana says of Godiva of Coventry, that she rode trica capitis & crines difsolvens.]
And trick them up in knotted curls anew. Drayton.

They turned the imposture upon the king, and gave out, that to defeat the true inheritor he had tricked up a boy in the likeness of Edward Plantagenet. Bacon's Henry VII.

Horridly trick
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires. Shakespeare.

This pillar is but a medley, or a mass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by stealth; and though the most richly tricked, yet the poorest in this, that he is a borrower of all his beauty. Watson's Architect.

Their heads are trick with tassels and flowers. Sandys.

For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead;
Sunk, though he be, beneath the wat'ry floor;
So sinks the Day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks his beams, and with new fangled ore,
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky. Milton.

A daw that had a mind to be sparkling, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster. L'Estrange's Fab.

TRICK, v. n. [from the noun; tricker, Fr.]

Richard the third, though he came in by blood, yet the short time of his triennial reign he was without any, and proved one of my best lawgivers. Hawel's England's Years.

2. Happening every third year.

TRIER. n. f. [from try.] One who tries experimentally.

1. One who tries experimentally. The ingenious triers of the German experiment found, that their glass vessel was lighter when the air had been drawn out than before by an ounce and very near a third. Boyle.

2. One who examines judicially. Courts of justice are bound to take notice of acts of parliament, and whether they are truly pleaded or not; and therefore they are the triers of them. Hale.

There should be certain triers or examiners appointed by the state to inspect the genius of every particular boy. Speil.

3. Tell; one who brings to the test. You were used

To say, extremity was the trier of spirits;

That common chances common men could bear. Shakep.

To TRI'FALLOW. v. a. [from trif, Latin, and falga, Saxon, a harrow.] To plow land the third time before sowing. Bailey.

The beginning of August is the time of trifallowing, or last plowing, before they sow their wheat. Mortimer.

TRI'PID. adj. [among botanists.] Cut or divided into three parts. Bailey.

TRI'FIDULARY. adj. [from trif and fidula, Latin.] Having three pipes.

Many of that species whose trifidular bill or crany we have beheld. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To TRI'FLE. v. n. [from trifelen, Dutch.] To talk with folly.

1. To act or talk without weight or dignity; to act with levity; to talk with folly.

When they saw that we ought to abrogate such popish ceremonies as are unprofitable, or else might have other more profitable in their stead, they trifle and they beat the air about nothing which toucheth us, unless they mean that we ought to abrogate all popish ceremonies. Hooker.

2. To mock; to play the fool.

Do not believe, That, from the sense of all civility,

I thus would play and trifle with your reverence. Shakep.

3. To indulge light amusement.

4. To be of no importance.

'Tis hard for every trifling debt of two shillings to be driven to law.

To TRI'FLE. v. a. To make of no importance. Not in use.

Threefold and ten I can remember well,

Within the volume of which time I've seen

Hours dreadful and things strange; but this fore night

Hath trifled former knowings. Shakep. Macbeth.

TRI'FLE. n. f. [from the noun.] A thing of no moment.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;

Win us with honest trifles, to betray us

In deepest consequence. Shakep. Macbeth.

Old Chaucer doth of Topas tell,

Mad Rabelais of Pantagruel,

A later third of Dowdabell,

With such poor trifles playing:

Others the like have labour'd at,

Some of this thing, and some of that,

And many of them know not what.

But that they must be saying. Drayton's Nymphid.

The infinitely greatest confessed good is neglected, to satisfy the fœcitive uneasiness of our desires pursuing trifles.

TRI'FLER. n. f. [from trifler, Dutch.] One who acts with levity; one that talks with folly.

A man cannot tell whether Apelles or Albert Durer were the more triflers, whereof the one would make a personage by geometrical proportions, the other by taking the best parts out of divers faces to make one excellent. Bacon.

Shall I, who can enchant the boist'rous deep,

Bid Boreas halt, make hills and forests move,

Shall I be baffled by this trifler, love. Granville.

As much as systematical learning is decried by some vain triflers of the age, it is the happiest way to furnish the mind with knowledge.

TRI'FLING. adj. [from trifle.] Wanting worth; unimportant; wanting weight.

To a soul supported with an assurance of the divine favour, the honours or afflictions of this life will be equally trifling and contemptible. Rogers's Sermons.

TRI'FLINGLY. adv. [from trifling.] Without weight; without dignity; without importance.

Those who are carried away with the spontaneous current of their own thoughts, must never humour their minds in being thus triflingly busy. Locke.

TRI'FORM. adj. [from triformis, Lat.] Having a triple shape.

The moon her monthly round

Still ending, still renewing through mid heav'n,

TRI

With borrow'd light her countenance triform.

Hence fills, and empties, to enlighten th' earth. Milton.

TRI'GGER. n. f. [derived by Junius from trigue, Fr. from tricare, Lat.]

1. A catch to hold the wheel on sleep ground.

2. The catch that being pulled looses the cock of the gun.

The pulling the trigger of the gun with which the murder is committed, has no natural connection with those ideas that make up the complex one, murder.

TRING'NTALS. n. f. [from triginta, Latin, thirty.]

Trentals or tringintals were a number of masses to the tale of thirty, instituted by Saint Gregory.

TRI'GLYPH. n. f. [In architecture.] A member of the frieze of the Dorick order set directly over every pillar, and in certain spaces in the intercolumnations.

The Dorick order has now and then a sober garlandment of lion's heads in the cornice, and of triglyphs and metopes always in the frieze.

TRI'GON. n. f. [from trigonus, Fr.] A triangle. A term in astrology.

The ordinary height of a man ninety-six digits, the ancient Egyptians estimated to be equal to that mystical orbit among them filled paffus Ibis, or the trigen that the his makes at every step, consisting of three latera, each thirty-two digits.

TRI'GONAL. adj. [from trigen.] Triangular; having three corners.

A spar of a yellow hue shot into numerous trigonal pointed shoots of various sizes, found growing to one side of a perpendicular fissure of a stratum of free-stone in digging.

TRIGONOMETRY. n. f. [from trigonometria, Fr.]

Trigonometry is the art of measuring triangles, or of calculating the sides of any triangle sought, and this is plain or spherical.

On a discovery of Pythagoras all trigonometry, and consequently all navigation, is founded.

TRIGONOMETRICAL. adj. [from trigonometry.] Pertaining to trigonometry.

TRI'LAT'ERAL. adj. [from trilateral, French; tres and latus, Lat.] Having three sides.

TRI'LL. n. f. [from trillo, Italian.] Quaver; tremulousness of music.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,

That rant by note, and through the gamut rage,

In songs and airs express their martial fire

Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.

To TRI'LL. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter quavering.

The phoenix daughter of the vanquish'd old,

Like a rich bride does to the ocean swim,

And on her shadow rides in floating gold. Dryden.

TRI'LLY. adv. [from trill.] Nicely; neatly.

Her yellow golden hair

Was trilly wavy, and in tresses wrought. Fairy Queen.

The mother, if of the household of our lady, will have her son cunning and bold, in making him to live trilly. Alpham.

TRI'LLY. n. f. [from trill.] One who changes sides to balance parties; a turncoat.

The same bat taken after by a weazel begged for mercy: no, says the weazel, no mercy to a mouse: well, says t'other, but you may see by my wings that I am a bird; and so the bat 'scaped in both by playing the trimmer. L'Estrange's Fab.

To confound his hated coin,

All parties and religions join,

Whigs, Tories, trimmers. Swift.

2. A piece of wood inferted.

Before they pin up the frame of ground-plates, they must fit in the lummer and the girders, and all the joints and the trimmers for the stair-case. Moxon's Mech. Exercise.

TRI'LLING. n. f. [from trill.] Ornamental appendages to a coat or gown.

Judgment without vivacity of imagination is too heavy, and like a dress without fancy; and the last without the first is too gay, and but all trimming.

TRI'NAL. adj. [from trinus, Lat.] Threefold.

Like many an angel's voice,

Singing before th' eternal majesty,

In their trinal triplicity on high. Fa. Q. b. i.

That far-beaming blaze of majesty,

Wherewith he went at heav'n's high council table

To fit the midst of trinal unity,

He laid aside. Milton.

TRI'NE. n. f. [from trine, Fr. trinus, Latin.] An aspect of planets placed in three angles of a trigon, in which they are supposed by astrologers to be eminently benign.

To fit other five,

Their planetary motions, and aspects,

In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,

Of noxious efficacy. Milton's Par. Lg. b. x.

Two arts attend architecture, like her principal gentlemen, to dress and trim her, picture and sculpture.

I found her trimming up the diadem

On her dead mistress. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Go, firrah, to my cell, as you look

To have my pardon, trim it handiome. Shakespeare.

Yet are the men more loofe than they!

More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rubb'd, and trimm'd

More sleek, more soft, and flacker limb'd. Bon. Johnson.

To blast the living, gave the dead their due,

And wreaths, herself had tainted, trimm'd anew. Tickell.

When workmen fit a piece into their work, they say they trim in a piece.

Each mule in Leo's golden days

Starts from her trance, and trim her wither'd bays. Pope.

5. To balance a vessel.

Sir Roger put his coachman to trim the boat. Speilator.

6. It has often up emphatical.

He gave you all the duties of a man,

Trim'd up your praises with a princely tongue,

Spoke your deserving like a chronicle. Shakespeare.

To TRI'N. v. n. To balance; to fluctuate between two parties.

If such by trimming and time-serving, which are but two words for the same thing, betray the church by nauseating her pious orders, this will produce confusion. South's Serm.

For men to pretend that their will obeys that law, while all besides their will serves the faction; what is this but a gross, sordid juggling with their duty, and a kind of trimming it between God and the devil.

He who heard what every fool could say,

Would never fix his thought, but trim his time away. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

TRIM. n. f. Dress; gear; ornaments.

They come like sacrifices in their trim,

And to the five-ey'd maid of smoky war,

All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them. Shakespeare.

Forget

Your labourfome and dainty trims, wherein

You made great Juno angry. Shakep. Cymbeline.

The goodly London in her gallant trim,

The phoenix daughter of the vanquish'd old,

Like a rich bride does to the ocean swim,

And on her shadow rides in floating gold. Dryden.

TRI'NLY. adv. [from trim.] Nicely; neatly.

Her yellow golden hair

Was trimly wavy, and in tresses wrought. Fairy Queen.

The mother, if of the household of our lady, will have her son cunning and bold, in making him to live trimly. Alpham.

TRI'NLY. n. f. [from trim.] One who changes sides to balance parties; a turncoat.

The same bat taken after by a weazel begged for mercy: no, says the weazel, no mercy to a mouse: well, says t'other, but you may see by my wings that I am a bird; and so the bat 'scaped in both by playing the trimmer. L'Estrange's Fab.

Now frequent trines the happier lights amongs

And high-rai'd Jove from his dark prison freed,

Those weights took off that on his planet hung,

Will gloriously the new-laid works succeed. Dryden.

From Aries right-ways draw a line, to end

In the fame round, and let that line subtend

An equal triangle; now fence the lines

Must three times touch the round, and meet three signs,

Where'er they meet in angles those are trines. Crash.

To TRI'NE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a trine aspect.

This advantage age from youth has won,

As not to be outriden, though outrun,

By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd.

And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd. Dryden.

TRI'NITY. n. f. [from trinitas, Lat. trinitis, Fr.] The incomprehensible union of the three persons in the Godhead.

Touching the picture of the trinity, I hold it blasphemous and utterly unlawful. Peacbam.

In my whole essay there is not any thing like an objection against the trinity. Locke.

TRI'NKET. n. f. [This Skinner derives somewhat harshly from trinet, Fr. trichette, Ital. a topail. I rather imagine it corrupted from tricket, some petty finery or decoration.]

1. Toys; ornaments of dress; superfluities of decoration.

Beauty and use can so well agree together, that of all the trinkets wherewith they are attired, there is not one but serves to some necessary purpose. Sidney, b. ii.

We'll see your trinkets here forthcoming all. Shakep.

They throng who should buy first, as if my trinkets had been hallow'd. Shakep. Winter's Tale.

Let her but have three wrinkles in her face,

Soon will you hear the fawcy steward say,

Pack up with all your trinkets and away. Dryden's Juv.

She was not hung about with toys and trinkets

He throws his arm, and with a long-drawn daff
Blends all together; then distinctly trips
From this to that; then quick returning skips
And fatches this again, and pauses there.
On old Lycæus or Cyllene hoar,
Trip no more in twilight ranks,
Though Erymanth your loss deplore,
A better foil shall give you thanks.
She bounded by, and tripp'd to light,
They had not time to take a steady fight.
To the garden walk the took her way,
To sport and trip along in cool of day.
Stay, nymph, he cry'd, I follow not a foe;
Thus from the lion trips the trembling doe.
Well thou dost to hide from common fight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light:
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame
Tripping from sea on such an errand came.
He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot.
The lower plaits of the drapery in antique figures in sculpture and painting, seem to have gathered the wind when the person is in a posture of tripping forward.
In Britain's isles, as Heylin notes,
The ladies trip in petticoats.
They gave me instructions how to slide down and trip up the steepest slopes.
5. To take a short voyage.
TRIP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A stroke or catch by which the wrestler supplants his antagonist.
O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?
He tript for wrestling, since his limbs with oil,
And watches with a trip his foe to foil.
It was a noble time when trips and Cornith hugs could make a man immortal.
2. A stumble by which the foothold is lost.
3. A failure; a mistake.
He saw his way, but in so swift a pace,
To chafe the ground might be to lose the race:
They then, who of each trip th' advantage take,
Find but those faults which they want wit to make.
4. A short voyage or journey.
I took a trip to London on the death of the queen.
TRIPARTITE. adj. [tripartite, Fr. tripartitus, Latin.] Divided into three parts; having three correspondent copies.
Our indentures tripartite are drawn.
TRIPLE. n. f. [trippe, Fr. trippa, Italian and Spanish.]
1. The intestines; the guts.
How say you to a fat tripe finely broil'd?
—I like it well.
In private draw your poultry, clean your tripe.
2. It is used in ludicrous language for the human belly.
TRIPEDAL. adj. [tres and pes, Lat.] Having three feet.
TRIPETALOUS. adj. [tres and petalon, Lat.] Having a flower consisting of three leaves.
TRIPHONG. n. f. [triphongue, Fr. tres and phonie, Lat.] A coalition of three vowels to form one found; as, eau; eye.
TRIPLE. adj. [triple, Fr. triplex, tripulus, Lat.]
1. Threefold; consisting of three conjoined.
See in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a trumpet's stool.
O night and shades,
How are ye join'd with hell in triple knot,
Against th' unarmed weakness of one virgin,
Alone and helpless!
Thrice happy pair! so near ally'd
In royal blood and virtue too:
Now love has you together ty'd,
May none this triple knot undo.
By thy triple shape as thou art seen
In heav'n, earth, hell, grant this.
Strong Alcides, after he had slain
The triple Geryon, drove from conquer'd Spain
His captive herds.
Out bound'd the maddest of the triple head;
Away the hare with double swiftness fled.
2. Treble; three times repeated.
We have taken this as a moderate measure betwixt the highest and lowest; but if we had taken only a triple proportion, it would have been sufficient.
If then the atheist can have no imagination of more senses than five, why doth he suppose that a body is capable of more! If we had double or triple as many, there might still be the same suspicion for a greater number without end.
To TRIPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To treble; to make thrice as much, or as many.

TRI

To what purpose should words serve, when nature hath more to declare than groans and strong cries; more than streams of bloody sweat; more than his doubled and tripled prayers can express.
If these halpence should gain admittance, in no long space of time his limited quantity would be tripled upon us.
2. To make threefold.
Time, action, place, are to prefer'd by thee,
That e'en Corneille might with envy see
Th' alliance of his tripled unity.
TRIPLET. n. f. [from triple.]
1. Three of a kind.
There fit C—nts, D—ks, and Harrison,
How they twagger from their garriton;
Such a triplet could you tell
Where to find on this side hell.
2. Three verses rhyming together, as
The varying verse, the full rebounding line,
The long majestic march and enerv'd divine.
Some wretched lines from this neglected hand
May find my Hero on the foreign strand,
Warm with new fires, and pleas'd with new command.
I frequently make use of triplet rhymes, because they bound the sense, making the last verse of the triplet a primarick.
TRIPPLICATE. adj. [from triplex, Lat.] Made thrice as much.
Triplicate ratio, in geometry, is the ratio of cubes to each other; which ought to be distinguish'd from triple.
All the parts, in height, length, and breadth, bear a duplicate or triplicate proportion one to another.
TRIPPLICATION. n. f. [from triplicate.] The act of trebling or adding three together.
Since the margin of the visible horizon in the heavenly globe is parallel with that in the earthly, accounted but one hundred and twenty miles diameter; sense must needs measure the azimuths, or vertical circles, by triplication of the same diameter of one hundred and twenty.
TRIPLET. n. f. [triplette, Fr. from triplex, Lat.] Trebleness; state of being threefold.
Like many an angel's voice,
Singing before th' eternal majesty,
In their trinal triplicity on high.
It was a dangerous triplicity to a monarchy, to have the arms of a foreigner, the discontents of subjects, and the title of a pretender to meet.
Affect not duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things.
TRIPMADAM. n. f. An herb.
Tripmadam is used in salads.
TRIPPOD. n. f. [tripus, Latin.] A seat with three feet, such as that from which the priests of Apollo delivered oracles.
Two tripods cast in antick mould,
With two great talents of the finest gold.
TRIPOLY. n. f. [I suppose from the place whence it is brought.]
A sharp cutting fland.
In polishing glass with sand, putty, or tripoly, it is not to be imagined that those substances can by grating and fretting the glass bring all its least particles to an accurate polish.
TRIPPOS. n. f. A tripod. See TRIPPOD.
Welcome all that lead or follow,
To the oracle of Apollo;
Here he speaks out of his pottle,
Or the tripes, his tower bottle.
Craz'd fool, who would't be thought an oracle,
Come down from off the tripes, and speak plain.
TRIPPER. n. f. [from trip.] One who trips.
TRIPPING. adj. [from trip.] Quick; nimble.
The clear fun of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake, to tripping ebb; that stole
With soft foot tow'rs the deep.
TRIPPING. n. f. [from trip.] Light dance.
Back, shepherds, back, enough your play,
Hoe be without duck or nod,
Other tripping to be trod,
Of lighter toes.
TRIPTORE. n. f. [tripetron, Lat.]
Triptore is a noun used but in three cases.
TRIPUDIAL. adj. [tripudium, Lat.] Performed by dancing.
Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success when he continued the tripudial augurations.
TRIPUDIATION. n. f. [tripudium, Lat.] Act of dancing.
TRIPPINGLY. adv. [from tripping.] With agility; with swift motion.
I his ditty after me
Sing, and dance it trippingly.
Speak the speech trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it as many of our players do, I had as have the town-crier had spoke my lines.
TRIEMME.

TRI

TRIEMME. n. f. [triemis, Lat.] A galley with three benches of oars on a side.
TRISECTION. n. f. [tres and sectio, Lat.] Division into three equal parts: the trisection of an angle is one of the deside-rata of geometry.
TRISTFUL. adj. [tristis, Lat.] Sad; melancholy; gloomy;
sorrowful.
A bad word.
Heav'n's face doth glow
With tristful visage, and, as gainst the doom,
I thought sick at the act.
TRISTICE. n. f. [tristitia, Lat.] A thing of three points.
Consider the threefold effect of Jupiter's triplu, to burn, discuss, and terebrate.
TRIUNFAL. adj. [trifflab, Fr. from trifflable.] Consisting of three syllables.
TRISYLLABLE. n. f. [trifflab, Latin.] A word consisting of three syllables.
TRITE. adj. [tritus, Latin.] Worn out; stale; common;
not new.
These duties cannot but appear of infinite concern when we reflect how uncertain our time is: this may be thought to trite and obvious a reflection, that none can want to be reminded of it.
She gives her tongue no moment's rest,
In phrases batter'd, stale, and trite,
Which modern ladies call politeness.
TRITENESS. n. f. [from trite.] Staleness; commonness.
TRITHEISM. n. f. [tritheme, Fr. tris and thes, Lat.] The opinion which holds three distinct gods.
TRITURABLE. adj. [triturable, Fr. from triturare.] Possible to be pounded or comminuted.
It is not only triturable and reducible to powder by contri-tion, but will not subsist in a violent fire.
TRITURATION. n. f. [trituration, Fr. triturare, Lat.] Reduction of any substance to powder upon a stone with a muller, as colours are ground: it is also called levigation.
He affirmeth, that a pumice stone powdered is lighter than one entire; that abatement can hardly be avoided in trituration.
TRIVET. n. f. [See TREVET.] Any thing supported by three feet.
The best at horse-race he ordain'd a lady for his prize, Generally praiseful; fair and young, and skill'd in house-wiferies.
Of all kind fitting, and withal a trivet, that enclos'd
Twenty-two measures.
The trivet table of a foot was lame,
A blot which prudent Baucis overcame,
Who thrusts beneath the limping leg a herd.
TRIVIAL. n. f. [trivialis, Fr. trivialis, Lat.]
1. Vile; worthless; vulgar; such as may be picked up in the highway.
Be subjects great, and worth a poet's voice,
For men of sense despite a trivial choice.
2. Light; trifling; unimportant; inconsiderable. This use is more frequent, though less just.
This argues confidence in your grace,
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial.
All circumstances well considered.
See you mad fools, who, for some trivial right,
For love, or for mistaken honour, fight.
Were they only for mistaken honour, fight.
To which the example of the world expos'd us, it might perhaps not much concern our religion.
In every work regard the writer's end;
And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due.
The ancient poets are like many modern ladies: let an action be never so trivial in itself, they always make it appear of the utmost importance.
TRIVIALITY. adv. [from trivial.]
1. Commonly; vulgarly.
Money is not the sinews of war, as is trivially said, where the sinews of mens arms, in effeminate people, fail.
2. Lightly; inconsiderably.
TRIVIALNESS. n. f. [from trivial.]
1. Commonness; vulgarity.
2. Lightness; unimportance.
TRUMP. n. f. [trumpus, Lat. triumphus, Fr.]
1. Pomp with which a victory is publicly celebrated.
Hence will I drag the headlong by the heels
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave;
And there cut off thy most ungracious head,
Which I will bear in triumph to the king.
In ancient times the triumphs of the generals from victory, and the great donatives upon disbarring the armies, were things able to enflame all mens courage.
2. State of being victorious.
Sublime with expectation when to see
In triumph illing forth their glorious chief.
Hercules, from Spain,
Arriv'd in triumph, from Geryon slain.

3. Victory; conquest.
Eros has
Packt cards with Caesar, and false play'd my glory
Unto an enemy's triumph.
Each order bright
Sung triumph, and him sung victorious king.
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden-gate.
If fools admire, or whining coxcombs toasts,
The vain coquets the trifling triumphs boast.
4. Joy for success.
Great triumph and rejoicing was in heav'n.
5. A conquering card now called trump. See TRUMP.
To TRIUMPH. v. n. [triumpho, Lat. triumpho, Fr.] This word is always accented in prose on the first syllable, but in poetry sometimes on the last.
1. To celebrate a victory with pomp; to rejoice for victory.
The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment.
Your victory, alas, begets my fears;
Can you not then triumph without my tears.
2. To obtain victory.
This great commander fought many times to persuade So-lyman to forbear to use his forces any farther against the Christians, over whom he had sufficiently triumphed, and turn them upon the Persians.
Then all this earthly grossness quit,
Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death, and chance, and time.
There fix thy faith and triumph o'er the world;
For who can help, or who can save besides?
While blooming youth and gay delight
Sit on thy rosy cheeks confess,
Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
To triumph o'er this destiny's breast.
3. To insult upon an advantage gained.
How ill befeeming is it in thy sex
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull,
Sorrow on all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery.
Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and in th' excels of joy
Sole reigning, holds the tyranny of heav'n.
TRIUMPHAL. adj. [triumphal, Fr. triumphalis, Lat. from triumph.] Used in celebrating victory.
He left only triumphal garments to the general.
Ye to near heav'n's door,
Triumphal with triumphal act have met.
Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And new triumphal arches to the ground.
Left we should for honour take
The drunken quarrel of a rake;
Or think it feated in a fear,
Or a proud triumphal car.
TRIUMPHAL. n. f. [triumphalia, Lat. triumphal ornaments.]
A token of victory. Not in use.
He to his crew that fat consulting brought Joyless triumphals of his hop'd success.
TRIUMPHANT. adj. [triumphans, Lat. triumphans, Fr.]
1. Celebrating a victory.
Captives bound to a triumphant car.
It was drawn as a triumphant chariot, which at the same time both follows and triumphs.
2. Rejoicing as for victory.
Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am!
Off with the traitor's head;
And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned.
Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth
Triumphant out of this infernal pit.
3. Victorious; graced with conquest.
He speedily through all the hierarchies
Intends to pass triumphant, and give laws.
Athena, war's triumphant maid,
The happy son will, as the father, aid.
TRIUMPHANTLY. adv. [from triumphant.]
1. In a triumphant manner in token of victory; joyfully as for victory.
Victory with little loss doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;
Who are at hand triumphantly display'd.
Through armed ranks triumphantly she drives,
And with one glance commands ten thousand lives.
2. Victoriously; with success.
Thou must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our street; or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm.
3. With insolent exultation.
A mighty governing lye goes round the world, and has almost banished truth out of it; and to reigning triumphantly

TROU

TROLOP. n. f. [A low word, I know not whence derived.] A flatteringly, loose woman.

TROLMYDAMES. n. f. [Of this word I know not the meaning.] A fellow I have known to go about with troldmies.

TROOP. n. f. [from troupe, Fr. troupe, Italian; troupe, Dutch; troupe, Swedish; troupe, low Latin.]

1. A company; a number of people collected together.

That which should accompany old age, As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends, I must not look to have. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Saw you not a blessed troop Invite me to a banquet, whose bright faces Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun. Shaksp. Macbeth.

As the mind, by putting together the repeated ideas of unity, makes the collective mode of any number, as a score, or a gross; so by putting together several particular substances, it makes collective ideas of substances, as a troop, an army. Locke.

2. A body of soldiers.

Aeneas seeks his absent foe, And sends his slaughter'd troops to shades below. Dryden.

3. A small body of cavalry.

TO TROOP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To march in a body.

I do not, as an enemy to peace, Troop in the throngs of military men, But rather shew a while like fearful war. Shaksp. Macbeth.

They anon With hundreds, and with thousands, trooping came, Attended. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.

Armies at the call of trumpet Troop to their standard. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.

2. To march in haste.

Yonder shines Aurora's harbinger, At whole approach ghosts, wand'ring here and there, Troop home to churchyards. Shaksp. Macbeth.

The dry streets flow'd with men, That troop'd up to the king's capacious court. Chapman.

3. To march in company.

I do invest you jointly with my power, Preheminence, and all the large effects That troop with majesty. Shaksp. King Lear.

TROOPER. n. f. [from troop.] A horse soldier. A trooper fights only on horseback; a dragoon marches on horseback, but fights either as a horseman or footman.

Custom makes us think well of any thing: what can be more indecent now than for any to wear boots but troopers and travellers? yet not many years since it was all the fashion. Grew.

TROPE. n. f. [from τροπή, Gr. trope, Fr. trope, Lat.] A change of a word from its original signification; as, the clouds trope rain for forebode.

For rhetoric he could not trope His mouth, but out there flew a trope. Hudibras.

If this licence be included in a single word, it admits of trope; if in a sentence, of figures. Dryden.

TROPHY. n. f. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.

Some greedy minion, or imperious wife, The trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade. Pope.

TROPHY. n. f. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.

TROPHY. n. f. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.

TROU

The foundation of all parables is, some analogy or similitude between the tropical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing intended by it. South's Sermons.

2. [From tropick.] Placed near the tropick; belonging to the tropick.

TRO

4. Slightly harrasing.
They eas'd the putting off
These troublesome disguises which we wear. Milton.
Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow. Shaksp. Henry IV.
5. Unreasonably engaging; improperly importuning.
She of late is lightened of her womb,
That her to see should be but troublesome. Fa. Qu. b. i.
6. Importunate; teasing.
Two or three troublesome old nurses, never let me have a quiet night's rest with knocking me up. Arbuthnot.
TROUBLESOMELY. adv. [from troublesome.] Vexatiously;
wearisomely; unreasonably; importunately.
Though men will not be so troublesomely critical as to correct others in the use of words; yet where truth is concerned, it can be no fault to desire their explication. Locke.
TROUBLESOMENESS. n. f. [from troublesome.]
1. Vexatiousness; uneasiness.
The lord treasurer, he complained of the troublesomeness of the place, for that the exchequer was so empty: the chancellor answered, be of good cheer, for now you shall see the bottom of your business at the first. Bacon.
2. Importunity; unreasonableness.
TROUBLOUS. adj. [from trouble.] Tumultuous; confused; disordered; put into commotion. An elegant word, but disused.
He along would fly
Upon the streaming rivers, sport to find;
And oft would dare tempt the troublesome wind. Spenser.
Soon as they this mock king did spy,
Their troublesome strife they flinted by and by. Hubb. Tale.
No other noise, nor people's troublesome cries,
As still are wont to annoy the walled town,
Might there be heard. Fairy Queen, b. i.
As a tall ship tossed in troublesome seas,
Whom raging winds threaten to make the prey
Of the rough rocks. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Then, matters, look to see a troublesome world. Shaksp.
Only one supply
In four years troublesome and expensive reign. Daniel.
TROUVER. n. f. [trouver, French.] In the common law, is an action which a man hath against one that having found any of his goods refuseth to deliver them upon demand. Cowel.
TROUGH. n. f. [troog, tröh, Saxon; troch, Dutch; trou, Danish; traug, Islandick; truogo, Italian.] Any thing hollowed and open longitudinally on the upper side.
The bloody boar
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood like wath, and makes his trough
In your embow'd bowms. Shaksp. Rich. III.
They had no ships but big troughs, which they call canoes. Abbat's Description of the World.
Where there is a good quick fall of rain water, lay a half trough of stone, of a good length, three foot deep, with one end upon the high ground, the other upon the low; cover the trough with brakes a good thickness, and cast sand upon the top of the brakes, the lower end of the trough will run like a spring of water. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 29.
Some logs, perhaps, upon the water swim,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And crost some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.
The water diffuses the particles of salt mixed in the stone, and is conveyed by long troughs and canals from the mines to Hall, where it is received in vast cisterns and boiled off. Add.
TO TROUL. v. n. [trullen, to roll, Dutch.] See TROLL.
1. To move volubly.
Bred only, and completed, to the taste
Of lustful appetite; to sing, to dance,
To dress, and troul the tongue, and roll the eye. Milton.
2. To utter volubly.
Let us be jocund. Will you troul the catch
You taught me while ere. Shaksp. Tempest.
TO TROUNCE. v. a. [derived by Skinner from trunc or transon, French, a club.] To punish by an indictment or information.
More probable, and like to hold
Than hand, or seal, or breaking gold;
For which so many, that renounc'd
Their plighted contracts have been trounc'd. Hudibras.
If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first: I'll trounce you for offering to corrupt my honesty. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
TROUSER. n. f. [trouss, Fr. trous, Erse.] Breeches; hose.
TROUSERS. s. See TROUSERS.
The leather quilted jack serves under his shirt of mail, and to cover his trous on board. Spenser on Ireland.
The unsightliness and pain in the leg may be helped by wearing a laced stocking; a laced trous will do as much for the thigh. Wise man's Surgery.
TROUT. n. f. [trout, Saxon; trout, trutta, Lat.]
1. A delicate spotted fish inhabiting brooks and quick streams.
The pond will keep trout and salmon in their seasonable plight, but not in their reddish grain. Carew.

TRU

- Worse than the anarchy at sea,
Where fishes on each other prey;
Where ev'ry trout can make as high rants
O'er his inferiors as our tyrants.
2. A familiar phrase for an honest, or perhaps for a silly fellow.
Here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. Swift.
TO TROW. v. n. [træodian, Saxon; træ, Danish.] To think;
to imagine; to conceive. A word now disused, and rarely used in ancient writers but in familiar language.
What handiworkness, trow you, can be observed in that speech, which is made one knows not to whom? Sidney.
Is there any reasonable man, trow you, but will judge it meeter that our ceremonies of Christian religion should be Popish than Turkish or Heathenish. Holzer, b. iv.
Lend less than thou owest,
Learn more than thou trowest. Shaksp. King Lear.
To-morrow next
We will for Ireland, and 'tis time, I trow. Shaksp. Henry IV.
O useful day! I useful indeed, I trow. Gay.
TROW. interj. [for I trow, or trow you.] An exclamation of enquiry.
Well, if you be not turn'd Turk, there is no more failing by the star.
—What means the fool, trow? Shaksp. Henry IV.
TROUWEL. n. f. [truelle, Fr. trulla, Lat.]
A trouwel is a tool to take up the mortar with, and spread it on the bricks; with which also they cut the bricks to such lengths as they have occasion, and also stop the joints. Mason.
Fair princely, you have lost much good sport.
—Sport! of what colour?
—What colour, madam? how shall I answer you?
—As wit and fortune will.
—Or as the destinies decree.
—Well said, that was laid on with a trouwel. Shaksp. Henry IV.
This was dextrous at his trouwel,
That was bred to kill a cow well. Swift.
TROY-WEIGHT. n. f. [from Troies, Fr.] A kind of weight Troy, } by which gold and bread are weighed, consisting of these denominations: a pound = 12 ounces;
ounce = 20 pennyweights; pennyweight = 24 grains.
The English physicians make use of troypweight after the following manner.
- | Grains | Scruple | Drachm | Ounce | Pound |
|--------|---------|--------|-------|-------|
| 20     | 3       | 8      | 12    |       |
| 60     | 3       | 8      | 12    |       |
| 480    | 24      | 8      | 12    |       |
| 5760   | 288     | 96     | 12    |       |
- The Romans left their ounce in Britain, now our averdu-pois ounce, for our trouy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbuthnot.
TRUANT. n. f. [truant, Old Fr. trawant, Dutch, a vagabond.]
An idler; one who wanders idly about, neglecting his duty or employment. To play the truant is, in schools, to stay from school without leave.
For my part I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To cloath mine age with angel-like perfection,
Yet hath Sir Protheus made fair advantage of his days.
Providence would only initiate mankind into the knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers and *truant*s. Mor.
Our ships are laden with the Trojan store,
And you like *truant*s come too late ashore. Dryden's Ann.
TRUANT. adj. Idle; wandering from business; lazy; loitering.
What keeps you from Westenberg?
—A truant disposition, good my lord. Shaksp. Hamlet.
He made a blushing child of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd there a double spirit.
Of teaching, and of learning instantly. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Where thou feed'st a single sheep remain
In shades aloof, or couch'd upon the plain,
Or late to lag behind with truant paces.
Revenge the crime, and take the traitor's head. Dryden.
TO TRUANT. v. n. [trawander, to beg about a country, French;
truwant, old German.] To idle at a distance from duty;
to loiter; to be lazy.
'Tis double wrong to truant with your best,
And let her read it in thy looks at board. Shaksp. Henry IV.
TRUANTSHIP. n. f. [trualité, Old Fr. from truant; truant is Chaucer is beggary.] Idleness; negligence; neglect of study or business.
The matter should not chide with him if the child have done his diligence, and used no *truant*ship. Arbuthnot.

TRU

- TRUSTAIL. n. f. A short squat woman. Ansford.
TRUSS. n. f. [tuber, Lat.] A sort of herb. Ansford.
TRUCK. n. f. [traga, low Lat. traga, Italian; truis, old Fr.]
1. A temporary peace; a cessation of hostilities.
Leagues and truces made between superstitious persons, and such as serve God aright. Hooker, b. v.
They pray in vain to have sin pardoned, which seek not also to prevent sin by prayer, even every particularin, by prayer against all sin, except men can name some transgression wherewith we ought to have truce. Hooker.
All this utter'd
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent,
Could not make truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt, deaf to peace. Shaksp. Romeo.
This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers, Men shall be lovers of their own selves, without natural affection, truce breakers. 2 Tim. iii. 3.
Least the truce with treason should be mixt,
'Tis my concern to have the tree betwixt.
Shadwell till death true dulness would maintain;
And in his father's right, and realm's defence,
Ne'er would have peace with wit, nor truce with sense. Dryden.
2. Cessation; intermission; short quiet.
There he may find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours. Milton.
TRUCIDATION. n. f. [from trucid, Lat.] The act of killing.
TO TRUCK. v. n. [troquer, Fr. truccare, Italian; tracar, Spanish; deduced by Salmasius from trapeus, to get money.] To traffic by exchange; to give one commodity for another.
TO TRUCK. v. a. To give in exchange; to exchange.
The Indians truck gold for glass. L'Estrange.
Go, mifer! go; for lucie sell thy soul,
Truck wares for wares, and truck from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a vast estate he left his son. Dryden.
I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.
TRUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Exchange; traffic by exchange.
It is no less requisite to maintain a truck in moral offices, than in the common business of commerce. L'Estrange.
Love is covetous; I must have all of you: heart for heart is an equal truck. Dryden.
2. [Troque] Wooden wheels for carriage of cannon. Ansford.
TRUCKLEBED, or TRUNDLED. n. f. [properly traclebed; from trachle, Latin, or troque.] A bed that runs on wheels under a higher bed.
There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and trucklebed. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
If he that is in battle slain,
Be in the bed of honour lain;
He that is beaten may be said,
To lie in honour's trucklebed. Hudibras, p. i.
TO TRUCKLE. v. n. [This word is, I believe, derived from trucklebed, which is always under another bed.] To be in a state of subjection or inferiority; to yield; to creep.
Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a land that truckles under us. Cleveland.
For which so many a legal cuckold
Has been run down in courts and truckle'd. Hudibras.
Men may be stiff and obdurate upon a wrong ground, and ply and truckle too upon as false a foundation. L'Estrange.
Religion itself is forced to truckle to worldly policy. Norris.
His zeal was not to lash our crimes,
But discontent against the times:
For had we made him timely offers,
To raise his post or fill his coffers:
Perhaps he might have truckle'd down,
Like other brethren of his gown. Swift.
They were subdued and insulted by Alexander's captains, and continued under several revolutions, a small trucking state, of no name till they fell under the Romans. Swift.
TRUCULENCE. n. f. [traculentia, Lat.]
1. Savageness of manners.
2. Terribleness of aspect.
TRUCULENT. adj. [traculentus, Lat.]
1. Savage; barbarous.
A barbarous Scythia where the savage and truculent inhabitants transfer themselves from place to place in waggons, as in the sun at the pomels of their faddles. Ray.
2. Terrible of aspect.
3. Destructive; cruel.
Pestilential feminaries, according to their grossness or subtlety, cause more or less truculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they encrease in two hours. Harvey on the Plague.
TO TRUDGE. v. n. [truggolare, Italian.] To travel laboriously; to jog on; to march heavily on.
No man is secure, but night-walking heralds,
That trudge between the king and mistress Shore. Shaksp.

TRU

- No footer was he fit to trudge,
But both made ready to dislodge.
Away they trudged together, and about midnight got to their journey's end. L'Estrange's Fables.
Go, mifer! go; for lucie sell thy soul,
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.
Once a poor rogue, 'tis true, I trod the street,
And trudge'd to Rome upon my naked feet:
Gold is the greatest god. Dryden's Juvenal.
He that will know the truth, must leave the beaten track, which none but servile minds trudge continually in. Locke.
TRUE. adj. [træoa, trupa, Saxon.]
1. Not false; not erroneous; agreeing with fact, or with the nature of things.
Of those he chose he falsest two,
And fittest for to forge true seeming lies. Fairy Qu. b. i.
Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast born,
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou cam'st into the world with thy legs forward. Shaksp.
A new commandment I write, which thing is true in him and in you. John ii. 8.
What you said had not been true,
If spoke by any elf but you. Cowley.
2. Not false; agreeing with our own thoughts.
3. Pure from the crime of falsehood; veracious.
4. Genuine; not counterfeit.
The darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. 1 Job.
Among unequals what society
Can fort? What harmony or true delight?
Religion, as it is the most valuable thing in the world, so it gives the truff value to them who promote the practice of it by their example and authority. Atterbury.
5. Faithful; not perfidious; steady.
My revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it! come and be true. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
So young and so untender?
—So young my lord, and true.
—Let it be so; thy truth then be thy dower. Shaksp.
Do not see
My fair rose wither; yet look up; behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true love tears. Shaksp.
The first great work
Is, that yourself may to yourself be true. Recommon.
I'll rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact Pernicious to thy peace, chiefly assur'd
Remarkably so late of thy true.
So faithful, love unequal'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
When this fire is kindled, both sides inflame it: all regard of merit is lost in persons employed, and these only chosen that are true to the party. Temple.
Smild Venus, to behold her own true knight Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight.
True to the king her principles are found;
Oh that her practice were but half so found!
Stedfast in various turns of state she stood,
And seal'd her vow'd affection with her blood. Dryden.
The truff hearts for Voiture heav'd with sighs;
Voiture was wept by all the brightest eyes.
True to his charge the bard preserv'd her long
In honour's limits, such the pow'r of song. Pope.
6. Honest; not fraudulent.
The thieves have bound the true man: now could thou and I rob the thieves and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week. Shaksp. Henry IV.
If king Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up. Shaksp.
7. Exact; truly conformable to a rule.
If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
He drew
A circle regularly true.
Ticke's first book does not want its merit; but I was disappointed in my expectation of a translation nicely true to the original; whereas in those parts where the greatest exact-ness seems to be demanded, he has been the least careful. Arb.
8. Rightful.
They seize the sceptre;
Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
Anointed King Messiah might be born
TRUEBORN. n. f. [true and born.] Having a right by birth.
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman. Shaksp.
Let him that is a trueborn gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me. Shaksp.
27 A TRUEBORN.

TRU

TRUEBRED. adj. [true and bred.] Of a right breed.
Two of them I know to be as truebred cowards as ever turned back.
Bauble do you call him? he's a substantial truebred beaft, bravely forehanded.
TRUEHEARTED. n. f. [true and heart.] Honest; faithful.
I have known no honefter or truehearted man: fare thee well.
TRUELOVE. n. f. An herb, called herba Paris.
TRUELOVENOT. n. f. [true, love, and knot.] Lines
TRUELOVERKNOT. n. f. drawn through each other with many involutions, considered as the emblem of interwoven affection.
I'll carve your name on barks of trees
With true-love-knots, and flourishes,
That shall infuse eternal spring.
TRUENESS. n. f. [from true.] Sincerity; faithfulness.
The even carriage between two factions proceedeth not always of moderation, but of a trueuess to a man's self, with end to make use of both.
TRUEPENNY. n. f. [true and penny.] A familiar phrase for an honest fellow.
Say'st thou so? art thou there, truepenny?
Come on.
TRUEPYLE. n. f. [true, pyle, French.]
In Italy, the usual method for the finding of truffes, or subterraneous mushrooms, called by the Italians tartuoli, and in Latin tubera terre, is by tying a cord to the hind leg of a pig, and driving him, observing where he begins to root.
TRUG. n. f. A hod for mortar.
TROLL. n. f. [trullo, Italian.]
1. A low whore; a vagrant trumpeter.
I'm sure, I fear'd the dauphin and his trull.
A trull who fits
By the town wall, and for her living knits.
So Mevius, when he drain'd his skull,
To celebrate some suberb trull;
His families in order set,
And ev'ry crambo he cou'd get;
Before he could his poem close,
The lovely nymph had left her nose.
2. It seems to have had first at least a neutral sense: a girl; a lass; a wench.
Among the rest of all the route
A passing proper lassie,
A white-hair'd trull, of twenty years,
Or neerer about there was:
In stature passing all the rest,
A gallant girl for hewe;
To be compar'd with townish nymphs,
So fair she was to vie.
TRULY. adv. [from true.]
1. According to truth; not falsely; faithfully; honestly.
They thought they might do it, not only willingly, because they loved him; and truly, because such indeed was the mind of the people; but safely, because she who ruled the kingdom was agreed thereto.
No untruth can avail the patron long; for things most truly are most behoovefully spoken.
Wisdom alone is truly safe.
2. Really; without fallacy.
3. Exactly; justly.
Right reason is nothing else but the mind of man judging of things truly, and as they are in themselves.
4. Indeed.
I have not undertaken it out of any wanton pleasure in mine own pen; nor truly without often pondering with myself beforehand what censures I might incur.
TRUMP. n. f. [trump, Dutch, and old Fr. tromba, Italian.]
1. A trumpet; an instrument of warlike music.
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.
Yet first to those ychain'd in sleep,
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep.
I heard
The neighing couriers and the soldiers cry,
And founding trumps that seem'd to tear the sky.
Beneath this tomb an infant lies,
To earth whole body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.
When the archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall with their lives below
Had been as short as thine.
2. [Corrupted from triumph. Latimer, in a Christmas sermon, exhibited a game at cards, and made the ace of hearts triumph. Fox.] A winning card; a card that has particular privileges in a game.
Him Basso follow'd, but his fate more hard,
Gain'd but one trump and one plebeian card.

TRU

Now her heart with pleasure jumps,
She scarce remembers what is trump.
3. To put to or upon the TRUMPS. To put to the last expedient.
We are now put upon our last trump; the fox is catch'd, but I shall send my two terriers in after him.
TO TRUMP. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To win with a trump card.
2. To TRUMP up. [from trump, Fr. to cheat.] To devise; to forge.
TRUMPERY. n. f. [tromperie, French, a cheat.]
1. Something fallaciously splendid; something of less value than it seems.
The trumpety in my house bring hither,
For state to catch these thieves.
2. Falshood; empty talk.
Breaking into parts the story of the creation, and delivering it over in a mytical fency, wrapping it up mixed with other their own trumpety, they have sought to obscure the truth thereof.
3. Something of no value; trifles.
Embrios and idiots, eremits and fitars,
White, black, and grey, with all their trumpety.
Another cavity of the head was stuffed with billatious, pricked dances, and other trumpety of the same nature.
TRUMPET. n. f. [trompette, French and Dutch.]
1. An instrument of martial music founded by the breath.
What's the business?
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house.
If any man of quality will maintain upon Edmund earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet.
He blew
His trumpet, heard in Oreb since perhaps
When God descended, and perhaps once more To found at general doom. Th' angelick blast Filled all the regions.
The last loud trumpet's wondrous sound
Shall through the rending tombs rebound,
And wake the nations under ground.
Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold,
But they move more in lofty numbers told;
By the loud trumpet which our courage aids,
We learn that found, as well as sense, persuades.
The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With thrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms.
Every man is the maker of his own fortune, and must be in some measure the trumpet of his fame.
No more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wiles.
Let the loud trumpet found,
Till the roofs all around,
The shrill echoes rebound.
2. In military stile, a trumpet.
He wisely desired, that a trumpet might be first sent for a pass.
Among our forefathers, the enemy, when there was a king in the field, demanded by a trumpet in what part he relid, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion.
3. One who celebrates; one who praises.
Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy.
That great politician was pleased to have the greatest wit of those times in his interests, and to be the trumpet of his praises.
TRUMPET-FLOWER. n. f. [bignonia, Lat.] It hath a tubulous flower consisting of one leaf, which opens at top like two lips: these flowers are succeeded by pods, which are divided into two cells, and contain several winged seeds.
TO TRUMPET. v. a. [trumpetter, Fr. from the noun.] To publish by found of trumpet; to proclaim.
That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence to form my fortunes
May trumpet to the world.
Why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings?
They went with found of trumpet; for they did nothing but publish and trumpet all the reproaches they could devise against the Irish.
TRUMPETER. n. f. [from trumpet.]
1. One who founds a trumpet.
Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines.
As they returned, a herald and trumpeter from the Scots overtook them.
Their

Their men lie securely intrench'd in a cloud,
And a trumpet hornet to battle sounds loud.
An army of trumpeters would give as great a strength as this confederacy of tongue warriors, who, like those military musicians, content themselves with animating their friends to battle.
2. One who proclaims, publishes, or denounces.
Where there is an opinion to be created of virtue or greatness, these men are good trumpeters.
How came to many thousands to fight, and die in the same rebellion? why were they deceived into it by those spiritual trumpeters, who followed them with continual alarms of damnation if they did not venture life, fortune and all, in that which those impostors called the cause of God.
3. A filth.
TRUMPET-TONGUED. adj. [trumpet and tongue.] Having tongues vociferous as a trumpet.
This Duncan's virtues
Will plead, like angels, trumpet-tongued against
The deep damnation of his taking off.
TO TRUNCATE. v. a. [truncare, Lat.] To maim; to lop; to cut short.
TRUNCATION. n. f. [from truncate.] The act of lopping or maiming.
TRUNCHEON. n. f. [tronçon, French.]
1. A short staff; a club; a cudgel.
With his truncheon he so rudely stroke
Cymocles twice, that twice him forc'd his foot revoke.
Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist.
Thy leg is a stick compared with this truncheon.
The English flew diverse of them with plummets of lead tied to a truncheon of staff by a cord.
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.
2. A staff of command.
The hand of Mars
Beckon'd with fiery truncheon my retire.
No ceremony that to great ones' longs,
The martial's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace,
As mercy does.
TO TRUNCHEON. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a truncheon.
Captain, thou abominable cheater! If captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out of taking their names upon you before you earn'd them.
TRUNCHEONER. n. f. [from truncheon.] One armed with a truncheon.
I mist the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, chib! when I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour.
TO TRUNDLE. v. n. [trondeler, Picard French; trönel, a low, Saxon.] To roll; to bowl along.
In the four first it is heaved up by several spondees intermixed with proper breathing places, and at last trundles down in a continued line of dactyls.
TRUNDLE. n. f. [trönel, Saxon.] Any round rolling thing.
TRUNDLE-TAIL. n. f. Round tail.
Avaunt you curs!
Hound or spaniel, brache or hym,
Or bobtail tike, or trundle-tail.
TRUNK. n. f. [truncus, Lat. trunc, Fr.]
1. The body of a tree.
He was
The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk,
And suckt my verdure out on't.
About the mossy trunk I wound me soon;
For high from ground the branches would require Thy utmost reach.
Creeping 'twixt 'em all, the mantling vine
Does round their trunks her purple clusters twine.
Some of the largest trees have feeds no bigger than some diminutive plants, and yet every feed is a perfect plant with a trunk, branches, and leaves, inclosed in a shell.
2. The body without the limbs of an animal.
The charm and venom which they drunk,
Their blood with ferret filth infected hath,
Being diffused through the senseless trunk.
But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, wither'd trunk.
3. The main body of any thing.
The large trunk of the veins discharge the reflux blood into the next adjacent trunk, and so on to the heart.
4. [Trow, French.] A chest for cloaths; a small chest commonly lined with paper.
Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places.
Some odd fantastick lord would fain
Carry in trunks, and all my drudgery do.
Where a young man learned to dance, there happened to stand an old trunk in the room, the idea of which had so mixed itself with the turns of all his dances, that, though he could dance excellently well, yet it was only whilst that trunk was there; nor could he perform well in any other place, unless that, or some such other trunk, had its due position in the room.

Your poem sunk,
And sent in quires to line a trunk:
If still you be dispos'd to rhyme,
Go try your hand a second time.
5. [Trompe, Fr.] The probolus of an elephant, or other animal.
Leviathan that at his gills
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea.
When elephant gaited elephant did rear
His trunk, and castles juttled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shewn.
6. A long tube through which pellets of clay are blown.
In rolls of parchment trunks, the mouth being laid to the one end and the ear to the other, the sound is heard much farther than in the open air.
In a shooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the swifter and more forcibly the air drives the pellet.
TO TRUNK. v. a. [truncare, Lat.] To truncate; to maim; to lop. Obsolete.
Large streams of blood out of the trunked Rock Forth gush'd, like water streams from riven rock.
TRUNKED. adj. [from trunk.] Having a trunk.
She is thick set with strong and well trunked trees.
TRUNK-HOSE. n. f. [trunk and hose.] Large breeches formerly worn.
The short trunk-hose shall show thy foot and knee
Licentious, and to common eye-sight free;
And with a bolder stride, and looser air,
Ming'd with men, a man thou must appear.
TRUNKIONS. n. f. [trognons, Fr.] The knobs or bunchings of a gun, that bear it on the cheeks of a carriage.
TRUST. n. f. [trudo, Lat.] The act of thrusting or pushing.
By attraction we do not understand drawing, pumping, sucking, which is really pulsion and trusion.
TRUSS. n. f. [trouss, Fr.]
1. A bandage by which ruptures are restrained from lapsing.
A hernia would succeed, and the patient be put to the trouble of wearing a truss.
2. Bundle, any thing thrust close together.
All as a poor pedler he did wend,
Bearing a truss of trilles at his back,
As belles and babies, and glasses in his packe.
The rebels first won the plain at the hill's foot by assault, and then the even ground on the top, by carrying up great trusses of hay before them, to dead their shot.
An ass was wishing for a mouthful of fresh grass to knap upon, in exchange for a heartless truss of straw.
The fair one devoured a truss of sallet, and drunk a full bottle to her share.
3. Trouse; breeches. Obsolete.
TO TRUSS. v. a. [troussier, French.] To pack up close together.
What in most English writers useth to be loose and unright, in this author, is well grounded, finely framed, and strongly trussed up together.
Some of them send the scriptures before, truss up bag and baggage, make themselves in a readiness, that they may fly from city to city.
You might have trusted him and all his apparel into an celskin.
TRUST. n. f. [trayst, Runick.]
1. Confidence; reliance on another.
What a fool is honesty! and trust, his sworn brother, a very simple gentleman.
My misfortunes may be of use to credulous maids, never to put too much trust in deceitful men.
2. Charge received in confidence.
In my wretched case 'twill be more just
Not to have promis'd, than deceive your trust.
His trust was with th' eternal to be deemed Equal in strength.
3. Confident opinion of any event.
4. Credit given without examination.
Most take things upon trust, and misemploy their assent by lazily enlaving their minds to the dictates of others.
5. Credit without payment.
Ev'n such is time, who takes on trust
Our youth, our joys, our all we have,
And pays us but with age and dust.
6. Something committed to one's faith.
They cannot see all with their own eyes; they must commit many great trusts to their ministers.
Thou the sooner
Temptation found'st, or over potent charms,
To violate the sacred trust of silence
Deposited within thee.
7. Deposit; something committed to charges, of which an account must be given.
Although the advantages one man possesseth more than another, may be called his property with respect to other men, yet with respect to God they are only a trust.
8. Fidelity;

TUFFY. adj. [from tuff.] Adorned with tuffs. A word of no authority.
Let me strip thee of thy tuffy coat,
Spread thy ambrosiall stores. Thomson's Summer.
To TUG. v. a. [from tugan, Saxon.]
1. To pull with strength long continued in the utmost exertion; to draw.
No more tug one another thus, nor maul yourselves;
receive Prize equal; conquests crown ye both: the lifts to others leave. Chapman's Iliad.
These two massy pillars
With horrible confusion to and fro
He tugg'd, he shook, till down they came, and drew Upon the heads of all that sat beneath.
The whole roof after them, with bust of thunder. Milton.
Take pains the genuine meaning to explore,
There sweat, there strain, tug the laborious oar. Ros.
2. To pull; to pluck.
Puff, beware thy beard;
I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly. Shak. Hen. VI.
There leaving him to his repose
Secured from the pursuit of foes,
And wanting nothing but a song,
And a well tun'd theorbos hung
Upon a bough, to ease the pain
His tugg'd ears suffer'd, with a strain. Hadibras, p. i.
To TUG. v. n.
1. To pull; to draw.
The meaner sort will tug lustily at one oar. Sanays.
Lead your thoughts to the galleys, there those wretched captives are chained to the oars they tug at. Boyle.
There is such tugging and pulling this way and that way.
More's Antidote against Abuse.
Thus galley-slaves tug willing at their oar,
Content to work in prospect of the shore;
But would not work at all, if not constrained before. Dryd.
We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weathered out point; a stretch or two more will do the work; but if instead of that we slacken our arms, and drop our oars, we shall be hurried back to the place from whence we set out. Addison on the State of War.
2. To labour; to contend; to struggle.
Cast your good counsels
Upon his passion; let myself and fortune
Tug for the time to come. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
His face is black and full of blood,
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasps
And tugs for life. Shaksp. Hen. VI. p. ii.
They long wrestled and strenuously tugg'd for their liberty with a no less magnanimous than constant perignacy. How.
Go now with some daring drug,
Bait thy disease, and while they tug
Thou to maintain the cruel strife.
Spend the dear treasure of thy life. Grayson.

Vast ruins come along, rent from the smoking walls. Dryd.

TUGGER. n. f. [from tug.] One that tugs or pulls hard.

TUTORION. n. f. [tutor from tutor, Lat.] Guardianship; superintendent care; care of a guardian or tutor.

A folly for a man of wisdom, to put himself under the tuition of a beast. Sidney, b. ii.

They forcibly endeavour to cast the churches, under my care and tuition, into the moulds they have fashioned to their designs. King Charles.

If government depends upon religion, this shews the pettential design of those that attempt to disjoin the civil and ecclesiastical interests, setting the latter wholly out of the tuition of the former.

When so much true life is put into them, freely talk with them about what most delights them, that they may perceive that those under whose tuition they are, are not enemies to their satisfaction. Locke.

TULIP. n. f. [tulipe, Fr. tulipa, Lat.] A flower.

It hath a lily flower, composed of six leaves, shaped somewhat like a pitcher; the point rising in the middle of the flower is surrounded with stamina, and afterwards becomes an oblong fruit, which opens into three parts; and is divided into three cells, full of plain seeds, resting upon one another in a double row. To these may be added a coated root, with fibres on the lower part. The properties of a good tulip, according to the characteristics of the best florists of the present age, are, 1. It should have a tall stem. 2. The flower should consist of six leaves, three within, and three without, the former being larger than the latter. 3. Their bottom should be proportioned to their top; their upper part should be rounded off, and not terminate in a point. 4. The leaves when opened should neither turn inward nor bend outward, but rather stand erect; the flower should be of a middling size, neither over large nor too small. 5. The stripes should be small and regular, arising quite from the bottom of the flower. The chives should not be yellow, but of a brown colour. They are generally divided into three classes, viz. precoces, or early flowers; mediae, or middling flowers; and serotines, or late flowers. The early blowing tulips are not near so fair, nor rise half so high as the late ones, but are chiefly valued for appearing so early in the spring. Their roots should be taken up and spread upon mats in a shady place to dry; after which they should be cleared from their filth, and put up in a dry place until the season for planting.

The tulip opens with the rising, and shuts with the setting sun. Hakevall.

Why tulips of one colour produce some of another, and running thro' all, still escape a blue. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

thing more valuable than he had in view. Locke.
He turn'd his parts rather to books and conversation, than to politics. Prior.
He is still to spring from one of a poetical disposition, from whom he might inherit a soul turn'd to poetry. Pope.
25. To double in.
Thus a wife taylor is not pinching,
But turns at every seam an inch in. Swift.
26. To revolve; to agitate in the mind.
Turn these ideas about in your mind, and take a view of them on all sides. Watts.
27. To drive from a perpendicular edge; to blunt.
Quick wits are more quick to enter speedily, than able to pierce far; like sharp tools whose edges be very soon turn'd.
28. To drive by violence; to expel.
Rather turn this day out of the week;
This day of shame. Shakespeare.
They turn'd weak people and children unable for service, out of the city. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
He now was grown deform'd and poor.
And fit to be turn'd out of doors. Hudibras, p. iii.
If I had taken to the church, I should have had more sense than to have turn'd myself out of my benefice by writing libels on my parishioners. Dryden's Preface to Fables.
I would be hard to imagine that God would turn him out of paradise, to till the ground, and at the same time advance him to a throne. Locke.
A great man in a peasant's house, finding his wife handsome, turn'd the good man out of his dwelling. Addison.
29. To apply.

God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee. Deut. xxx.
31. To keep passing in a course of exchange or traffick.
These are certain commodities, and yield the readiest money of any that are turn'd in this kingdom, as they never fail of a price abroad. Temple.
A man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier of Popularity.
32. To adapt the mind.
However improper he might have been for studies of a higher nature, he was perfectly well turn'd for trade. Addison.
33. To put towards another.
I will send my fear before thee, and make all thine enemies turn their backs unto thee. Exod. xxiii. 27.
34. To retort; to throw back.
Luther's conscience, by his insinuations, turns these very reasonings upon him. Atterbury.
35. To TURN away. To dismiss from service; to discard.
She did nothing but turn up and down, as she had hoped to turn away the fancy that master'd her, and hid her face as if she could have hidden herself from her own fancies. Sidney.
Yet you will be hanged for being so long absent, or be turn'd away. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
She turn'd away one servant for putting too much oil in her falad. Arbuthnot.

ful creatures that inhabit the ruins of Babylon. Gray's Ode to Rage.
38. To TURN off. To give over; to resign.
The most adverse chances are like the ploughing and breaking the ground, in order to a more plentiful harvest.
And yet we are not so wholly turn'd off to that reversion, as to have no supplies for the present; for besides the comfort of so certain an expectation in another life, we have promises also for this. Decay of Piety.
39. To TURN off. To deflect.
The institution of sports was intended by all governments to turn off the thoughts of the people from busying themselves in matters of state. Addison's Freeholder.

Criminals condemned to suffer
Are blinded first, and then turn'd over. Bulwer.
To TURN: v. n.
1. To move round; to have a circular or vertiginous motion.
Such a light and mett'd dance Saw you never?
And by lead-men for the nonce,
That turn round like grindstones. Ben. Johnson.
The gate on golden hinges turning. Milton.
The cause of the imagination that things turn round, is for that the spirits themselves turn, being compell'd by the vapour of the wine; for every liquid body, upon compulsion, turns, as we see in water: and it is all one to the sight whether the visual spirits move, or the object moveth, or the medium moveth. And we see that long turning round breedeth the same imagination. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. To shew regard or anger, by directing the look towards any thing.
Pompey turn'd upon him and bad him be quiet. Bacon.
The understanding turns inwards on itself, and reflects on its own operations. Locke.
Turn, mighty monarch, turn, this way;
Do not refuse to hear. Dryden.
3. To move the body round.

He sat, and turning short with speedy pace,
Cast back a scornful glance and quits the place. Dryden.
4. To move from its place.
The ancle-bone is apt to turn out on either side, by reason of relaxation of the tendons upon the least walking. Wijem.
5. To change posture.
If one with ten thousand dice, should throw five thousand sides once or twice, we might say he did it by chance; but if, with almost an infinite number he should, without failings, throw the same sides, we should certainly conclude he did it by art, or that these dice could turn upon no other side. Chrysos.
6. To have a tendency or direction.
There is not a more melancholy object than a man who has his head turned with religious enthusiasm.
His cares all turn upon Altyanax, A. Philippi.
Whom he has lodg'd within the citadel.
7. To move the face to another quarter.

The mornings, as mistaken, turn about.
And all her early fires again go out. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
8. To depart from the way; to deviate.
My lords turn in, into your servant's house. Gen. xix. 2.
Virgil, suppose in describing the fury of his heroes in a battle, when endeavouring to raise our concernment to the highest pitch, turns short on the sudden into some similitude, which diverts attention from the main subject. Dryden.

TUR

9. To alter; to be changed; to be transformed.
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit. Milton.
A storm of sad mischance will turn into something that is good, if we use to make it so. Taylor.
This suspicion turned to jealousy, and jealousy to rage;
then the diffidence and threatens, and again is humble. Dryd.
Socrates meeting Alcibiades going to his devotions, and observing his eyes fixed with great seriousness, tells him that he had reason to be thoughtful, since a man might bring down evils by his prayers, and the things which the gods send him at his request might turn to his destruction. Addison.
For this I suffer'd Phœbus' steeds to stray,
And the mad ruler to misguide the day,
When the wide earth to heaps of ashes turn'd,
And heav'n itself the wand'ring chariot burn'd. Pope.
Rather than let a good fire be wanting, enliven it with the butter that happens to turn to oil. Swift.
10. To become by a change.
Cygnets from grey turn white; hawks from brown turn more white. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

13. To change to acid. Uted of milk.
His friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turns in less than two nights! Shak. Timon of Athens.
Alles milk turns not so easily as cows. Bacon.
14. To be brought eventually.
Let their vanity be flattered with things that will do them good; and let their pride fret them on work on something which may turn to their advantage. Locke on Education.
Christianity directs our actions so, as every thing we do may turn to account at the great day. Addison's Spect.
For want of due improvement, these useful inventions have not turned to any great account. Baker's Reflect. on Learning.
15. To depend on, as the chief point.
When a man once perceives how far ideas agree or disagree, he will be able to judge of what other people say.
The question turns upon this point; when the prebiterians shall have got their share of employments, whether they ought not, by their own principles, to use the utmost of their power to reduce the whole kingdom to an uniformity. Swift.
Conditions of peace certainly turn upon events of war. Shak.
The first platform of the poem, which reduces into one important action all the particulars upon which it turns. Pope.
16. To grow giddy.
I'll look no more,
Left my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topples down headlong. Shakespeare's King Lear.
17. To have an unexpected consequence or tendency.
If we repent seriously, submit contentedly and serve him faithfully, afflictions shall turn to our advantage. Wake.
18. To TURN away. To deviate from a proper course.
The turning away of the simple shall slay him. Prov.
In some springs of water if you put wood, it will turn into the nature of stone. Bacon.
19. To return; to recoil.

Sticks no dishonour on our front, but turns Foul on himself. Milton.
20. To be directed to, or from any point.
Forthwith from dance to sweet repast they turn. Milton.
21. To TURN off. To divert one's course.
The peaceful banks which profound silence keeps,
The little boat securely passes by
But where with noise the waters creep,
Turn off with care, for treacherous rocks are near. Norris.
Turn, n. s. [from the verb.]
1. The act of turning; gyration.
2. Meander; winding way.
Fear misled the youngest from his way;
But Nisus hit the turn. Dryden.
After a turbulent and noisy course among the rocks, the Teverne falls into the valley, and after many turns and windings glides peacefully into the Tiber. Addison.
3. A walk too and fro.
My good and gracious lord of Canterbury:
Come, you and I must walk a turn together. Shakespeare.

- Nothing but the open air will do me good, I'll take a turn in your garden. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
Upon a bridge somewhat broader than the space a man takes up in walking, laid over a precipice, desire some eminent philosopher to take a turn or two upon it. Collier.
4. Change; vicissitude; alteration.
An admirable facility musick hath to express and represent to the mind, more inwardly than any other sensible mean, the very standing, rising, and falling; the very steps and inflections every way; the turns and varieties of all passions whereunto the mind is subject. Hooker.
Oh, world, thy slippery turns! friends now fast sworn,
On a dissension of a dole, break out
To bitter'd enmity. Shakespeare.
The state of christendom might by this have a turn. Bacon.
The King with great noblenes and bounty, which virtues had their turn in his nature, restored Edward Stafford. Bacon.
This turn hath made amends! thou hast fulfill'd Thy words, Creator bounteous. Milton.
This turn's too quick to be without design; Dryden.
I'll found the bottom of 't ere I believe.
Too well the turns of mortal chance I know,
And hate relentless of my heavenly foe. Pope's Odyss.
An English gentleman should be well versed in the history of England, that he may observe the several turns of state, and how produced. Locke.

with blows and reproaches. LeStrange.
8. Time at which any thing is to be had or done.
Myself would be glad to take some breath, and desire that some of you would take your turn to speak. Bacon.
His turn will come to laugh at you again. Denham.
The spiteful flares have fixed their venom down,
And now the peaceful planets take their turn. Dryden.
Though they held the power of the civil sword unlawful, whilst they were to be governed by it, yet they esteem'd it very lawful when it came to their turn to govern. Atterb.
A saline constitution of the fluids is acid, alkaline, or muriatic: of these in their turns. Arbuthnot.
The nymph will have her turn to be turn'd blue. Swift.
The tutor, and the pupil, he turns the scale. Swift.
9. Actions of kindness or malice.
Lend this virgin aid, Shakespeare.
Thanks are half lost when good turns are delay'd. Fairfax.
Some malicious natures place their delight in doing ill
turns. LeStrange's Fab. b. 102.
Shrewd turns strike deeper than ill words. South.
10. Reigning inclination.
This is not to be accomplished but by introducing religion to be the turn and fashion of the age. Swift.
11. A step off the ladder at the gallows.
They, by their skill in palmistry,
Will quickly read his destiny;
And make him glad to read his lesson,
Or take a turn for it at the session. Bulwer.
12. Convenience.
Diogenes' dish did never serve his master for more turns, notwithstanding that he made it his dish, cup, cap, measure, and water-pot, than a mantle doth an Irishman. Spenser.
They never found occasion for their turns,
But almost starv'd did much lament and mourn. Habberd.
His going I could frame to serve my turn; Shakespeare.
Save him from danger, do him love and honour.
My daughter Catharine is not for your turn. Shakespeare.
To perform this murder was elect;
A base companion, few or none could miss,
Who first did serve their turn, and now serves his. Dan.
They tried their old friends of the city, who had served their turn so often, and set them to get a petition. Clarendon.
This philosophy may pass with the most sensual, while they pretend to be reasonable; but whenever they have a mind to be otherwise, to drink or to sleep, will serve the turn. Temple's Miscellanies.
13. The form; cast; shape; manner.
Our young men take up some cry'd up English poet, without knowing wherein his thoughts are improper to his subject, or his expressions unworthy of his thoughts, or the turn of both is unharmonious. Dryden.
Seldom any thing raises wonder in me, which does not give my thought a turn that makes my heart the better. Addison.
Female virtues are of a domestic turn. The family is the proper province for private women to shine in. Addison.
An agreeable turn appears in her sentiments upon the most ordinary affairs of life. Addison.

TUR

Wit doth not consist so much in advancing things new, as in giving things known an agreeable turn. Addison's Spect.
Before I made this remark, I wondered to see the Roman poets, in their description of a beautiful man, so often mention the turn of his neck and arms.

Addison. A young man of a sprightly turn in conversation, had an inordinate desire of appearing fashionable.
Speller. Books give the same turn to our thoughts and reasoning, that good company does to our conversation. Swift's Misc.
The very turn of voice, the good pronunciation, and the alluring manner which some teachers have attained, will engage the attention. Watts.

14. The manner of adjusting the words of a sentence. The turn of words, in which Ovid excels all poets, are sometimes a fault or sometimes a beauty, as they are used properly or improperly. Dryden.

The three first stanzas are rendered word for word with the original, not only with the same elegance, but the same short turn of expression peculiar to the sapphic ode. Addison.
The first coin being made of brass gave the denomination to money among the Romans, and the whole turn of their expressions is derived from it. Arbutnot.

15. By Turns. One after another.
They feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes; extremes by change more fierce. Milt.
The challenge to Dametas shall belong,
Menalcas shall sustain his under-song;
Each in his turn your tuneful numbers bring;
By turns the tuneful mules love to sing. Dryden's Virg.
By turns put on the suppliant, and the lord;
Threaten'd this moment, and the next implor'd. Prior.

TURNBENCH. n. f. [turn and bench.] A term of turners.
Small work in metal is turn'd in an iron lathe called a turnbench, which they screw in a vice, and having fitted their work upon a small iron axle, with a drill barrel, fitted upon a square shank, at the end of the axle, next the left-hand, they with a drill-bow, and drill-fring, carry it about. Moxon.
TURNCOAT. n. f. [turn and coat.] One who forsakes his party or principles; a renegade;
Courtsey itself must turn to disdain, if you come in her presence—Then is courtesy a turncoat. Shakesp.

TURNER. n. f. [from turn.] One whose trade is to turn in a lathe.
Nor box, nor limes without their use are made,
Smooth-grain'd and proper for the turner's trade. Dryden.
Some turners, to shew their dexterity in turning, turn long and slender pieces of ivory, as small as an hay-stalk. Moxon.

TURNING. v. a. [from turn.] Flexure; winding; meander.
I ran with headlong haste
Thro' paths and turnings often trod by day. Milton.
TURNINGNESS. n. f. [from turning.] Quality of turning; tergiversation; subterfuge.
So nature formed him, to all turnings of sleights; that though no man had less goodness, no man could better find the places whence arguments might grow of goodnests. Sidon.

TURNIP. n. f. A white esculent root.
The flower consists of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross; out of the flower cup rises the pointal, which afterwards turns to a pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and are full of roundish seeds; a carnosous and tubercle root. Milt.
November is drawn with bunches of parsnips and turnips in his right-hand. Peachment on Drawing.

The goddess rose amid the inmost round,
With wither'd turnip-tops her temples crown'd. Gay.
Turnips hide their swelling heads below. Gay's Post.
TURNPIKE. n. f. [turn and pike, or pique.]
1. A cross of two bars armed with pikes at the end, and turning on a pin, fixed to hinder horses from entering.
2. Any gate by which the way is obstructed.
The gates are shut, and the turnpikes locked. Arbutnot.

TURNICK. adj. [turn and sick.] Vertiginous; giddy.
If a man see another turn swiftly and long; or if he look upon wheels that turn, himself waxeth turnyick. Bacon.
TURNISOL. n. f. [Heliotropium, Lat.] A plant.
The flower consists of one leaf shaped like a funnel, having its centre wrinkled and folded, and its brim cut into ten segments alternately unequal: these flowers are collected into a long reflected spike, resembling a scorpion's tail; each flower is succeeded by four naked gibbous seeds. Miller.

TURNISOL. n. f. [turn and spit.] He that anciently turned a spit, instead of which jacks are now generally used.
I give you joy of the report
That he's to have a place at court;
Yes, and a place he will grow rich in,
A turnip in the royal kitchen. Swift's Misc.

TURNISOL. n. f. [turn and spit.] A turnpike.
A turnstile is more certain
Than, in events of war, dame Fortune. Eludibras.
Twirling turnstiles interrupt the way,
The thwarting pessenger shall force them round. Gay.

TURNISOL. n. f. [turn and spit.] A turnpike.
A turnstile is more certain
Than, in events of war, dame Fortune. Eludibras.
Twirling turnstiles interrupt the way,
The thwarting pessenger shall force them round. Gay.

gum exuded by the pine, the juniper, and other trees of that kind.

As the turpentine tree I stretched out my branches. Eclips.
Verticose grinded with turpentine, put into a pot, and as you use it warm it. Peachment on Drawing.

TURQUOISE. n. f. See Turkies.
One shew'd me a ring, he had of your daughter for a monkey.—Out upon her! it was my turquois, I had it when I was a bachelor. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

TURPITUDE. n. f. [turpitude, Fr. turpitude, from turpis, Lat.] Essential deformity of words, thoughts or actions; inherent vileness; badness.

How wouldst thou have paid
My better service, when my turpitude
Thou thus dost crown with gold. Shakesp.

Decency imports a certain measure of one thing to another; the preservation of which is properly that rule by which every thing ought to act; and consequently the violation of it implies a turpitude or indecency. South's Sermons.

TURRET. n. f. [turris, Lat.] A small eminence raised above the rest of the building; a little tower.

Dicouric I pry thee, on this turret's top. Shakesp.
All things well ordered, he withdrew with speed
Up to a turret high, two ports between,
That so he might be near at every need, Fairfax.
And overlook the lands and furrows green.

Make Windsor hills in lofty numbers rise,
And lift her turrets nearer to the skies. Pope's Windsor Forest.

TURRET. adj. [from turret.] Formed like a tower; rising like a tower.

Take a turreted lamp of tin, in the form of a square; the height of the turret being thrice as much as the length of the lower part, whereupon the lamp standeth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

TURTLE. n. f. [turtele, Saxon; tortoise, French; TURTELOVE. n. f. [tortuella, Italian; turtur, Latin.]

1. A species of dove.
When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks;
When turtles tread, Shak. Love's Lab. Lost.
We'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shak.

Take me an heifer and a turtle dove. Gen. xi. 9.
Galen propos'd the blood of turtles dropt warm from their wings. Wylliam.

2. It is used among sailors and gluttons for a tortoise.
TUSH. interj. [Of this word I can find no credible etymology.] An expression of contempt.

Tush, say they, how should God perceive it: is there knowledge in the most high? Psal. lxxii.
Sir Thomas Moor found fault with his lady's continual chiding, saying: the consideration of the time, for it was sent, should restrain her. Tush, tush, my lord, said she, look, here is one step to heaven-ward, shewing him a friar's girdle. I fear me, quoth Sir Thomas, this one step will not bring you up a step higher. Camden's Remains.

Tush never tell me, I take it much unkindly
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse,
As if the strings were thine, should know of this. Shak.

TUSK. n. f. [syxap, Saxon; tesken, old Frick.] The long teeth of a pugnacious animal; the fang; the holding tooth.
Some creatures have over-long, or out-growing teeth, called fangs, or tusks; as boars and pikes. Bacon.
The boar depended upon his tusks. L'Estrange.

As two boars,
With rising bristles, and with frothy jaws,
Their adverse breasts with tusks oblique they wound. Dryd.

A monstrous boar
Whetting his tusks, and churning hideous foam. Smith.

TUSKED. adj. [from tusk.] furnished with tusks.
Into the naked woods he goes,
And seeks the tusky boar to tear. Dryden.

Of those beasts no one was horned and tusked too; the superfluous blood not sufficing to feed both. Gray.

TUSSUCK. n. f. [diminutive of tuss.] A tuft of grass or twigs.
The first is remarkable for the several tussucks or bunches of thorns, wherewith it is armed round. Gray.

TUT. interj. [This seems to be the same with tush.]
A parable noting contempt.
Tut, tut! grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle. Shak.

Tut, tut! here's a mannerly forbearance. Shakesp.

TUTANAG. n. f.
Tutanage is the Chinese name for shelter, which we erroneously apply to the metal of which canisters are made, that are brought over with the tea from China. It being a coarse pewter made with the lead carried from England and tin got in the kingdom of Quintang. Woodward.

TUTELAGE. n. f. [tutelle, tutelage, Fr. tutela, Lat.] Guardianship; state of being under guardian.

If one in the possession of lands die, and leave a minor to succeed to him, his tutelage belongeth to the king. Drummond.
He accoupled the ambassage with an article in the nature of a request, that the French king might, according unto his right right of feignory or tutelage; dispose of the marriage of the young duchess of Britany. Bacon.

TUTELAR. adj. [tutela, Lat.] Having the charge or guardianship of any person or thing; protecting; defensive; guardian.

According to the traditions of the magicians the tutelar spirits, will not remove at common appellations, but at the proper names of things, wherunto they are protectors. Brown.

Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fortune without envy, that gives indolence of body, with an equality of mind; the best guardian of youth and support of old age: the precept of reason, as well as religion, and physician of the soul as well as the body; the tutelar goddesses of health, and universal medicine of life. Temple.

These tutelar geni who presided over the several people committed to their charge, were watchful over them. Dryd.

But you, O Grecian chiefs, reward my care,
Sure I may plead a little to your grace:
Enter'd the town; I then unbar'd the gates,
When I remov'd the tutelar fates. Dryden.

Ye tutelar gods who guard this royal fabric. Rowe.

TUTOR. n. f. [tutor, Lat. tutor, Fr.] One who has the care of another's learning and morals; a teacher or instructor.

When I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots;
Till then I banish thee on pain of death. Shakesp.

Ah, tutor, look where bloody Clifford comes. Shakesp.

When nobles are the tutors tutors. Butler.

No heretics burnt but venches tutors. Butler.

A primitive Christian, that coming to a friend to teach him a psalm, began, I said I will look to my ways, that I offend not with my tongue; upon which he stop'd his tutor, saying, this is enough if I learn it. Government of the Tongue.

His body thus adorn'd, he next design'd
With liberal arts to cultivate his mind:
He sought a tutor of his own accord,
And stud'd lessons he before abhor'd. Dryden.

No science is so speedily learned by the noblest genius without a tutor. Watts.

TUTOR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To instruct; to teach; to document.
This boy is foret born,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of many desperate studies by his uncle. Shakesp.

He cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried and tutor'd in the world.
The cock has his furs, and he strikes his feet inward with singular strength and order; yet he does not this by any syllogistical method, but is merely tutor'd by instinct. Hall.

2. To treat with superiority or feverity.
I hardly yet have learn'd
T'insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee:
Give sorrow leave a while to tutor me
To this submission. Shakesp. Rich. II.

I take a review of my little boys mounted upon hobby-horses, and of little girls tutoring their babies. Addison.

TUTORAGE. n. f. [from tutor.] The authority or solemnity of a tutor.
Children care not for the company of their parents or tutors, and men will care less for theirs, who would make them children by usurping a tutorage. Government of the Tongue.

TUTORRESS. n. f. [from tutor.] Directress; instructress; governess.
Fidelity shall be your tutorress. Moore's Fandling.

TUTTY. n. f. [stutia, low Lat. tutty, Fr.] A sublimate of zinc or calamine collected in the furnace. Anyw.

TUTTSAN. or particulate. n. f. [Androsacemum, Lat.] A plant.

TUTZ. n. f. [I know not whether it is not a word merely of cant.] A lock or tuft of hair.
With odorous oil thy head and hair are sleek;
And then thou kemp'st the tutzes on thy cheek;
Of these thy barbers take a costly care. Dryden.

TWAIN. adj. [twegen, bazza, both twain, Saxon.] Two. An old word, not now used but ludicrously.
'Tis not the trial of a woman's war,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain. Shakesp.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain, Too intricate 't unloose. Shakesp. King Lear.

Of my condition take no care;
It fits not; thou and I long since are twain. Milton.

When old winter split the rocks in twain,
He trip'd the bears-foot of its leafy growth.
The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,
This woe's cackling cry with horror heard. Dryden.

TWANG. v. n. [A word formed from the sound.] To sound with a quick sharp noise.
A thousand twanging instruments
Will hum about mine ears. Shakesp. Tempest.

To TWANG. v. a. To make to sound sharply.
A swaggering accent sharply twang'd off, gives manhood approbation. Shak. Twelfth Night.

TWANG. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A sharp quick sound.
They by the sound and twang of nose,
If all be found within, disclose. Butler's Hudibras.

So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to als,
Harmonic twang of leather, horn and bras. Pope.

2. An affected modulation of the voice.
If he be but a person in vogue with the multitude, he can make popular, rambling, incoherent stuff, seasoned with twang and tautology, pass for high rhetoric. South's Sermons.

He has such a twang in his discourse, and ungraceful way of speaking thro' his nose, that one can hardly understand him. Arbutnot.

TWANG. interj. A word making a quick action, accompanied with a sharp sound. Little used, and little deserving to be used.
There's one, the best in all my quiver,
Twang! thro' his very heart and liver. Prior.

TWANGLING. adj. [from twang.] Contemptibly noisy.
She did call me rascal, fidler,
And twangling jack, with twenty such vile terms. Shak.

To TWANG. v. n. [Corrupted from twang.] To make to sound.
A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street with twanking of a brass kettle. Addison.

'TWAS. Contracted from it was. Dryd.
If he asks who bid thee, say 'twas I. Dryd.

To TWATTLE. v. n. [schwätzen, German.] To prate; to gabble; to chatter.
It is not for every twattling gossip to undertake. L'Estrange.

TWAW. For twain.
Gyon's angry blade so fierce did play
On th' other's helmet, which as Titan shone,
That quit it clove his plumed crest in twaw. Fairy Q.

TWAWBLADE. n. f. [Ophrys, Lat.] It hath a polypetalous flower, consisting of six dissimilar leaves, of which the five upper ones are so disposed, as to represent in some measure an helmet, the under one being headed and shaped like a man. The empalement becomes a fruit, perforated with three windows, to which adhere valves, pregnant with very small seeds like dust. Miller.

To TWEAG. v. a. [It is written twag by Skinner, but twag by other writers; twacken, German.] To pinch; to squeeze betwixt the fingers.
Who calls me villain, breaks my pate across,
Tweaks me by the nose. Shakesp.

What man talk'd with you yesternight
Out at your window betwixt twelve and one. Shakespeare.
On his left hand twelve reverend owls did fly:
So Romulus, 'tis sung, by Tyber's brook,
Preface of sway from twice six vultures, took. Dryden.
TWELFEMONTH. n. f. [twelve and month.] A year, as consisting of twelve months.
I shall laugh at this a twelvemonth hence. Shakespeare.
This year or twelvemonth, by reason that the moon's months are shorter than those of the sun, is about eleven days shorter than the sun's year. Holder.
Taking the shoots of the past spring and pegging them down in very rich earth perfectly consumed, watering them upon all occasions, by this time twelvemonth they will be ready to remove. Evlyn.
In the space of about a twelvemonth I have run out of a whole thousand pound upon her. Addison.
Not twice a twelvemonth you appear in print. Pope.
TWELFERENCE. n. f. [twelve and pence.] A shilling.
TWELFEPENNY. adj. [twelve and penny.] Sold for a shilling.
I would with no other revenge, from this rhyming judge of the twelvepenny gallery. Dryden.
TWELVESCORE. n. f. [twelve and score.] Twelve times twenty;
two hundred and forty.
Twelvemore virago's of the Spartan race. Dryden.
TWENTIEETH. adj. [twenticotha, Saxon.] Twice tenth; ordinal of twenty.
This year,
The twentieth from the firing the capitol,
As fatal too to Rome, by all predictions. Bon. Johnson.
The quantity of the fifteenth should be turned to a twentieth.
Bacon.
Why was not I the twentieth by descent
From a long reline race of droning kings? Dryden.
This crown now must be raised, and coined one twentieth lighter; which is nothing but changing the denomination, calling that a crown now, which yesterday was but a part,
viz. nineteen twentieths.
TWENTY. adj. [tjenzig, Saxon.]
1. Twice ten.
At least nineteen in twenty of these perplexing words might be changed into easy ones. Swift.
2. A proverbial or indefinite number.
Maximilian, upon twenty respects, could not have been the man. Bacon's Henry VII.
TWENTIL. n. f. [twy for two and billy, bipennis, Lat.] A halbert.
Alin.
TWICE. adv. [twigz, Saxon; twees, Dutch.]
1. Two times.
Upon his crest he struck him so,
That twice he reeled, ready twice to fall. Faby 2.
He twice essay'd to cast his son in gold;
Twice from his hands he drop'd the forming mould. Dryden.
2. Doubly.
A little sun you mourn, while most have met
With twice the joys, and by as vile a cheat. Dryden.
3. It is often used in composition.
Life is tedious as a twice told tale.
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man. Shakespeare.
Twice-born Bacchus burst the thund'rer's thigh,
And all the gods that wander thro' the sky. Creecb.
Extol the strength of a twice-conquer'd race. Dryden.
And what so tedious as a twice-told tale. Pope.
To TWIDLE. v. a. [This is commonly written tweedle.] To touch lightly. A low word.
With my fingers upon the flaps, I prest close upon it, and twiddled it in, first one side, then the other. Wifeman.
TWIG. n. f. [twiz, twizza, Saxon; twig, Dutch.] A small shoot of a branch; a twich tough and long.
The Britons had boats made of willow twigs, covered on the outside with hides, and so had the Venetians. Raleigh.
They chose the fig-tree, such as spread her arms,
Branching so broad and long, that in the ground
The bended twigs take root. Milton.
Can't thou with a weak angle strike the whale,
His huge jaw with a twig or bulrush bore? Sandy.
If they cut the twigs at evenings, a plentiful and pleasant juice comes out. More.
The tender twig shoots upwards to the skies. Dryden.
From parent bough
A cyon meetly lever: after force
A way into the crabsticks close wrought grain
By wedges, and within the living wound
In close the fatter twigs, around which spread
The binding clay. Philips.
TWIGGEN. adj. [from twig.] Made of twigs.
I'll beat the knave with a twiggen bottle. Shakespeare.
The fides and rim sewed together after the manner of twiggen work. Grew.
TWIGGY. adj. [from twig.] Full of twigs.
TWILIGHT. n. f. [twelichth, Dutch; zweeneloch, Saxon.]

TWI

The dubious or faint light before sunrise, and after sunset;
obscure light; uncertain view.
Her twilight were more clear than our mid-day. Donne.
Suspensions amongst thoughts, are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight. Certainly they are to be well guarded. Bacon.
A faint weak love of virtue, and of good,
Reflects from her on them, which understood
Her worth; and though she have shut in all day
The twilight of her memory doth stay. Donne.
He that saw hell in's melancholy dream,
And in the twilight of his phancy's theme Scar'd from his fins, repented in a fright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd profelyte. Cleveland.
Ambrosial night, with clouds exhal'd
From that high mount of God, whence light and shade
Spring both, the face of brightest heav'n had chang'd To grateful twilight. Milton's Par. Lost.
When the sun was down
They just arriv'd by twilight at a town. Dryden.
In the greatest part of our concernment he has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to our state of medi-crity. Lacke.
TWILIGHT. adj.
1. Not clearly or brightly illuminated; obscure; deeply shaded.
When the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me goddess bring
To arched walks of twilight groves,
O'er the twilight groves, and dusky caves,
Long-sounding firs, and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy firs, and round her throws
A death-like silence, and a dead repose. Pope.
2. Seen by twilight.
On old Lycæus or Cyllene hoar Trip no more in twilight ranks. Milton.
TWIN. n. f. [twin, Saxon; twelingen, Dutch.]
1. Children born at a birth. It is therefore seldom used in the singular; though sometimes it is used for one of twins.
In this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter; but let thine inherit first, for mine never shall. Shakespeare.
In bestowing
He was most princely: ever witness for him
Those twins of learning Ipswich and Oxford. Shakespeare.
If that moment of the time of birth be of such moment, whence proceedeth the great difference of the constitutions of twins, which, tho' together born, have strange and contrary fortunes. Drummond.
The divided dam
Runs to the fountains of her hungry lamb;
But when the twin cries halves, the quits the first. Cleveland.
They came twins from the womb, and still they live
As if they would go twins too to the grave. Onion.
Fair Leda's twins, in time to stars decreed,
One fought on foot, one curb'd the fiery steed. Dryden.
Had there been the same likeness in all men, as sometimes in twins, it would have given occasion to confusion. Grew.
2. Gemini, the sign of the zodiac.
This, when the sun retires,
First shines, and spreads black night with feeble fires,
Then parts the twins and crab. Creech.
When now no more, th' alternate twins are fir'd.
Short is the doubtful empire of the night. Thomson.
To TWIN. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To be born at the same birth.
He that is approv'd in this offence,
Though he had twin'd with me both at a birth,
Shall lose me. Shakespeare. Othello.
2. To bring two at once.
Ewes yearly by twinning rich masters do make. Tusser.
3. To be paired; to be suited.
Hath nature given them eyes,
Which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above and the twinned stones
Upon the humbl'd beach. Shakespeare.
O how inscrutable! his equity
Twins with his power. Sandy.
TWINBORN. adj. [twin and born.] Born at the same birth.
Our fins lay on the King; he must bear all.
O hard condition and twinborn with greatness. Shakespeare.
To TWINE. v. a. [twin, Saxon; twynan, Dutch.]
1. To twist or complicate so as to unite, or form one body or substance out of two or more.
Thou shalt make an hanging of blue, and fine twined linen, wrought with needlework. Exod. xxvi. 36.
2. I know not whether this is from twine or twin.
By original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells, Twin'd, and from her hath no dividual being. Milton.
3. To unite itself.
Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine
Their subtle essence with the soul of wine. Cresswell.

To TWINE. v. n. [from twine.]
1. To convolve itself; to wrap itself closely about.
Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine,
The victor cry'd, the glorious prize is mine! Pope.
2. To unite by interposition of parts.
Friends now fast sworn, who twine in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
On a dissolution of a doir, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakespeare.
3. To wind; to make flexures.
As rivers, though they bend and twine,
Still to the sea their course incline.
Or as philosophers who find
Some favorite system to their mind,
In every point to make it fit,
Will force all nature to submit.
The deer rattles thro' the twining brake. Swift.
Thomson.
TWIN. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A twisted thread.
Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most
In skillful knitting of soft filken twine,
A pointed sword hung threat'ning o'er his head,
Sustain'd but by a slender twine of thread. Dryden.
2. Twist; convolution.
Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine.
Welcome joy and feast,
Braid your locks with rosy twine,
Dropping odours, dropping wine,
Embrace; act of convolving itself round.
Everlasting hate
The vine to ivy bears, but with am'rous twine Claps the tall elm. Philips.
To TWINE. v. a. [twingen, German; twinge, Danish.]
1. To torment with sudden and short pain.
The great charg'd into the nostrils of the lion, and there twing'd him till he made him tear himself, and so matter'd him. L'Estrange.
2. To pinch; to tweak.
When a man is past his sense,
There's no way to reduce him thence,
But twinging him by th' ears and nose,
Or laying on of heavy blows. Hudibras.
TWIN. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Short sudden sharp pain.
The wickedness of this old villain startles me, and gives me a twinge for my own sin, though far short of his. Dryden.
2. A tweak; a pinch.
How can you fawn upon a master that gives you so many blows and twinges by the ears. L'Estrange.
TWINK. n. f. [See TWINKLE.] The motion of an eye;
a moment. Not in use.
She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied to fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink the won me to her love. Shakespeare.
To TWINKLE. v. n. [twinculan, Saxon.]
1. To sparkle; to flash irregularly; to shine with intermitted light; to shine faintly; to quiver.
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun.
As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty. Shakespeare.
Some their forked tails stretch forth on high,
And tear the twinkling stars from trembling sky. Fairfax.
God comprises all the goods we value in the creatures, as the sun doth the light that twinkles in the stars. Boyle.
The star of love,
That twinkles you to fair Almeyda's bed. Dryden.
Think you your new French profelytes are come
To starve abroad, because they starv'd at home,
Your benefices twinkl'd from afar. Dryden.
So weak your charms, that like a winter's night,
Twinkling with stars, they freeze me while they light. Dryden.
These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture, tremble each of them apart; and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremors, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.
2. To open and shut the eye by turns.
The owl fell a moping and twinkling. L'Estrange.
3. To play irregularly.
His eyes will twinkle, and his tongue will roll,
As tho' he beck'ned, and call'd back his soul. Donne.
TWINKLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
TWINKLING. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A sparkling intermitted light; a motion of the eye.

TWI

Suddenly, with twinkling of her eye,
The daniel broke his misintended dart. Spenser.
I come, I come; the least twinkling had brought me to thee. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
2. A short space, such as is taken up by a motion of the eye.
Money can thy wants at will supply,
Shields, steeds, and arms, and all things for thee meet,
It can pourvey in twinkling of an eye. Fairy Queen.
These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rainbow; when the actor gilds them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryden.
The action, passion, and manners of so many persons in a picture, are to be discerned in the twinkling of an eye, if the sight could travel over so many different objects all at once. Dryden.
TWINLING. n. f. [diminutive of twin.] A twin lamb; a lamb of two brought at a birth.
Twinnings increase bring. Tusser's Husb.
TWINNER. n. f. [from twin.] A breeder of twins.
Ewes yearly by twinning rich masters do make.
The lambs of such twinnings for breeders go take. Tusser.
To TWIRL. v. a. [from whirl.] To turn round; to move by a quick rotation.
Wool and raw silk by moisture incorporate with other thread; especially if there be a little wreathing, as appeareth by the twirling and twirling about of spindles. Bacon.
Dextrous damels twirl the sprinkling mop. Gay.
See ruddy maids,
Some taught with dextrous hand to twirl the wheel. Dodg.
TWIRL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Rotation; circular motion.
2. Twist; convolution.
The twirl on this is different from that of the others; this being an heterostroph, the twirls turning from the right-hand to the left. Woodward on Fossils.
To TWIST. v. a. [tjwisten, Saxon; twisten, Dutch.]
1. To form by complication; to form by convolution.
Do but despair,
And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twis'd from her womb,
Will strangle thee. Shakespeare.
To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned, that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and still he twisted on, suffering an ass to eat up all that was finished. Taylor.
Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would the in friendship, peace, and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty,
And should we both in this condition,
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition,
Else these two passions by the way,
May chance to shew us feurvy play. Prior.
The task were harder to secure my own
Against the pow'r of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind. Lytleton.
2. To contort; to writhe.
Either double it into a pyramidal, or twist it into a serpentine form. Pope.
3. To wreath; to wind; to encircle by something round about.
There are pillars of smoke twisted about with wreaths of flame. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. To form; to weave.
If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it,
And thou shalt have her: was't not to this end
That thou began'st to twist to fine a story? Shakespeare.
5. To unite by intertexture of parts.
All that know how prodigal
Of thy great soul thou art, longing to twist
Bays with that joy, which to early kiss Thy youthful temples, with what horror we Think on the blind events of war. Waller.
6. To unite; to intimate.
When avarice twists itself, not only with the practice of men, but the doctrines of the church; when ecclesiasticks dispute for money, the mischief seems fatal. Decay of Piety.
To TWIST. v. n. To be contorted; to be convolved.
In an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is a circumvolution or inflexion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Deep in her breast he plung'd the shining sword;
Th'Inachians view the slain with vast surprise,
Her twisting volumes, and her rolling eyes. Pope.
TWIST. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Any thing made by convolution, or winding two bodies together.
Minerva nurs'd him
Within a twist of twining others laid. Addison.

2. A single string of a cord.
Winding a thin string about the work, hazards its breaking by the fretting of the several twists against one another. Maxon's Mech. Exer.
3. A cord; a string.
Through those labyrinths, not my growling wit,
But thy silk twist, let down from heav'n to me,
Did both conduct and teach me, how by it
To climb to thee. Herbert.
About his chin the twist
He ty'd, and soon the strang'd soul dismiss'd. Dryden.
4. Contortion; writhe.
Not the least turn or twist in the fibres of any one animal, which does not render them more proper for that particular animal's way of life than any other cast or texture. Addison.
5. The manner of twisting.
Jack shrunk at first light of it; he found fault with the length, the thickness, and the twist. Arbutnot.
Twister. n. f. [from twist.] One who twists; a ropemaker.
To this word I have annexed some remarkable lines, which explain twist in all its senses.
When a twister a-twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist, he three twines doth intertwist;
But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwirling the twine that untwisteth between,
He twists with his twister the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twitcheth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twines were intertwined, he now doth untwine, Twixt the twain intertwisting a twine more between,
He, twisting his twister, makes a twist of the twine. Wallis.
To Twist. v. a. [Septian, Saxon.] To finer; to flout; to reproach.
When approaching the stormy flowers,
We mought with our shoulders bear off the sharp showers,
And sooth to faine, nought seemeth like strife,
That shepherds to twist each other's life. Spenser.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twist me with my falsehood to my friend. Shakespeare.
Eloping minds men of their errors without twisting them for what's amiss.
This these scoffers twisted the Christians with. Tillotson.
Galen bled his patients, till by fainting they could bear no longer; for which he was twisted in his own time. Baker.
To Twit. v. a. [Septian, Saxon.] To vellicate; to pluck with a quick motion; to snatch; to pluck with a hasty motion.
He rose, and twit'd his mantle blue,
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new. Milton.
Twit'd by the sleeve he mouths it more and more. Dryden's Juvenal.
With a furious leap
She sprang from bed, disturbed in her mind,
And fear'd at every step a twitching fright behind. Dryd.
Thrice they twit'd the diamond in her ear. Pope.
Twit. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick pull; a sudden vellication.
But Hudibras give him a twit,
As quick as lightning in the breech. Hudibras.
The lion gave one hearty twit, and got his feet out of the trap, but left his claws behind. L'Estrange.
2. A painful contraction of the fibres.
Other confederate pairs
Contract the fibres, and the twitch produces,
Which gently pushes on the grateful food
To the wide stomach, by its hollow road. Blackmore.
Mighty physical fear is,
For soon as noise of combat near is,
Their heart descending to their breeches, Must give their stomachs cruel twitches. Prior.
A fit of the stone is the cure, from the inflammation and pain occasioning convulsive twitches. Sharp.
*Twit*grass. n. f. A plant.
Twit-grass is a weed that keeps some land loose, hollow, and draws away the virtue of the ground. Mortimer.
To Twit. v. n.
1. To make a sharp tremulous intermitted noise.
This must be done,
Swallows twit on the chimney-tops. Dryden.
They twit cheerful, till the vernal months Invite them back. Thomson.
2. To be suddenly moved with any inclination. A low word.
A widow which had a *twit*ing toward a second husband, took a gossiping companion to manage the job. L'Estr.
Twit. n. f. Any motion or disorder of passion; such as a violent fit of laughing, or fit of fretting.
The ancient errant knights
Won all their ladies hearts in fights,
And cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into amorous twitters. Hudibras.

- The moon was in a heavy twitter, that her cloaths never fitted her.
- Twitter*. n. f. [A ludicrous reduplication of twattle.] Tattle; gabble. A vile word.
Insipid *twitter*ing, frothy jests, and jingling witticisms, inure us to a misunderstanding of things. L'Estrange.
Twixt. A contraction of between.
Twilight, short arbit'r twixt day and night. Milton.
Two. adj. [Gothic; Saxon.]
1. One and one.
Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth;
Between two blades, which bears the better temper;
Between two horses, which doth bear him best;
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,
I have some shallow spirit of judgment. Shakespeare.
Three words it will three times report, and then the two sympnum, are a great help to the hearing. Wijeman.
Two. n. f. [from twynum, Lat.] A kind of obstructed flatulence that swells the body like a drum.
Hope, the christian grace, must be proportioned and at-temperate to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and twynum of hope. Ham.
He does not shew us Rome great suddenly,
As if the empire were a twynum,
But gives it natural growth, tells how and why
The little body grew so large and high. Suckling.
Others that affect
A lofty stile, swell to a twynum. Rescommen.
Pride is no more than an unnatural twynum, that rises in a bubble, and spends itself in a blast? L'Estrange.
Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a twynum of sense.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ.
But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.
The air is so rarified in this kind of dropical tumour as makes it hard and tight like a drum, and from thence it is called a twynum. Arbutnot.
Tynny. adj. Small.
He that has a little tynny wit,
Must make content with his fortunes fit. Shakespeare.
Type. n. f. [type, Fr. typus, Lat. τύπος.]
1. Emblem; mark of something.
Clean renouncing
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short bolster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understanding again the honest men. Shakespeare.
Thy emblem, gracious queen, the British rose,
Type of sweet rule, and gentle majesty. Prior.
2. That by which something future is prefigured.
Informing them by types
And shadows of that destin'd feed to bruise
The serpent, by what means he shall achieve
Mankind's deliverance. Milton.
The apostle shews the Christian religion to be in truth and substance what the Jewish was only in type and shadow. Tillotson's Sermons.
3. A stamp; a mark not in use.
Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman. Shakespeare.
What good is cover'd with the face of heav'n
To be discovered, that can do me good?
—I had advancement of your children, gentle lady,
—Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads;
—No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory. Shakespeare.
4. A printing letter.
Typick. n. f. [typique, Fr. typicus, Lat.] Emblematical;
Typical. n. f. figurative of something else.
The Levitical priesthood was only typical of the christian;
which is so much more holy and honourable than that, as the institution of Christ is more excellent than that of Moses. Asterbury.
Hence that many counters ran,
Hand-in-hand, a roodly train,
To bless the great Eliza's reign;
And in the typic glory shew
What fuller bliss Maria shall bestow. Prior.
Typically. adv. [from typical.] In a typical manner.
This excellent communicativeness of the divine nature is typically represented, and mysteriously exemplified by the Por-phyrian scale of being. Norris.
Typicalness. n. f. [from typical.] The state of being typical.
To Typify. v. a. [from type.] To figure; to shew in emblem.
The resurrection of Christ hath the power of a pattern to us, and is so typified in baptism, as an engagement to rise to newness of life. Hammond.
Our Saviour was typified indeed by the goat that was slain; at the effusion of whole blood, not only the hard hearts of his enemies relented, but the stony rocks and vail of the temple were shattered. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

- My speeches would send up unheeded pray'r:
The scorn of life would be but wild despair:
A typ's found were better than my voice,
My faith were form, my eloquence were noise. Prior.
Type. n. f. [See TYPE.] Type in Scottish still denotes a dog, or one as contemptible and vile as a dog, and from thence perhaps comes typage.
Bale type, call'st thou me host? now,
By this hand, I swear I scorn the term. Shakespeare.
TYMPANITES. n. f. [τυμπανίτης, from τυμπανον, to found like a drum.] That particular sort of dropsy that swells the belly up like a drum, and is often cured by tapping.
TYMPANUM. n. f. A drum; a part of the ear, so called from its resemblance to a drum.
The three little bones in meatu auditorio, by firming the tympnum, are a great help to the hearing. Wijeman.
TYMPANY. n. f. [from tympnum, Lat.] A kind of obstructed flatulence that swells the body like a drum.
Hope, the christian grace, must be proportioned and at-temperate to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympny of hope. Ham.
He does not shew us Rome great suddenly,
As if the empire were a tympny,
But gives it natural growth, tells how and why
The little body grew so large and high. Suckling.
Others that affect
A lofty stile, swell to a tympny. Rescommen.
Pride is no more than an unnatural tympny, that rises in a bubble, and spends itself in a blast? L'Estrange.
Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympny of sense.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ.
But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.
The air is so rarified in this kind of dropical tumour as makes it hard and tight like a drum, and from thence it is called a tympny. Arbutnot.
Tyny. adj. Small.
He that has a little tyny wit,
Must make content with his fortunes fit. Shakespeare.
Type. n. f. [type, Fr. typus, Lat. τύπος.]
1. Emblem; mark of something.
Clean renouncing
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short bolster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understanding again the honest men. Shakespeare.
Thy emblem, gracious queen, the British rose,
Type of sweet rule, and gentle majesty. Prior.
2. That by which something future is prefigured.
Informing them by types
And shadows of that destin'd feed to bruise
The serpent, by what means he shall achieve
Mankind's deliverance. Milton.
The apostle shews the Christian religion to be in truth and substance what the Jewish was only in type and shadow. Tillotson's Sermons.
3. A stamp; a mark not in use.
Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman. Shakespeare.
What good is cover'd with the face of heav'n
To be discovered, that can do me good?
—I had advancement of your children, gentle lady,
—Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads;
—No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory. Shakespeare.
4. A printing letter.
Typick. n. f. [typique, Fr. typicus, Lat.] Emblematical;
Typical. n. f. figurative of something else.
The Levitical priesthood was only typical of the christian;
which is so much more holy and honourable than that, as the institution of Christ is more excellent than that of Moses. Asterbury.
Hence that many counters ran,
Hand-in-hand, a roodly train,
To bless the great Eliza's reign;
And in the typic glory shew
What fuller bliss Maria shall bestow. Prior.
Typically. adv. [from typical.] In a typical manner.
This excellent communicativeness of the divine nature is typically represented, and mysteriously exemplified by the Por-phyrian scale of being. Norris.
Typicalness. n. f. [from typical.] The state of being typical.
To Typify. v. a. [from type.] To figure; to shew in emblem.
The resurrection of Christ hath the power of a pattern to us, and is so typified in baptism, as an engagement to rise to newness of life. Hammond.
Our Saviour was typified indeed by the goat that was slain; at the effusion of whole blood, not only the hard hearts of his enemies relented, but the stony rocks and vail of the temple were shattered. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

- TYPOGRAPHER*. ad. [τύπος and γράφω.] A printer.
TYPOGRAPHICAL. adj. [from typography.]
1. Emblematical; figurative.
2. Belonging to the printer's art.
TYPOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from typographical.]
1. Emblematically; figuratively.
2. After the manner of printers.
TYPOGRAPHY. n. f. [τυπογραφία, Fr. typographie, Lat. typographia.]
1. Emblematical, figurative, or hieroglyphical representation.
Those diminutive and pamphlet treasures daily published amongst us, are pieces containing rather typography than verity. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
2. The art of printing.
TYRANNESS. n. f. [from tyrant.] A the tyrant.
They were by law of that proud tyranny,
Provok'd with wrath and envy's false surmise. Fairy Qu.
The tyranny doth joy to see
The huge massacres which her eyes do make. Spenser.
TYRANNICAL. n. f. [tyrannus, Latin; tyrannique, French; τυραννικός, Greek.] Suing a tyrant; acting like a tyrant; cruel; despotick; imperious.
Charge him home that affects Tyrannic power. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakespeare.
Domitian had been tyrannical; and in his time many noble houses were overthrown by false accusations. Bacon.
Our sects a more tyrannic power assume,
And would for scorpions change the rods of Rome. Ros.
Subdue and quell, o'er all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannic pow'r. Milton.
If the spirit of a subject be rebellious, in a prince it will be tyrannical and intolerable. Taylor.
She hath recourse
To tears and prayers, again she feels the smart
Of a fresh wound from the tyrannic dart. Denham.
And by the nobles, by his common curst,
Th' oppressor rul'd tyrannic where he durst;
Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod,
And treats alike his vassals and his God. Pope.
TYRANNICALLY. adv. [from tyrannical.] In manner of a tyrant.
TYRANNICIDE. n. f. [tyrannus and cædo, Latin.] The act of killing a tyrant.
To TYRANNISE. v. n. [tyraniser, Fr. from tyrant.] To play the tyrant; to act with rigour and imperiousness.
While we trust in the mercy of God thro' Christ Jesus, fear will not be able to tyrannise over us. Hooker.
Then can Carausius tyrannise anew,
And gant the Romans bent their proper power,
And so Alectus treacherously flew,
And took on him the robe of Emperor. Fairy Queen.
I made thee miserable.
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him, that thus doth tyrannise o'er me. Shakespeare.
A crew, whom like ambition joins
With him, or under him to tyrannise. Milton.
Beauty had crown'd you, and you must have been
The whole world's mistress, other than a queen;
All had been rivals, and you might have spar'd,
Or kill'd and tyrannise without a guard. Waller.
He does violence to his own faculties, tyrannise over his own mind, and usurps the prerogative that belongs to truth alone, which is to command assent by its own authority. Locke's Works.
TYRANNOUS. adj. [from tyrant.] Tyrannical; despotick; arbitrary; severe; cruel; imperious. Not in use.
It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their masterhood nothing without doing injury to them. Sidney.
Lately grown into a loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold an usurper. Spenser.
Betwixt two charming wards, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakespeare.
Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton.
'Tis excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant. Shakespeare.
Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas!
Than the queen's life. Shakespeare.
After the death of this tyrannous and ambitious king, these writings came abroad. Temple.
TYRANNY. n. f. [tyrannis, Latin; τυραννία, Greek; tyrannie, Fr.]
1. Absolute monarchy imperiously administered.
Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and, in th' excess of joy,
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton.

TYR

- The cities fell often under tyrannies, which spring naturally out of popular governments. Temple.
2. Unrefined and cruel power. Boundless intemperance. In nature is a tyranny; it hath been Th'untimely emptying of the happy throne, And fall of many kings. Shakespeare.
3. Cruel government; rigorous command. Bleed, bleed, poor country! Great tyranny lay thou thy bane sure, For goodness dares not check thee. Shakespeare.
- Suspicious dispose kings to tyranny, and husbands to jealousy. Bacon.
- God in judgment just, Subjects him from without to violent lords; Who oft as undeservedly intral His outward freedom; tyranny must be. Milton.
4. Severity; rigour; inclemency. The tyranny o' the open night's too rough For nature to endure. Shakespeare's King Lear.
- TYRANT. n. f. [τύραννος; tyrannus, Latin.] Rowland contends that this word, with the correspondent Greek and Latin, is derived from tir, Welch and Erse, land, and rhanner, Welch, to share, q. d. tirbanner, a sharer, or divider of and among his vassals.]

TYRANT

1. An absolute monarch governing imperiously. Temple.
2. A cruel despotick and severe master; an oppressor. Love to a yielding heart is a king, but to a resisting is a tyrant. Sidney, b. i.
- I would not be the villain that thou think'st, For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp, And the rich east to boot. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- Dissembling courtesy! how fine this tyrant Can tickle where she wounds! Shakespeare's Cymb.
- The house of woe, and dungeon of our tyrant. Milton.
- Consider those grand agents and lieutenants of the devil, by whom he scourges and plagues the world under him, to wit, tyrants; and was there ever any tyrant who was not also false and perfidious! South's Sermon.
- Thou meant'st to kill a tyrant, not a king. Dryden.
- When tyrant custom had not shackl'd man, But free to follow nature was the mode. Thomson.
- TYRE. n. f. [Properly tire.] See TIRE. I have seen her best and bedecked all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about the tyre of her head. Hakewill on Providence.
- TYRO. n. f. [Properly tiro, as in the Latin.] One yet not master of his art; one in his rudiments. There stands a structure on a rising hill, Where tyros take their freedom out to kill. Garth's Disp.

U.

V.

- Has two powers, expressed in modern English by two characters, V consonant and U vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.
- U*, the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obscure; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obscure.
- V*, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f, distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.
- VACANCY. n. f. [from vacant.]
1. Empty space; vacancy. How is't That thus you bend your eye on vacancy, And with th'incorporal air do hold discourse? Sh. Hamlet.
2. Chasm; space unfilled. The reader finds a wide vacancy, and knows not how to transport his thoughts to the next particular, for want of some connecting idea. Watts's Logic.
3. [Vacant, Fr.] State of a post or employment when it is unfilled. In the vacancy of a bishop, the guardian of the spiritualities was summoned to parliament in the bishop's room. Ayliffe.
4. [Vacant, Fr.] Time of leisure; relaxation; intermission; time unengaged. If, sometimes, each other's eyes we meet, Those little vacancies from toil are sweet. Dryd. St. of In.
- The daily intervals of time and vacancies from necessary labour, together with the one day in seven in the christian world, allow sufficient time. Watts.
5. Littlefness; emptiness of thought. When alone, or in company, they fit still without doing any thing, I like it worse; for all dispositions to idleness or vacancy, even before they are habits, are dangerous. Watson.
- VACANT. adj. [vacant, Fr. vacant, Latin.]
1. Empty; unfilled; void. Why should the air so impetuously rush into the cavity of the receiver, if there were before no vacant room to receive it. Boyle's Works.
2. A better race to bring into their vacant room. Milton.
3. Free; unencumbered; uncrowded. Religion is the interest of all; but philosophy of those only that are at leisure, and vacant from the affairs of the world. More's Divine Dialogues.
- A very little part of our life is so vacant from uneasiness, as to leave us free to the attraction of remoter good. Locke.
3. Not filled by an incumbent, or possessor. Left the fiend invade vacant possession. Milton.
- Others when they allowed the throne vacant, thought the succession should immediately go to the next heir. Swift.
4. Being at leisure; disengaged. They which have the government, scatter the army abroad, and place them in villages to take their victuals of them, at such vacant times as they lie not in camp. Sponser.
- Sir John Berkeley was the more vacant for that service, by the reduction of Barnstable. Clarendon.
- The memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and prevents any chains of thought, by ideas of what is past. Adison.
5. Thoughtless; empty of thought; not busy. Who, with a body fill'd, and vacant mind, Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread. Shakes.
- The duke had a pleasant and vacant face, proceeding from a singular assurance in his temper. Watson's Buck.
- Some vain amusement of a vacant soul. Irene.
- To VACATE. v. a. [vacat, Latin.]
1. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority.

VAC

V.

- That after-act vacating the authority of the precedent, tells the world that some remorse touched even Strafford's most implacable enemies. K. Charles.
2. To make vacant; to quit possession of.
3. To defeat; to put an end to. He vacates my revenge; For while he trusts me, 'twere so base a part To fawn, and yet betray. Dryden.
- VACATION. n. f. [vacation, Fr. vacatio, Latin.]
1. Intermission of juridical proceedings, or any other stated employments; recess of courts or senates. Crowl.
- Vacation* is all that time which passes between term and term, at London. As these clerks want not their full task of labour during the open term, so there is for them whereupon to be occupied in the vacation only. Bacon Off. of Alienat.
2. Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity. Benefit of peace, quiet, and vacation for piety, have rendered it necessary in every christian commonwealth, by laws to secure propriety. Hammond's Fundamentals.
- VACCARY. n. f. [vacca, Latin.] a cow-house; a cow-pasture. Bailey.
- VACILLANCY. n. f. [vacillans, from vacillo, Lat. vacillant, Fr.] A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconstancy. Not much in use. I deny that all mutability implies imperfection, though some does, as that vacillancy in human souls, and such mutations as are found in corporeal matter. More's Divine Dialogues.
- VACILLATION. n. f. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Lat. vacillation, Fr.] The act or state of reeling or staggering. The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation. Derham.
- VACUIST. n. f. [from vacuum.] A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.
- Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter. Boyle.
- VACUATION. n. f. [vacuus, Latin.] The act of emptying. Diet.
- VACUITY. n. f. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Lat. vacuité, Fr.]
1. Emptiness; State of being unfilled. Hunger is such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment. Arbutnot.
2. Space unfilled; space unoccupied. In filling up vacuities, turning out shadows and ceremonies, by explicit prescription of substantial duties, which those shadows did obscurely represent. Hammond's Fund.
- He, that feat soon failing, meets A vast vacuity. Milton.
- Body and space are quite different things, and a vacuity is interspersed among the particles of matter. Bentley.
- God, who alone can answer all our longings, and fill every vacuity of our soul, should intirely possess our heart. Rogers.
3. Inanity; want of reality. The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects: but if they'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacuity and emptiness. Glauco.
- VACUOUS. adj. [vacuus, Lat. vacuus, Fr.] Empty; unfilled. Boundless the deep, because I AM who fill Infinitude: nor vacuous the space. Milton's Par. Lost.
- VACUUM. n. f. [Latin.] Space unoccupied by matter. Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will shew us some good practical lessons. Watts.
- To VADE. v. n. [vade, Latin.] To vanish; to pass away. Sponser.
- A word useful in poetry, but not received. Be ever gloried here thy sovereign name, That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made; Whose frown alone can shake this earthly frame, And at whose touch the hills in smoke shall vade. Watson.
- VAGABOND. adj. [vagabundus, low Latin. vagabond, Fr.]
1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

V A I

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death;
Vagabond exile: yet I would not buy Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shaksp. Cor.
A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 2. Wandering; vagrant. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 This common body,
 Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
 Goes to, and back, lapping the varying tide.
 Their prayers by envious winds Blown vagabond or frustrate. Milton.
VAGABOND. n. f. [from the adj.]
 1. A vagrant; a wanderer, commonly, in a sense of reproach.
 We call those people wanderers and vagabonds, that have no dwelling-place. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Reduced, like Hannibal, to seek relief
 From court to court, and wander up and down
 A vagabond in Africa. Addison's Cato.
 2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.
Vagabond is a person without a home. Watts.
VAGARY. n. f. [from vagus, Latin.] A wild freak; a capricious frolic.
 They chang'd their minds,
 Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
 As they would dance. Milton's Par. Lost. b. vi. l. 613.
 Would your son engage in some frolic, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with, than without your knowledge? Locke on Education, § 97.
VAGINOFENOUS. n. f. [vagina and fenus, Latin.] Sheath-winged; having the wings covered with hard scales.
VAGUS. adj. [vagus, Lat. vagus, Fr.] Wandering; unsettled. Not in use.
 Such as were born and begot of a single woman, thro' a vagus lust, were called Sporii. Ayliffe.
VAGRANCY. n. f. [from vagrant.] A state of wandering;
 unsettled condition.
VAGRANT. adj. Wandering; unsettled; vagabond; unfixed in place.
 Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and fictitious stories. Mare's Divine Dialogues.
 Take good heed what men will think and say;
 That beautiful Emma vagrant courtes took,
 Her father's house, and civil life forsook. Prior.
 Her lips no living hard, I weat,
 May say how red, how round, how sweet;
 Old Homer only could indite
 Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:
 They stand recorded in his book,
 When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke. Prior.
VAGRANT. n. f. [vagrant, Fr.] A sturdy beggar; wanderer; vagabond; man unsettled in habitation. In an ill sense.
Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view,
 Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill. Prior.
 You'll not the progress of your atoms stay,
 Nor to collect the vagrants find a way. Blackmore.
 To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievous, are things of evident use. F. Atterbury.
 Ye vagrants of the sky,
 To right or left, unheeded, take your way. Pope.
VAGUE. adj. [vagus, Fr. vagus, Latin.]
 1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.
 Gray encouraged his men to set upon the vague villains, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight. Hayward.
 2. Unfixed; unsettled; undetermined; indefinite.
 The perception of beings, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever and thing, than it does to any other ideas. Locke.
VAIL. n. f. [voile, French.] This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Latin; and the verb veil, from the verb velo; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the French.
 1. A curtain; a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.
 While they supposed to lie hid in their secret sins, they were scattered under a dark vail of forgetfulness. Wisdom.
 2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.
 3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural.
 See VALE.
 To VAIL. v. a. To cover. See VEIL.
 To VAIL. v. a. [avaller le bonet, French.]
 1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.
 They fitly refused to vail their bonnets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by seafarers. Carew.
 The virgin 'gan her beavior vails,
 And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale. Fairfax.
 2. To let fall in token of respect.
 Certain of the Turks galley, which would not vail their top-masts, the Venetians fiercely assailed. Knolly's Hist.
 They had not the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Add.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.
 That furious Scot,
 'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
 Of those that turn'd their backs. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 To VAIL. v. n. To yield; to give place; to shew respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written veil.
 Thy convenience must vail to thy neighbour's necessity;
 and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity. South.
VAIN. adj. [vain, Fr. vanus, Latin.]
 1. Fruitless; ineffectual.
 Let no man speak again
 To alter this; for counsel is but vain. Shaksp. As You Like It.
Vain is the force of man,
 To crush the pillars which the pile sustains. Dryden.
 2. Empty; unreal; shadowy.
 Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,
 Gorgons, Geryon with his triple frame,
 And vain chimera, vomits empty flame. Dryden's Æn.
 Unmov'd his eyes, and wet his beard appears;
 And shedding vain, but seeming real tears. Dryden.
 3. Meanly proud; proud of petty things.
 No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be still boasting of himself. L'Estr.
 He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
 Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.
 The minstrels play'd on ev'ry side,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery v'y'd. Dryden.
 To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride.
Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like;
 by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told: whereas a man truly proud, thinks the honours below his merits, and comes to boast. Swift.
 Ah friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
 To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.
 View this marble, and be vain no more. Pope.
 4. Shewy; ostentatious.
 Load some vain church with old theatrical state. Pope.
 5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.
 Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
 Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
 Or happiness. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
 That all the actions of our life were vain,
 Which with our sense of pleasure not conspir'd. Denham.
 To your vain answer will you have recourse,
 And tell 'tis ingenuit active force. Blackmore.
 6. False; not true.
 7. In VAIN. To no purpose; to no end; ineffectually; without effect.
 He tempts in vain. Milton.
 Providence and nature never did any thing in vain. L'Estr.
 Strong Halys stands in vain; weak Phlegys flies. Dryd.
 The philosophers of old did in vain enquire whether jumum bonum consisted in riches, bodily delights, virtue, or contemplation.
 If we hope for what we are not likely to possess, we act and think in vain, and make life a greater dream and shadow than it really is. Addison's Spectator.
 If from this discourse one honest man shall receive satisfaction, I shall think that I have not written nor lived in vain. West on the Resurrection.
VAIN-GLORIOUS. adj. [vanus and gloriosus, Latin.] Boasting without performances; proud in disproportion to desert.
Vain-glorious man, when flut'ring wind does blow,
 In his light wings is lifted up to sky. Fairfax.
 Strength to glory aspires
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.
 This his arrogant and vain-glorious expression witnesseth. Hale.
VAIN-GLORY. n. f. [vana gloria, Latin.] Pride above merit; empty pride; pride in little things.
 He had nothing of vain-glory, but yet kept state and majesty to the height; being sensible, that majesty maketh the people bow, but vain-glory boweth to them. Bacon's Hen. VII.
 Expose every blast of vain-glory, every idle thought, to be chastened by the rod of spiritual discipline. Taylor.
 This extraordinary person, out of his natural aversion to vain-glory, wrote several pieces, which he did not assume the honour of. Addison.
 A monarch's sword, when mad vain-glory draws;
 Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's fear. Pope.
VAINLY. adv. [from vain.]
 1. Without effect; to no purpose; in vain.
 Our cannons malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shaksp.
 In weak complaints you vainly waste your breath;
 They are not tears that can revenge his death. Dryden.
 2. Proudly; arrogantly.
 My forepast proofs, howe'er the matter fall, Shall

Shall tax my fears of little vanity. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 Having vainly fear'd too little.
 Humility teaches us to think neither vainly nor vauntingly of ourselves. Delany.
 3. Idly; foolishly.
 Nor vainly hope to be invulnerable. Milton.
 If Lentulus be ambitious, he shall be vainly credulous;
 presuming his advancement to be decreed by the Sybilline oracles. Grew's Cosmol.
VAINNESS. n. f. [from vain.] The state of being vain. Pride;
 falsehood; emptiness.
 I hate ingratitude more in a man,
 Than lying, vainness, babbling. Shaksp. As You Like It.
VAIVODE. n. f. [vaivod, a governor, Slavonian.] A prince of the Dacian provinces.
VALANCE. n. f. [from Valencia, whence the use of them came. Skinner.] The fringes or drapery hanging round the tetter and stead of a bed.
 My house
 Is richly furnished with plate and gold;
Valance of Venice, gold in needlework. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 Thrust the valance of the bed, that it may be full in fight. Swift.
 To VALANCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with drapery. Not in use.
 Old friend, thy face is valanc'd since
 I saw thee last; com'st thou to beard me. Shaksp.
VALE. n. f. [val, Fr. valis, Latin.]
 1. A low ground; a valley; a place between two hills. Vale is a poetical word.
 In Ida vale: who knows not Ida vale? Spenser.
 An hundred shepherds woned.
 Met in the vale of Arde. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.
 Anchises, in a flow'ry vale,
 Review'd his muster'd race, and took the tale. Dryden.
 2. [From avail, profit; or vale, farewell. If from avail, it must be written vail, as Dryden writes. If from vale, which I think is right, it must be vale.] Money given to servants.
 Since our knights and senators account
 To what their lord, begging vails amount;
 Judge what a wretched share the poor attends,
 Whole whole subsistence on those alms depends. Dryden.
 His revenue, besides vales, amounted to thirty pounds. Swift.
VALEDICTION. n. f. [valedico, Lat.] A farewell.
 A valediction forbidding to weep. Donne.
VALEDICTORY. adj. [from valedico, Lat.] Bidding farewell.
VALENTINE. n. f. A sweetheart, chosen on Valentine's day.
 Now all nature seem'd in love,
 And birds had drawn their valemtins. Watson.
VALENTIAN. n. f. [valerianus, Lat. valerian, Fr.] A plant.
 The leaves grow by pairs opposite upon the stalks; the flower consists of one leaf, divided into five segments; these are succeeded by oblong flat seeds. Miller.
VALET. n. f. [vale, French.] A waiting servant.
 Giving cast-clothes to be worn by valeits, has a very ill effect upon little minds. Addison.
VALETUDINARIAN. adj. [valeudinaire, Fr. valeudo, Lat.]
VALETUDINARY. n. f. Weakly; sickly; infirm of health.
 Phlegm, by purging noxious humours, prevents sickness in the healthy, or recoules thereof in the valeudinary. Broune.
 Shifting from the warmer vallies, to the colder hills, or from the hills to the vales, is a great benefit to the valeudinarian, feeble part of mankind. Derham.
 Cold of winter, by stopping the pores of perspiration, keeps the warmth more within; whereby there is a greater quantity of spirits generated in healthful animals, for the case is quite otherwise in valeudinary ones. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
Valetudinarians must live where they can command and scold.
VALIANCE. n. f. [from valiant; valiance, Fr.] Valour; personal puissance; fierceness; bravery.
 With stiff force he shook his mortal lance,
 To let him meet his doughty valiance. Spenser.
VALIANT. adj. [vaillant, French.] Stout; personally puisant; brave.
 Only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles. 1 Sam. xviii. 17.
 A son of Jesse, a mighty valiant man. 1 Sam. xvi. 18.
VALIANTLY. adv. [from valiant.] Stoutly; with personal strength; with personal bravery.
 Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:
 Thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shaksp.
 It was the duty of a good soldier valiantly to withstand his enemies, and not to be troubled with any evil hap. Knollys.
VALIANTNESS. n. f. [from valiant.] Valour; personal bravery; puissance; fierceness; stoutness.
 Thy valiantness was mine; thou fuck'dst it from me. Sh.
 Achmetes having won the top of the walls, by the valiant-ness of the defenders was forced to retire. Knollys.
 Shew not thy valiantness in wine. Eccles. xxxi. 25.
VALID. adj. [validus, Fr. validus, Latin.]
 1. Strong; powerful; efficacious; prevalent.

V A L

Perhaps more valid arms;
 Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
 May serve to better us, and worke our foes. Milton.
 2. Having force; prevalent; weighty; conclusive.
 A difference in their sentiments as to particular questions, is no valid argument against the general truth believed by them, but rather a clearer and more solid proof of it. Stephens.
VALIDITY. n. f. [validitas, Fr. from valid.]
 1. Force to convince; certainty.
 You are persuaded of the validity of that famous verse,
 'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Pope.
 2. Value. A sense not used.
 To thee and thine,
 Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
 No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
 Than that conferr'd on Gonerill. Shaksp. As You Like It.
VALANCY. n. f. [from valance.] A large wig that shades the face.
 But you, loud Sirs, who through your curls look big,
 Criticks in plume and white valancy wig. Dryden.
VALLEY. n. f. [vallée, Fr. vallis, Latin.] A low ground; a hollow between hills.
 Live with me, and be my love,
 And we will all the pleasure prove,
 That hills and vallies yield. Raleigh.
Vallies are the intervals betwixt mountains. Woodward.
 Sweet interchange of hill and valley. Milton.
VALOROUS. adj. [from valour.] Brave; stout; valiant.
 The famous warriors of the antique world
 Us'd trophies to erect in stately wife,
 In which they would the records have enroll'd,
 Of their great deeds and valorous emprise. Spenser.
 Captain Jamy is a marvellous valorous gentleman. Shaksp.
VALOUR. n. f. [valeur, Fr. valor, Latin. Ans.] Personal bravery; strength; prowess; puissance; stoutness.
 That I may pour the spirits in thine ear,
 And chastise with the valour of my tongue,
 All that impedes thee. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 Here I contest
 As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
 As ever in ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 When valour preys on reason,
 It eats the sword it fights with. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleo.
 An innate valour appeared in him, when he put himself upon the soldiers defence, as he received the mortal stab. Howell.
 For contemplation he, and valour form'd;
 For softness they, and sweet attractive grace. Milton.
 Such were these giants; men of high renown!
 For, in those days, might only shall be admir'd,
 And valour, and heroic virtue, call'd. Milton.
Valour gives awe, and promises protection to those who want heart or strength to defend themselves. This makes the authority of men among women; and that of a master-buck in a numerous herd. Temple's Miscel.
VALUABLE. adj. [valuable, Fr. from value.]
 1. Precious; being of great price.
 2. Worthy; deserving regard.
 A just account of that valuable person, whose remains lie before us. F. Atterbury's Sermon.
 The value of several circumstances in story, lessens very much by distance of time; though some minute circumstances are very valuable. Swift's Thoughts.
VALUATION. n. f. [from value.]
 1. Value set upon any thing.
 No reason I, since of your lives you set
 So slight a valuation, should reserve
 My crack'd one to more care. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
 Take out of men's minds false valuations, and it would leave the minds of a number of men, poor shrunken things. Bacon.
 The writers expressed not the valuation of the denarius, without regard to its present valuation. Ardenst on Coins.
 2. The act of setting a value; appraisement.
 Humility in man consists not in denying any gift that is in him, but in a just valuation of it, rather thinking too meanly than too highly. Roy on the Creation.
VALUATOR. n. f. [from value.] An appraiser; one who sets upon any thing its price.
 What valuators will the bishops make use of? Swift.
VALUE. n. f. [value, Fr. valor, Lat.]
 1. Price; worth. Job xiii.
 Ye are physicians of no value. Job xiii.
 2. High rate.
 Cesar is well acquainted with your virtues,
 And therefore sets this value on your life:
 Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship,
 And name your terms. Addison's Cato.
 3. Rate; price equal to the worth of the thing bought.
 He lent him money; it was with this obliging testimony, that his design was not to pay him the value of his pictures, because they were above any price. Dryden.

VAN

- To VALUE. v. a. [valoir, Fr. from the noun.]
 1. To rate at a certain price.
 When the country grows better inhabited, the tithes and other obventions will be more augmented, and better valued. Spenser.
 A mind valuing his reputation at the due price, will repute all dishonest gain much inferior thereto. Carew's Survey.
 God alone values right the good. Milton.
 2. To rate highly; to have in high esteem.
 Some of the finest treatises in dialogue, many very valued. Addison.
 He values himself upon the compassion with which he relieved the afflicted. Atterbury's Sermons.
 To him your orchard's early fruits are due,
 A pleasing off'ring, when 'tis made by you;
 He values these. Pope.
 3. To appraise; to estimate.
 If he be poorer than estimation, the priest shall value him. Luc. xxvii. 8.
 4. To be worth; to be equal in worth to.
 The peace between the French and us not values.
 The cost that did conclude it. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.
 5. To take account of.
 If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock than with; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon.
 6. To reckon at, with respect to number or power.
 The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
 Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakespeare.
 7. To consider with respect to importance; to hold important.
 The king must take it ill,
 So slightly valued in his messenger. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
 Neither of them valued their promises, according to rules of honour or integrity. Clarendon, b. viii.
 8. To equal in value; to countervail.
 It cannot be valued with the gold of ophir. Job. xxviii. 16.
 9. To raise to estimation.
 She ordered all things, resisting the wisdom of the wisest, by making the possessor thereof miserable; valuing the folly of the most foolish, by making the success prosperous. Sidney.
 Some value themselves to their country by jealousies of the crown.
 Vanity, or a desire of valuing ourselves by shewing others faults. Temple.
VAL'UELESS. adj. [from value.] Being of no value.
 A counterfeit
 Resembling majesty; which, touch'd and tried, Proves valueless. Shakespeare's K. John.
VAL'UER. n. f. [from value.] He that values.
VALVE. n. f. [valva, Latin.]
 1. A folding door.
 Swift through the valves the visionary fair
 Repas'd. Pope's Odyssey, b. iv.
 2. Any thing that opens over the mouth of a vessel.
 This air, by the opening of the valve, and forcing up of the tucker, may be driven out. Boyle's Works.
 3. [In anatomy.] A kind of membrane, which opens in certain vessels to admit the blood, and shuts to prevent its regress.
 The arteries, with a contractile force, drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbutnot on Aliments.
VAL'VULE. n. f. [valvule, Fr.] A small valve.
VAMP. n. f. The upper leather of a shoe. Answorth.
 To VAMP. v. a. [This is supposed probably enough by Skinner to be derived from vant, Fr. before; and to mean laying on a new outside.] To piece an old thing with some new part.
 You wish
 To vamp a body with a dangerous physick,
 That's lure of death without. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 This opinion hath been vamped up by Cardan. Bentley.
 I had never much hopes of your vamped play. Swift.
VAMPER. n. f. [from vamp.] One who pieces out an old thing with something new.
VAN. n. f. [from avant, French.]
 1. The front of an army; the first line.
 Before each van prick forth the airy knights. Milton.
 The foe he had furvey'd,
 Arrang'd, as to him they did appear,
 With van, main battle, wings and rear. Hudibras.
 'Twas to van the foremost squadrons meet,
 The midmost battles half'ning up behind. Dryden.
 2. van, Fr. vannus, Latin.] Any thing spread wide by which a wind is raised; a fan.
 The other token of their ignorance of the sea was an oar, they call it a corn-van. Notes on Odyssey.
 3. A wing with which the air is beaten.
 His sail-broad van
 He spreads for flight, and in the furling smoke
 Up-lifted, spurns the ground. Milton's Par. Lost.
 A fiery globe
 Of angels on full sail of wing drew nigh,

VAN

- Who on their plumed vans receiv'd him lost
 From his uneasy station, and upbore,
 As on a floating couch, through the blithe air. Milton.
 His disabled wing unfurling:
 He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
 His vans no longer could his flight sustain. Dryden.
 The vans are broad on one side, and narrower on the other;
 both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derb. precellor.
VANCOURIER. n. f. [avantcourier, French.] A harbinger; a precursor.
VANE. n. f. [vaene, Dutch.] A plate hung on a pin to turn with the wind.
 A man he wou'd spell backward;
 If tall, a lance ill-headed;
 If speaking, why a vane blown with all winds. Shakespeare.
VAN'GUARD. n. f. [avant garde, French.] The front, or first line of the army.
 The king's ant-guard maintained fight against the whole power of the enemies. Bacon.
 Vanguard to right and left the front unfold. Milton.
VANILLA. n. f. [vanille, French.] A plant. It hath an annual flower, consisting of six leaves, five of which are placed in a circular order, and the middle one is concave; the empaleme becomes an horned, soft, fleshy fruit, filled with very small seeds. The fruit of these plants is used to scent chocolate. Miller.
 When mixed with vanillas, or spices, it acquires the good and bad qualities of aromatic oils. Arbutnot on Aliments.
VANISH. v. n. [vanescere, Latin. evanescir, Fr.]
 1. To lose perceptible existence.
 High honour is not only gotten and born by pain and danger, but must be nursed by the like, or else vanish as soon as it appears to the world. Sidney.
 Whether are they vanish'd?
 — Into the air; and what vanish'd corporal
 Melted as breath into the wind. Shakespeare.
 While fancy brings the vanish'd piles to view,
 And builds imaginary Rome anew. Pope.
 2. To pass away from the sight; to disappear.
 Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest.
 He cut the cleaving sky,
 And in a moment vanish'd from her eye. Pope's Odyssey.
 3. To pass away; to be lost.
 All these delights will vanish. Milton.
 That spirit of religion and seriousness, by which we had distinguished ourselves, vanish'd all at once, and a spirit of infidelity and prophaneness started up. Atterbury.
VANITY. n. f. [vanitas, Lat. vanité, Fr.]
 1. Emptiness; uncertainty; inanity.
 2. Fruitless desire; fruitless endeavour.
 3. Vanity possesseth many, who are desirous to know the certainty of things to come.
 Thy pride,
 And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
 Rejected my forewarning. Milton.
 4. Trifling labour.
 To use long discourse against those things which are both against scripture and reason, might rightly be judged a vanity in the answerer, not much inferior to that of the inventor. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 5. Falshood; untruth.
 Here I may well shew the vanity of that which is reported in the story of Wallingham. Sir J. Davies.
 6. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit; idle shew; unsubstantial enjoyment; petty object of pride.
 Were it not strange if God should have made such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leave them all to be consumed in secular vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employed in his own service. Hooker.
 I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
 Some vanity of mine art. Shakespeare's Temp.
 Cast not her serious wit on idle things;
 Makes her free will slave to vanity. Davies.
 Sin, with vanity, had fill'd the works of men. Milton.
 The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their dress;
 and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equal, if not surpass them, in the vanity of their desires. South.
 Think not when woman's transient breath is fled,
 That all her vanities at once are dead;
 Succeeding vanities the still regards,
 And though the plays no more, o'erlooks the cards. Pope.
 7. Ostentation; arrogance.
 The ground-work thereof is true, however they, through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own antiquity. Spenser.
 Whether it were out of the same vanity, which possessed all those learned philologists and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right authors names, those things which he had read in the scriptures; or fearing the severity of the Areopagite, and the example of his master Socrates, I can not judge. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

7. Petty pride; pride exerted upon slight grounds; pride operating on small occasions.
 Can you add guilt to vanity, and take A pride to hear the conquests which you make. Dryden.
 'Tis an old maxim in the schools,
 That vanity's the food of fools;
 Yet now and then your men of wit
 Will condescend to take a bit. Swift's Miscel.
 To VAN. v. a. [from vannus, Lat. vanner, Fr.] To fan; to winnow. Not in use.
 The corn, which in vanning lieth lowest is the best. Bacon.
 To VANQUISH. v. a. [vaincre, French.]
 1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue.
 Wert not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar,
 The fearful French, whom you late vanquish'd,
 Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you? Shakespeare.
 They subdued and vanquish'd the rebels in all encounters. Clarendon, b. viii.
 The gods the victors, Cato the vanquish'd chose:
 But you have done what Cato could not do,
 To chase the vanquish'd, and restore him too. Dryden.
 2. To confute.
 This bold assertion has been fully vanquish'd in a late reply to the bishop of Meaux's treatise. F. Atterbury.
VANQUISHER. n. f. [from vanquish.] Conqueror; subduer.
 He would pawn his fortunes
 To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher. Shakespeare.
 I shall rise victorious, and subdue
 My vanquisher; I should of his vaulted spoil.
 Troy's vanquisher, and great Achilles' son. A. Philips.
VANTAGE. n. f. [from advantage.]
 1. Gain; profit.
 What great vantage do we get by the trade of a pastor? Syd.
 2. Superiority; state in which one had better means of action than another.
 With the vantage of mine own excuse,
 Hath he excepted most against my love. Shakespeare.
 He had them at vantage, being tired and harrassed with a long march.
 The pardoned person must not think to stand upon the same vantage of ground with the innocent. South.
 3. Opportunity; convenience.
 Be assur'd, Madam, 'twill be done
 With his next vantage. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 To VANTAGE. v. a. [from advantage.] To profit.
 We yet of present peril be afraid;
 For needful fear did never vantage none. Fairy Queen.
VANTRASS. n. f. [avant bras, Fr.] Armour for the arm.
 I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
 And in my vantrass put this wither'd brawn. Shakespeare.
 Put on vantrass, and greaves, and gauntlet. Milton.
VAPID. adj. [exipidus, Latin.] Dead; having the spirit evaporated; spiritless; maukish; flat.
 Thy wines let feed a-while
 On the fat refuse; lest too soon disjoint'd,
 From spritely it to sharp or vapid change. Philips.
 The effects of a vapid and viscous constitution of blood, are stagnation, acrimony, and putrefaction. Arbutnot.
VAPIDNESS. n. f. [from vapid.] The state of being spiritless or maukish; maukiness.
VAPORATION. n. f. [vaporatio, Fr. vaporation, Lat. from vapor.] The act of cleaving in vapours.
VAPORER. n. f. [from vapor.] A boaster; a braggart.
 This shews these vaporers, to what scorn they expose themselves. Government of the Tongue.
VAPORISH. adj. [from vapor.] Vaporous; splenetic; humorous.
 Pallas grew vaporish once and odd,
 She would not do the least right thing. Swift.
VAPOROUS. adj. [vaporeux, Fr. from vapor.]
 1. Full of vapours or exhalations; fummy.
 The vaporous night approaches. Shakespeare.
 It proceeded from the nature of the vaporous place. Sandys.
 This shifting our abode from the warmer and more vaporous air of the vallies, to the colder and more subtle air of the hills, is a great benefit to the valetudinarian part. Derham.
 2. Windy; flatulent.
 If the mother eat much beans, or such vaporous food, it endangereth the child to become lunatick. Bacon.
 Some more subtle corporeal element, may so equally beat against the parts of a little vaporous moisture, as to form it into round drops. Mare's Antidote against Atheism.
 The food which is most vaporous and perspirable, is the most easily digested. Arbutnot.
 A little tube, jetting out from the extremity of an artery, may carry off these vaporous steams of the blood. Cheyne.
VAPOUR. n. f. [vapeur, Fr. vapor, Latin.]
 1. Any thing exhalable; any thing that mingles with the air.
 Vapour, and mist, and exhalation hot.
 When first the sun too powerful beams displays,
 It draws up vapours which obscure its rays: Milton.

VAR

- But ev'n those clouds at last adorn its way,
 Reflect new glories, and augment the day. Pope.
 2. Wind; flatulence.
 In the Thessalian witches, and the meetings of witches that have been recorded, great wonders they tell, of carrying in the air, transforming themselves into other bodies. These fables are the effects of imagination: for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon.
 3. Fume; steam.
 The morning is the best, because the imagination is not clouded by the vapours of meat. Dryden.
 In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapor which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapor from the candle to the still. Newton's Optics.
 For the imposthume, the vapor of vinegar, and any thing which creates a cough, are proper. Arbutnot on Diet.
 4. Mental fume; vain imagination; fancy unreal.
 If his sorrow bring forth amendment, he hath the grace of hope, though it be clouded over with a melancholy vapor, that it be not discernible even to himself. Hammond.
 5. [In the plural.] Discales caused by flatulence, or by diseased nerves; hypochondriacal maladies; melancholy; spleen.
 To this we must ascribe the spleen, so frequent in studious men, as well as the vapours to which the other sex are so often subject. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 115.
 To VAP'OUR. v. n. [vaporo, Latin.]
 1. To pass in a vapour, or fume; to emit fumes; to fly off in evaporations.
 When thou from this world wilt go,
 The whole world vapours in thy breath. Donne.
 Swift running waters vapor not so much as standing waters. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 767.
 2. To bully; to brag;
 Not true, quoth he? Howe'er you vapor,
 I can what I affirm make appear. Hudibras.
 These are all the mighty powers
 You vainly boast, to cry down ours;
 And what in real value's wanting,
 Supply with vapouring and ranting. Hudibras.
 That I might not be vapor'd down by insignificant testimonies, I used the name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Glauville's Pref. to Scip.
 Be you to us but kind;
 Let Dutchmen vapor, Spaniards curse,
 No sorrow we shall find. E. Do'ser's Song.
 To VAP'OUR. v. a. To effuse, or scatter in fumes or vapour.
 Break off this last lamenting kiss,
 Which sucks two souls, and vapours both away. Donne.
 He'd laugh to see one throw his heart away,
 Another fighting vapor forth his soul. B. Johnson.
 A third to melt himself in tears.
 Opium loath some of his poisonous quality, if vapor'd out, and mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.
 It must be holpen by somewhat which may fix the silver, never to be restored, or vapor'd away, when incorporated into such a mass of gold. Bacon.
VARIABLE. adj. [variabilis, Fr. variabilis, Latin.] Changeable; mutable; inconstant.
 O swear not by the inconstant moon,
 That monthly changes in her circled orb;
 Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakespeare.
 Haply countries different,
 With variable objects, shall expel
 This something settled matter in his heart. Shakespeare.
 By the lively image of other creatures, did those ancients represent the variable passions of mortals; as by serpents were signified deceivers. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 His heart I know how variable, and vain,
 Self-left. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 92.
VARIABleness. n. f. [from variable.]
 1. Changeableness; mutability.
 You are not solicitous about the variableness of the weather, or the change of seasons. Addison.
 2. Levity; inconstancy.
 Centuries subject themselves to the charge of variableness in judgment. Clarissa.
VARIABLY. adv. [from variable.] Changeably; mutably; inconstantly; uncertainly.
VARIANCE. n. f. [from vary.] Discord; disagreement; dissension.
 I am come to set a man at variance against his father. Matth.
 A cause of law, by violent course,
 Was, from a variance, now a war become. Daniel's C. War.
 Not so as to set any one doctrine of the gospel at variance with others, which are all admirably consistent. S. rat.
 She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen:
 While a kind glance at her pursuer flies,
 How much at variance are her feet and eyes? Pope.

VAR

If the learned would not sometimes submit to the ignorant; the old to the weakness of the young; there would be nothing but everlasting variance in the world. Locke

By shameful variance betwixt man and man. Thomson

VARIATION. n. f. [variatio, Lat. variation, French.]

1. Change; mutation; difference from itself.

After much variation of opinions, the prisoner was acquitted of treason, but by most voices found guilty of felony. Hayes

The operation of agents will easily admit of intention and remission, but the essences of things are conceived not capable of any such variation. Locke

The fame of our writers is confined to these two islands, and it is hard it should be limited in time as much as place, by the perpetual variations of our speech. Swift

There is but one common matter, which is diversified by accidents; and the same numerical quantity, by variations of texture, may constitute successively all kinds of body. Bent

2. Difference; change from one to another.

In some other places are more females born than males; which, upon this variation of proportion, I recommend to the curians. Graunt's Bills of Mortality

Each sea had its peculiar shells, and the same variation of soils; this tract affording such a terrestrial matter as is proper for the formation of one sort of shell-fish; that of another. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

3. Successive change.

Sir Walter Blunt, stain'd with the variation of each soil. Shaksp.

4. [In grammar.] Change of termination of nouns.

5. Change in natural phenomena.

The duke run a long course of calm prosperity, without any visible eclipse or wane in himself, amidst divers variations in others. Watts's Life of Buckingham

6. Deviation.

If we admit a variation from the state of his creation, that variation must be necessarily after an eternal duration, and therefore within the compass of time. Hale

I may seem sometimes to have varied from his sense; but the greatest variations may be fairly deduced from him. Dryd.

7. Variation of the compass; deviation of the magnetick needle from an exact parallel with the meridian.

VARIATION. adj. [variatus, Latin.] Diseased with dilation.

There are instances of one vein only being various, which may be destroyed by tying it above and below the dilation. Sharpe

TO VARIATE. v. a. [variatus, school Latin.] To diversify; to stain with different colours.

The shells are filled with a white spar, which variegates and adds to the beauty of the stone. Woodward on Fossils

They had fountains of variegated marble in their rooms. Art.

Ladies like variegated tulips flow.

'Tis to the changes half the charms we owe: Such happy spots the nice admirers take, Fine by defect, and delicately weak. Pope's Epist.

VARIATION. n. f. [from variegatus.] Diversity of colours.

Plant your choice tulips in natural earth, somewhat impoverished with very fine sand; else they will soon lose their variations. Boehly's Kaland

VARIETY. n. f. [varietas, Fr. varietas, Latin.]

1. Change; succession of one thing to another; intermixture of one thing with another.

All sorts are here that all th' earth yields; Variety without end. Milton's Par. Lost

Variety is nothing else but a continued novelty. South

If the sun's light consisted of but one sort of rays, there would be but one colour in the whole world, nor would it be possible to produce any new colour by reflections or refractions; and by consequence that the variety of colours depends upon the composition of light. Newton's Opticks

2. One thing of many by which variety is made. In this sense it has a plural.

The inclosed warmth, which the earth hath in itself, stirred up by the heat of the sun, affixeth nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties, which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh's Hist. of the World

3. Difference; dissimilitude.

There is a variety in the tempers of good men, with relation to the different impressions they receive from different objects of charity. F. Auberbury

4. Variation; deviation; change from a former state.

VAU

VA'ASOUR. n. f. [vaussour, Fr.] One who himself holding of a superior lord, has others holding under him.
Names have been taken of civil honours, as king, knight, valuator, or vaussour, squire. Cauden.
VA'UDEVEL. n. f. [vaudeville, Fr.] A song common among the vulgar, and sung about the streets, Trev. A ballad; a trivial strain.
VAULT. n. f. [voûte, Fr. volta, Ital. volta, low Latin.]
1. A continued arch.
O, you are men of stone:
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack. Shakefp. K. Lear.
The word signifies an orb or sphere. And this shews us both the form of the Mosaic abys, which was included within this vault: and the form of the habitable earth, which was the outward surface of this vault, or the cover of the abys. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. A cellar.
Creep into the kill-hole.
He will seek there; neither press, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of. Shakefp.
The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shakefp.
Whether your fruitful fancy lies
To banish rats that haunt our vault. Swift.
3. A cave; a cavern.
The silent vaults of death, unknown to light,
And hell itself, lie naked to his sight. Sandys.
4. A repository for the dead.
Shall I not be fitted in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in. Shakefp.
To VAULT, v. a. [volder, Fr. from the noun.]
To arch; to shape of a vault.
Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope
Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above, and the twinn'd stones
Upon th' humb'd beach? Shakefp. Cymbeline.
2. To cover with an arch.
Over-head the dismal hiss
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew;
And flying vaulted either host with fire. Milton.
To VAULT, v. n. [voltiger, Fr. voleggiare, Italian.]
Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on th' other. Shakefp. Macbeth.
The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore. Sh.
He is vaulting variable ramps
In your despite, upon your purple. Shakefp.
If I could win a lady by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakefp.
Leaning on his lance, he vaulted on a tree. Dryden.
If a man should leap a garret, or vault down the monument, would he leave the memory of a hero behind him?
Lucan vaulted upon Pegasus with all the heat and interpidity of youth. Addison.
2. To play the tumbler, or posture-master.
VAULT. n. f. [from the verb.] A leap; a jump.
VAULTAGE. n. f. [from vault.] Arched cellar. Not in use.
He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That caves and womb'd vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent to his ordinance. Shakefp. Hen. V.
VAULTED. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave.
Restore the lock! she cries, and all around Restore the lock! the vaulted roofs rebound. Pope.
VAULTER. n. f. [from vault.] A leaper; a jumper; a tumbler.
VAULTY. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave. A bad word.
I will kiss thy detestable bones,
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows,
And ring these fingers with thy household worms. Shakefp.
I'll say that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heav'ns so high above our heads. Shakefp.
VAUNMURE. n. f. [vaut mur, Fr.] A false wall; a work raised before the main wall.
With another engine named the warwolf, he pierced with one stone, and cut, as even as a thread, two vautmures. Cauden's Remains.
This warlike captain, daily attempting the vautmures, in the end by force obtained the fame; and so possessed of the place, desperately kept it till greater help came running in, who, with wonderful expedition, clapt up a strong covering betwixt the wall and the vautmure. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
To VAUNT. v. a. [vauter, Fr.] To boast; to display with ostentation.
Not that great champion
Whom famous poets verse so much doth vaunt;
And hath for twelve huge labours high extoll'd,
So many juries and sharp hits did haunt. Fairy Queen.

UDD

Not any damsel which her vaunteth most,
In skillful knitting of soft filken twine.
My vanquisher spoil'd of his vaunted spoil. Spenser.
To VAUNT. v. n.
1. To play the braggart; to talk with ostentation; to make vain show; to boast.
You say, you are a better foldier;
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true. Shakefp.
The illusions of magic were put down, and their vaunting in wisdom reproved with disgrace. Wisdom xvii. 7.
So spake th' apostate angel, though in pain;
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair.
Pride which prompts a man to vaunt and overvalue what he is, does incline him to disvalue what he has. Gov. of Tongue.
2. I scarcely know in what sense Dryden has used this word, unless it be miswritten for vaults.
'Tis he: I feel him now in ev'ry part;
Like a new world he vaunts about my heart. Dryden.
VAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Brag; boast; vain ostentation.
Sir John Perrot bent his course not to that point, but rather quite contrary, in scorn, and in vain vaunt of his own counfels.
Him Ieduc'd with other promises and other vaunts. Milton.
Such vaunts who can with patience read,
Who thus describes his hero when he's dead?
In heat of action slain, he seems to fall,
But still maintains the war, and fights at all. Granville.
VAUNT. n. f. [from vaunt, Fr.] The first part. Not used.
Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firrings. Shakefp.
VAUNTER. n. f. [vauter, Fr. from vaunt.] Boaster; braggart; man given to vain ostentation.
Some feign
To menage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain. Spenser.
Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might;
In threats the foremost, but the lag in fight. Dryden.
VAUNTFUL. adj. [vaut and full] Boastful; ostentatious.
Whiles all the heavens on lower creatures smil'd,
Young Clarion, with vaultful lusthied,
After his guise did cast abroad to fare. Spenser.
VAUNTINGLY. adv. [from vaunting.] Boastfully; ostentatiously.
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Glo'ster's death. Shakefp.
VAWARD. n. f. [vau and ward] Fore part.
Since we have the vaward of the day,
My love shall hear the music of my hounds. Shakefp.
Their hands i'th' vaward are the Antiates
Of their best trust. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He desired nothing more than to have confirmed his authority in the minds of the vulgar, by the present and ready attendance of the vaward. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
UBERTY. n. f. [ubertas, Latin.] Abundance; fruitfulness.
UBICATION. n. f. [from ubi, Latin.] Local relation; where-ness.
UBIQU. n. f. A scholastick term.
Relations, ubiquities, duration, the vulgar philosophy admits to be something; and yet to enquire in what place they are, were gross. Glauville.
UBIQUITARY. adj. [from ubique, Latin.] Existing every where.
For wealth and an ubiquitary commerce, none can exceed her. How.
UBIQUITARY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.] One that exists every where.
How far wide is Aquinas, which faith, by the same reason that an angel might be in two places, he might be in as many as you will? See now, either Xavier is every where, or else the carcass of a friar is more subtle than the nature of an angel. To conclude, either Aquinas is false, or the papists ubiquitaries. Hall.
UBIQUITY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.] Omnipresence; existence at the same time in all places.
In the one there is attributed to God death, whereof divine nature is not capable; in the other ubiquity unto man, which human nature admitteth not. Hooker.
Pern she hight,
A solemn wight,
As you should meet,
In that ubiquity. B. Johnson.
Could they think that to be infinite and immense, the ubiquity of which they could thrust into a corner of their closet. South.
UDDER. n. f. [uber, Saxon; udder, Dutch. uber, Lat.] The breast or dugs of a cow, or other large animal.
A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching head on ground. Shakefp.
Sithence the cow
Produc'd an ampler store of milk; the fire-goat,
Not without pain, dragg'd her distended udder. Prior.
UDDERED. adj. [from udder.] Furnished with udders.
Marian soft could stroke the udder'd cow. Gay.
VEAL.

VEG

VEAL. n. f. [veal, a calf, veeler, vesler, to bring forth a calf, old French; vitellus, Latin.] The flesh of a calf killed for the table.
Would'st thou with mighty beef augment thy meal?
Seek Leadenhall; St. James's sends thee veal. Gay.
VECTION. n. f. [vectio, vectis, Latin.] The act of carrying, or being carried.
VEGETATION. n. f. [vegetatio, Latin.] Carriage.
Elevated lords are foilly lolling in their chariots; a species of vegetation seldom used amongst the antients. Arbustnot.
VECTURE. [veitura, Latin.] Carriage.
Three things one nation felth unto another; the commodity as nature yieldeth it, the manufacture and the veiture or carriage. Bacon's Essays.
To VEER. v. n. [veer, French.] To turn about.
If a wild uncertainty prevail,
And turn your veering heart with ev'ry gale;
You lose the fruit of all your former care,
For the sad prospect of a just despair.
Nigh rivers mouth, where wind
Veers off, as oft he fleers and shifts her sail. Milton.
I have no taste of the noisy praise
Of giddy crouds, as changeable as winds;
Servants to change, and blowing with the tide
Of swol'n success, but veering with its ebb.
A-head the master pilot fleers. Dryden.
And as he leads, the following navy veers.
It is a double misfortune to a nation given to change, when they have a sovereign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people. Addison's Preface.
The wind veered about to north-west. Derham.
To VEER. v. a.
1. To let out.
As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all fail; so, to take it in and contract it, is of no less grace when the argument doth ask it. B. Johnson.
2. To turn, to change.
I see the haven nigh at hand,
To which I mean my weary course to bend;
Far the main sheet, and bear up with the land. Spenser.
Sailing farther, it veers its lily to the west, and regardeth that quarter, wherein the land is nearer or greater. Brown.
VEGETABILITY. n. f. [from vegetable.] Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without sensation.
The coagulating spirits of salts, and lapidifical juice of the sea, entering the parts of the plant, overcomes its vegetability, and converts it into a lapidaceous substance. Brown.
VEGETABLE. n. f. [vegetabilis, school Lat. vegetabile, Fr.] Any thing that has growth without sensation, as plants.
Vegetables are organized bodies consisting of various parts, containing vessels furnished with different juices; and taking in their nourishment from without, usually by means of a root, by which they are fixed to the earth, or to some other body, as in the generality of plants; sometimes by means of pores distributed over the whole surface, as in sub-marine plants. Hill's Materia Medica.
Let brutes and vegetables that cannot drink,
So far as drought and nature urges, think.
In vegetables it is the shape, and in bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on. Locke.
Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees. Watts.
VEGETABLE. adj. [vegetabilis, Latin.]
1. Belonging to a plant.
The vegetable world, each plant and tree,
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
To creeping moss. Prior.
Both mechanisms are equally curious, from one uniform juice to extract all the variety of vegetable juices; or from such variety of food to make a fluid very near uniform to the blood of an animal. Arbustnot on Aliments.
The well shower'd earth
Is deep enrich'd with vegetable life. Thomson.
2. Having the nature of plants.
Amidst them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold. Milton's Par. Lost.
That vegetative terrestrial hath been ever the standing fund, out of which is derived the matter of all animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
To VEGETATE. v. n. [vegeto, Latin.] To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow without sensation.
Rain-water may be endued with some vegetating or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oleose particles. Ray.
As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees. Woodward.
See dying vegetables life sustain;
See life dissolving vegetate again. Pope's Essay on Man.
VEGETATION. n. f. [from vegeto, Latin.]
1. The power of producing the growth of plants.
The exterior surface consisted of a terrestrial matter proper for the nourishment of plants, being little entangled with mere mineral matter, that was unfit for vegetation. Woodward.

VEH

The sun, deep-darting to the dark retreat
Of vegetation, sets the steaming power
At large. Thomson's Spring.
Love warbles through the vocal groves,
And vegetation paints the plain. Anonymous.
2. The power of growth without sensation.
Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility. Hooker.
These pulsations I attribute to a plastick nature, or vital principle, as the vegetation of plants must also be. Ray.
VEGETATIVE. adj. [vegetalis, Fr. from vegetare]
1. Having the quality of growing without life.
Creatures vegetative and growing, have their seeds in themselves. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
2. Having the power to produce growth in plants.
Homer makes deities of the vegetative faculties, and virtues of the field. Brown's Notes on Odyss.
VEGETATIVENESS. n. f. [from vegetative.] The quality of producing growth.
VEGETIVE. adj. [vegetus, Latin.] Vigorous; active; spritely.
The soul was vegetive, quick and lively; full of the youthfulness and spriteliness of youth. South.
The faculties in age must be less vegetive and nimble than in youth. Wallis.
VEGETIVE. adj. [from vegeto, Latin.] Vegetable; having the nature of plants.
Nor rent off, but cut off ripe bean with a knife,
For hindering stalks of hir vegetive life. Tuff. Husbandry.
VEGETIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A vegetable.
Hence vegetives receive their fragrant birth,
And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Sandys.
The tree still panted in th' unfinished part,
Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryden.
VEHEMENCE. n. f. [vehementia, Latin.]
VEHEMENCY. n. f. [vehementia, Latin.]
1. Violence; force.
Universal hubbub wild,
Of stunning sounds and voices all confus'd,
Assaults his ear with loudest vehemence. Milton.
2. Ardour; mental violence; terror.
Think ye are men; deem it not impossible for you to err: sit impartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred, and still doth feed these opinions in you. Hooker's Pref.
The best persuasions
Fail not to use; and with what vehemency
Th' occasion shall instruct you. Shakefp. Hen. VIII.
Would it apply well to the vehemence of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Shakefp.
The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness and vehemency of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.
This pure cause would kindle my rapid spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things wou'd be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.
He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in less compals than two months. This vehemence of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.
Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison's Cata.
VEHEMENT. adj. [vehement, Fr. vehemens, Latin.]
1. Violent; forcible.
A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.
Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Grew.
2. Ardent; eager; fervent.
By their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace. Shakefp.
I Find
In all things else delight indeed; but such,
As us'd or not, works in the mind no change,
Nor vehement desire. Milton's Par. Lost.
VEHEMENTLY. adv. [from vehement.]
1. Forcibly.
2. Pathetically; urgently.
The christian religion inculcates kindness more vehemently, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly than any religion did before. Tillotson.
VEHICLE. n. f. [vehiculum, Latin.]
1. That in which any thing is carried.
Evil spirits might very properly appear in vehicles of flame, to terrify and surprise. Addison's Guardian.
2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable.
That the meat defends by one passage; the drink, or moistening vehicle by another, is a popular tenent. Brown.
3. That by means of which any thing is conveyed.

VEI

The gaiety of a diverting word, serves as a vehicle to convey the force and meaning of a thing. L'Estrange.
 To VEIL, v. n. [veils, Lat. See VALE.]
 1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.

Her face was veiled; yet to my fancied sight,
 Love, sweetness, goodness in her person shin'd.
 It became the Jewish fashion when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Milton.
 2. To cover; to invest. Boyle.

I decry,
 From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
 One of the heav'nly host. Milton.
 3. To hide; to conceal.

Of darkness visible so much he lent,
 As half to shew, half veil the deep intent. Pope's Dunciad.

VEIL, n. f. [velum, Latin.]
 1. A cover to conceal the face.

To feed his fiery lustful eye,
 He snatch'd the veil that hung her face before. Fairy Queen.
 The Paphian queen from that fierce battle borne,
 With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,
 Like terror did among the immortals breed. Waller.

The famous painter cou'd allow no place
 For private sorrow in a prince's face:
 Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
 He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Waller.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
 Such metaphors appear when right apply'd.
 When through the phreze we plainly see the sense,
 Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense. Granville.

She accepts the hero, and the dame
 Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame. Pope.

2. A cover; a disguise.

I will pluck the borrow'd veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acton. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Knock on my heart; or be fill'd with wind;
 And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind. Dry.

The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over. Addison.

VEIN, n. f. [veine, Fr. vena, Latin.]

The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins; the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins, as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranes or valves; like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, with their mouths towards the heart. In the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are pressed close to the side of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves; and they being distended, stop up the channel, so that no blood can repass them. Quincy.

When I did first impart my love to you,
 I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman. Shakespeare.

Horror chill
 Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton.

2. Hollow; cavity.

Found where casual fire
 Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale, Down to the veins of earth. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let the gla'ss of the prism be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes. Newton's Opticks.

3. Course of metal in the mine.

There is a vein for the silver. Job xxviii. 1.
 Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
 Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.

It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of. Swift's Thoughts.

4. Tendency or turn of the mind or genius.

We ought to attempt no more than what is in the com-pats of our genius, and according to our vein. Dryden.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.

Artizans have not only their growths and perfections, but likewise their veins and times. Watson's Architecture.

VEL

6. Humour; temper.

I put your grace in mind
 Of what you promis'd me. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

Certainly he that hath a satirical vein, as he makes others afraid of his wit, so he had need to be afraid of others. Bacon.

They among themselves in pleasant vein
 Stood scoffing. Milton's Par. Lost.

Speak't thou in earnest or in jesting vein?
 The currier struck the usurer upon the tight vein. L'Estr.

7. Continued disposition.

The vein I have had of running into speculations of this kind, upon a greater scene of trade, have cost me this present service. Temple.

8. Current; continued production.

He can open a vein of true and noble thinking. Swift.

9. Strain; quality.

Now somewhat ting, whose endless souvenance
 Among the shepherds may ave remain;
 Whether thee list, thy loved lass advance,
 Or honour Pan with higher hymns of praise. Spenser.

10. Streak; variegation, as the veins of the marble.

VEL, adj. [veineux, Fr. from vein.]

1. Full of veins.

2. Streaked; variegated.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs, and many of them are very finely veined. Mortimer's History.

Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines. Thomson.

VELLITATE, n. f. [vellit, Fr. vellit, Lat.]
Vellit is the school-term used to signify the lowest degree of desire. Locke.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it;
 but it is that which is called by the schools an imperfect vellity, and imports no more than an idle, un-operative complacency in, and desire of the end, without any consideration of the means. Bentley's Sermon.

To VELLITATE, v. a. [vellit, Lat.] To twitch; to pluck; to act by stimulation.

Those smells are all strong, and do pull and vellitate the sense. Bacon.

Convulsions arising from something vellitating a nerve in its extremity, are not very dangerous. Arbutnot.

VELLICATION, n. f. [vellitatio, Lat.] Twitching; stimulation.

All purgers have a kind of twitching and vellitation, besides the griping, which cometh of wind. Bacon.

There must be a particular motion and vellitation imprest upon the nerves, else the sensation of heat will not be produced. Watson's Improvement of the Mind.

VELLUM, n. f. [vellum, Fr. vellum, Lat.] rather vellum, low Latin.] The skin of a calf dyed for the writer.

The skull was very thin, yielding to the least pressure of my finger, as a piece of vellum. Wijeman.

VELOCITY, n. f. [velocitas, Fr. velocitas, Latin.] Speed; swiftness; quick motion.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but moved in hyperbola's or parabola's, or in ellipses very eccentric. Bentley's Sermon.

VELVET, n. f. [velveto, Ital. villus, Latin. velours, Fr.] Silk with a short fur or pile upon it.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
 With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

The different ranging the superficial parts of bodies, as of velvet, watered silk, we think probably is nothing but the different refraction of their insensible parts. Locke.

VELVET, adj.

1. Made of velvet.

This was moulded on a porringer,
 A velvet dish. Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew.

2. Soft; delicate.

Through the velvet leaves the wind,
 All unseen, 'gan passage find. Shakespeare.

Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
 As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
 To that which had too much. Then being alone Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
 'Tis right, quoth he; this misery doth part
 The flux of company. Shakespeare.

To VELVET, v. n. To paint velvet.

Verditure, ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the palest green that is; but good to velvet upon black in any drapery. Peacham on Drapery.

VELOURE, n. f. [velours, Fr.] Velvet. An old word.

His horse with one girt, fix times pieced, and a woman's crupper of velours, pieced with packthread. Shakespeare.

VENAL.

VEN

VENAL, adj. [venal, Fr. venalis, Latin.]

1. Mercenary; prostitute.

This venal he thine, my friend, nor thou refuse
 This, from no venal or ungrateful mule. Pope.

2. [from vein.] Contained in the veins. A technical word.

It is unreasonable to affirm, that the cool venal blood should be heated to high in the interval of two pulses. Ray.

VENALITY, n. f. [venalitas, Fr. from venal.] Mercenariness; prostitution.

VENATICK, adj. [venaticus, Latin.] Used in hunting.

VENATION, n. f. [venatio, Latin.] The act or practice of hunting.

The manner of their venation we shall find to be other-ways than by sawing away of trees. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To VEND, v. a. [vendre, Fr. vende, Lat.] To sell; to offer to sale.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which not having the occasion he expell'd to vend, and make use of, lay by him. Boyle.

VENDEE, n. f. [from vend.] One to whom any thing is sold.

If a vicar sows his glebe, or if he sells his corn, and the vendee cuts it, he must pay the tithes to the parson. Ayliffe.

VENDER, n. f. [vendeur, Fr. from vend.] A seller.

Where the consumption of commodity is, the venders feast themselves. Gravel.

Those make the most noise who have the least to sell, which is very observable in the venders of card-matches. Addison.

VENDIBLE, adj. [vendibilis, Latin.] Saleable; marketable.

In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible. Shakespeare.

This so profitable and vendible a merchandize, fith not to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities. Carew.

The ignorant mine-man, aiming only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible under such a de-terminate name, has neither the design nor skill to make nice separations of the heterogeneous bodies. Boyle.

VENDIBLENESS, n. f. [from vendible.] The state of being saleable.

VENDICATION, n. f. [venditio, from vendit, Latin.] A boastful display.

Some, by a cunning protestation against all readings, and vendication of their own natural, think to divert the sagacity of their readers from themselves, and cool the scent of their own fox-like thefts; when yet they are so rank as a man may find whole pages together usurped from one author. B. Johnson.

VENDITIO, n. f. [venditio, Fr. venditio, Latin.] Sale; the act of selling.

To VENER, v. a. [among cabinet-makers.] To make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine woods of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood. Bailey.

VENERFIE, n. f. [veneficium, Latin.] The practice of poisoning.

VENERFICIAL, adj. from veneficium, Latin.] Acting by poison; bewitching.

The magical virtues of melleto, and conceived efficacy into venefical intentions, seemeth a Pagan relique derived from the ancient Druids. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VENERFICIOUSLY, adv. [from veneficium, Latin.] By poison or witchcraft.

Left witches should draw or prick their names therein, and veneficiously mischief their persons, they broke the spell. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VENEMOUS, adj. [from venen, Fr.] Poisonous. Commonly, though not better, venomous.

The barbarians saw the venemous beast hang on his hand. Acts xxviii. 4.

To VENENATE, v. a. [veneno, Latin.] To poison; to infest with poison.

These miasms entering the body, are not so energetic, as to venenate the entire mass of blood in an instant. Harvey.

By giving this in fevers after calcination, whereby the venenate parts are carried off. Woodward on Pustils.

VENENATION, n. f. [from venenate.] Poison; venom.

This venenation shoots from the eye; and this way a bafilist may impoison. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VENENE, adj. [veneneux, Fr. from venenum, Latin.] Poisonous; venomous.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate ve-nene bodies, or to attract or evacuate them hence. Harvey.

Malignt, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, demonstrates that all such tumours, where any insects are found, are raised up by some venene liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects feed upon the leaves. Ray.

VENERABLE, adj. [venerabilis, Fr. venerabilis, Latin.] To be regarded with awe; to be treated with reverence.

As by the ministry of saints, it pleased God there to shew some rare effect of his power; or in regard of death, which those saints have suffered for the testimony of Jesus Christ, did thereby make the places where they died venerable. Hooker.

To make the passage easy, safe, and plain,
 That leads us to this venerable wall. Paisson.

VEN

Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high
 His hands, now free. Thou venerable sky!
 Inviolable pow'rs, ador'd with dread,
 Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden's Zen. II.

VENERABLY, adj. [from venerable.] In a manner that excites reverence.

The Palatine, proud Rome's imperial seat,
 An awful pile! stands venerably great.
 Thither the kingdoms and the nations come. Addison.

To VENERATE, v. a. [venerer, Fr. veneror, Latin.] To reverence; to treat with veneration; to regard with awe.

When baseness is exalted, do not hate
 The place its honour for the person's sake:
 The shrine is that which thou dost venerate,
 And not the beast that bears it on its back. Herbert.

The lords and ladies here approaching paid
 Their homage, with a low obeisance made;
 And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

A good clergyman must love and venerate the gospel that he teaches, and prefer it to all other learning. Clarissa.

VENERATION, n. f. [veneration, Fr. veneratio, Lat.] Reverend regard; awful respect.

Theology is the comprehension of all other knowledge, directed to its true end, i. e. the honour and veneration of the creator, and the happiness of mankind. Locke.

We find a secret awe and veneration for one who moves above us in a regular and illustrious course of virtue. Addison.

VENERATOR, n. f. [from veneratio.] Reverencer.

If the state of things, as they now appear, involve a re-pugnancy to an eternal existence, the arguments must be conclusive to those great priests and venerators of nature. Hale.

VENEREAL, adj. [venereus, Latin.]

1. Relating to love.

There are no venereal signs;
 Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand. Shakespeare.

Then swol'n with pride, into the snare I fell,
 Of fair fallacious looks, venereal trains,
 Soften'd with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

They are averse to venereal pleasure. Addison.

Headed with ire, and vengeable despite. Spenser.

VENGEANCE, n. f. [vengeance, French.]

1. Punishment; penal retribution; avengement.

The right conceit which they had, that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect as touching their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths. Hooker.

All the stor'd vengeances of heaven fall
 On her ingrateful top! Shakespeare's K. Lear.

The souls of all that I had murder'd
 Came to my tent, and every one did threat
 To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard. Shakespeare.

Let me see thy vengeance on them. Jer. xi. 20.

VEN

2. It is used in familiar language. To do with a vengeance, is to do with vehemence; what a vengeance, emphatically what?
Till the day appear, of reparation to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked. Milton.
When the same king adventured to murmur, the pope could threaten to teach him his duty with a vengeance. Raleigh.
Afinodeus the fifty fume
Drove, though enamour'd, from the spouse
Of Tobit's son, and with a vengeance sent From Medea post to Egypt, there fast bound. Milton.
But what a vengeance makes thee fly
From me too, as thine enemy? Hudibras.
VENGEFUL. adj. [from vengeance and full.] Vindictive; revengeful; retributive.

Doubt not but God
Hath wilelier arm'd his vengeful ire. Milton.

And with wife silence pond'ring vengeful wars. Prior.
VENIABLE. adj. [veniel, Fr. from venia, Latin.]
VENIAL. adj. [from venia, Latin.]

1. Pardonable; susceptible of pardon; excusable.
If they do nothing 'tis a venial slip. Shakespeare.
More veniable is a dependence upon potable gold, whereof Paracelsus, who died himself at forty-seven, gloried that he could make other men immortal. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
What horror will invade the mind,
When the strict judge, who would be kind,
Shall have few venial faults to find? Roscommon.
While good men are in extirpating mortal sins, I should rally the world out of indecencies and venial transgressions. Addison.

2. Permitted; allowed.
No more of talk where God, or angel-guest,
With man, as with his friend, familiar us'd
To fit indulgent, and with him partake Rural repast; permitting him the while Venial discourse unblam'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
VENIANCE. n. f. [from venia, Latin.] State of being excusable.
VENISON. n. f. [venajon, French.] Game; beast of chase;
the flesh of deer.

Shall we kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Shoud have their round haunches gor'd. Shakespeare.
We have a hot venison patty to dinner. Shakespeare.
In the records of Ireland, no mention is made of any park, though there be vert and venison within this land. Davies's Hist. of Ireland.

He for the feast prepar'd,
In equal portions with the venison shar'd. Dryden.
VENOM. n. f. [venin, French.] Poison.
Your eyes, which hitherto hath borne in them
The fatal balls of murdering basilisks:
The venom of such looks we fairly hope
Have lost their quality. Shakespeare. Hen. V.

Beware of yonder dog;
Look, when he fawns, he bites; and, when he bites,
His venom tooth will rankle to the death. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
Like some tall tree, the monster of the wood,
O'erhanging all that under him would grow,
He sheds his venom on the plants below. Dryden.

TO VENOM. v. a. To infect with venom.
VENOMOUS. adj. [from venom.]

1. Poisonous.
Thy tears are sifter than a younger man's,
And venomous to thy eyes. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
2. Malignant; mischievous.
A posterity not unlike their majority of mischievous progenitors; a venomous and destructive progeny. Brown.
This salubrity was broached by Cochlæus, a venomous writer;
one careless of truth or falsehood. Addison.
VENOMOUSLY. adv. [from venomous.] Poisonously; mischievously; malignantly.

His unkindness,
That strip'd her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties. These things sting him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
His praise of foes is venomously nice;
So touch'd, it turns a virtue to a vice. Dryden.

VENOMOUSNESS. n. f. [from venomous.] Poisonousness; malignity.

VENT. n. f. [fente, French.]
1. A small aperture; a hole; a spiracle; passage at which any thing is let out.

On her breast
There is a vent of blood, and something blown;
The like is on her arm. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
They at once their needs
Put forth, and to a narrow vent apply'd Which nicest touch. Milton's Par. Lost.
Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole stopped with a spile. Mortimer's Husbandry.

VEN

Scarce any countries that are much annoyed with earthquakes, that have not one of these fiery vents, disgorging that fire, whereby it gains an exit.
To draw any drink, be not at the trouble of opening a vent;
or if you take out the vent, stay not to put it in.
Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the furies issued at the vent. Pope.

3. The act of opening.
The farmer's cades mature,
Now call for vent; his lands exhaust, permit
T' indulge a while. Philips.

4. Emission; passage.
The mother'd fondness burns within him;
When most it swells and labours for a vent,
The sense of honour, and desire of fame,
Drive the big passion back into his heart. Addison's Cato.

5. Discharge; means of discharge.
Had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words.
Land-floods are a great improvement of land, where a vent can be had. Mortimer's Husbandry.

6. [vente, Fr. venditio, Lat.] Sale.
For the mart, it was alleged that the vent for English cloaths would hereby be open in all times of war. Hayward.
By this war there is no vent for any commodity but of wool. Temple's Miscellany.
He drew off a thousand copies of a treatise, which not one in threecore can understand, can hardly exceed the vent of that number. Pope's Letters.

TO VENT. v. a. [venter, French, from the noun; ventare, Italian.]

1. To let out at a small aperture.
2. To let out; to give way to.
Hunger broke stone walls; that the gods sent not Corn for the rich men only; with these threads
They vented their complainings. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
When men are young, and have little else to do, they might vent the overflowings of their fancy that way. Denham.
Lab'ring still, with endless discontent,
The queen of heav'n did thus her fury vent. Dryden.

3. To utter; to report.
Had it been vented and imposed in some of the most learned ages, it might then, with some pretence of reason, have been said to be the invention of some crafty statesman. Stephens.

4. To emit; to pour out.
Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

5. To publish.
Their sectators did greatly enrich their inventions, by venting the stolen treasures of divine letters, alter'd by profane additions, and disguised by poetical conversions. Raleigh.

6. To tell; to carry to sale.
This profitable merchandize not rising to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities, they impute to the owners not venting and venturing the same. Carew.

Therefore did those nations vent such spice, sweet gums and pearls, as their own countries yielded. Raleigh.
TO VENT. v. n. To snuff. As he venteth into the air. Spenser.
VENTAIL. n. f. [from ventail, Fr.] That part of the helmet made to lift up. Spenser.

VENTANNA. n. f. [Spanish.] A window.
What after pals'd
Was far from the ventanna, when I fate;
But you were near, and can the truth relate. Dryden.

VENTER. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Any cavity of the body, chiefly applied to the head, breast and abdomen, which are called by anatomists the three venters.

2. Womb; mother.
A has issue B a son, and C a daughter, by one venter; and D a son by another venter. If B purchases in fee, and dies without issue, it shall descend to the sister, and not to the brother of the half blood. Hale.

VENTRUCT. n. f. [ventus and ductus, Latin.] A passage for the wind.

Having been informed of divers ventructs, I wish I had had the good fortune, when I was at Rome, to take notice of these organs. Boyle.

TO VENTILATE. v. a. [ventilo, Latin.]

1. To fan with wind.
In close, low, and dirty alleys, the air is penn'd up, and obstructed from being ventilated by the winds. Harvey.
Miners, by perforations with large bellows, letting down tubes, and sinking new shafts, give free passage to the air, which ventilates and cools the mines. Woodward.
2. To winnow; to fan.
3. To examine; to discuss. Not

VEN

Nor is the right of the party, nor the judicial process in right of that party to far peremptory; but that the same may be begun again, and ventilated de novo. Ayliffe.

VENTILATION. n. f. [ventilatio, Lat. from ventilate.]

1. The act of fanning; the state of being fanned.
The soul, worn with too frequent culture, must lie fallow, fill it has recruited its exhausted salts, and again enriched itself by the ventilations of the air. Addison.

2. Vent; utterance. Not in use.
To his secretary Doctor Malon, whom he let lie in a pal-let near him, for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would break out into bitter eruptions. Wotton's Buckingham.

3. Refrigeration.
Procure the blood a free course, ventilation and transpira-tion by suitable and cephratic purges. Harvey.

by Dr. Hale to supply close places with fresh air.

VENTRICLE. n. f. [ventriculus, Fr. ventriculus, Latin.]

1. The stomach.
Whether I will or not, while I live, my heart beats, and my ventricle digests what is in it. Hale.

2. Any small cavity in an animal body, particularly those of the heart.

Know'st thou how blood, which to the heart doth flow,
Doth from one ventricle to the other go? Dome.

The heart being a muscular part, the fibres are composed of two orders of fibres running spirally from base to top, contrarily one to the other; and so being drawn or contracted, confining the ventricles, and strongly force out the blood. Roy.

The mixture of blood and chyle, after its circulation through the lungs, being brought back into the left ventricle of the heart, is drove again by the heart into the aorta, through the whole arterial system. Arbuthnot.

VENTRILOQUIST. n. f. [ventrilocus, Fr. venter and loquor, Lat.]

to issue from his belly.

VENTURE. n. f. [aventure, Fr.]

1. A hazard; an undertaking of chance and danger.

Thy personal venture in the rebel's fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live so as if absolutely there were none; but when he dies to find himself confuted in the flames, this must be the height of woe and disappointment, and a bitter conviction of an irrational venture, and absurd choice. South.

I, in this venture, double gains pursue,
And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryden.

When infinite happiness is put in one scale, against infinite misery in the other; if the worst that comes to the pious man, if he mistakes, be the best that the wicked can attain to, if he be in the right, who can, without madness, run the venture? Lacke.

2. Chance; hap.
The king resolved with all speed to assail the rebels, and yet with that providence and surety, as should leave little to venture or fortune. Bacon.

3. The thing put to hazard; a stake.
My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place. Shakespeare. Mtr. of Venice.

On such a full sea are we now afloat:
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

Thrice happy you, that look as from the shore,
And have no venture in the wreck to see. Daniel.

4. A VENTURE. At hazard; without much consideration; without any thing more than the hope of a lucky chance.

You have made but an estimate of those lands at a venture, so as it should be hard to build any certainty of charge upon it. Spenser.

A bargain at a venture made,
Between two partners in a trade. Hudibras.

Atreus and an envious man joined in a petition to Jupiter, who ordered Apollo to tell them that their desire should be granted at a venture.

Here was no scampering away at a venture, without fear or wit. L'Estrange.

If Ahab be designed for death, though a soldier in the enemy's army draws a bow at a venture, yet the sure, unerring directions of providence shall carry it in a direct course to his heart. South.

TO VENTURE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dare.

A man were better rise in his suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the suit, will not in the conclusion lose both the suit and his own former favour. Bacon.

Origin mentioning their being cast out of Jerusalem, ventures to assure them that they would never be re-established, since they had committed that horrid crime against the favour of the world. Addison on the Christian Religion.

VER

2. To run a hazard.
Nor is indeed that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas,
With one frail interpoling plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden.
I am so overjoy'd, I can scarce believe I am at liberty; like a bird that has often beaten her wing in vain against her cage, dare hardly venture out, though she see it open. Dryden.
3. To VENTURE at. } To engage in; or make attempts To VENTURE on or upon. } without any security of success, upon mere hope.

That slander is found a truth now; and held for certain,
The king will venture at it. Shakespeare.

It were a matter of great profit, save that it is too conjectural to venture upon, if one could discern what corn, herbs, or fruits are like to be in plenty and scarcity, by some signs in the beginning of the year. Bacon.

I never yet the tragic strain essay'd,
Deter'd by that inimitable maid:
And when I venture at the comic file,
Thy scornful lady seems to mock my toil. Waller.

Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms as aureiæ and faxietas. Lacke.

Turco-Papismus I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping of characters. Atterbury.

TO VENTURE. v. a.

1. To expose to hazard.
In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight;
By vent'ring both, I oft found both. Shakespeare.

2. To put or send on a venture.
The fifth ventured for France, they pack in staunch hogheads, so as to keep them in their pickle. Carew.

VENTURER. n. f. [from venture.] He who ventures.

VENTUROUS. adj. [from venture.] Daring, bold, fearless;
ready to run hazards.

Charles was guided by mean men, who would make it their master-piece of favour to give venturous counsels, which no great or wise man would. Bacon.

He paus'd not, but with vent'rous arm
He pluck'd, he tafted. Milton's Par. Lost.

The vent'rous humour of our mariners costs this island
many brave lives every year. Temple.

Savage pirates seek through seas unknown,
The lives of others, vent'rous of their own. Pope.

VENTUROUSLY. adv. [from venturous.] Daringly; fearlessly; boldly.

Siege was laid to the fort by the Lord Gray, then deputy, with a smaller number than those were within the fort; venturosly indeed; but haste was made to attack them before the rebels came in to them. Bacon.

VENTUROUSNESS. n. f. [from venturous.] Boldness; willingness to hazard.

Her coming into a place where the walls and ciplings were whited over, much offended her sight, and made her repent her vent'rosness. Boyle on Colours.

VER. verb. [verb, Fr. verbalis, Latin.]

VERB. n. f. [verbe, Fr. verbalis, Lat.] A part of speech signifying existence, or some modification thereof, as action, passion. And withal some disposition or intention of the mind relating thereto, as of affirming, denying, interrogating, commanding. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

Men usually talk of a noun and a verb. Shake.

VERBAL. adj. [verbal, Fr. verbalis, Latin.]

If young African for fame, in arms
His wasted country freed from Punick rage, the venture
The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least. Milton.

And loses, though but verbal, his reward.

Being at first out of the way to science, in the progress of their inquiries they must lose themselves, and the truth, in a verbal labyrinth. Glanville.

It was such a denial or confession of him as would appear in preaching; but this is managed in words and verbal profession. South.

VER

4. Verbose; full of words. Out of use. I am sorry
You put me to forget a lady's manners,
By being so verbal. Shakspeare
5. Minutely exact in words.
6. Literal; having word answering to word.
Neglect the rules each verbal critic lays,
For not to know some trifles is a praise. Pope
Whoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it. Denham
The verbal copier is incumber'd with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself from all. Dryden
7. Verbal, Fr. in grammar.] A verbal noun is a noun derived from a verb.
VERBALITY. n. f. [from verbal.] Mere bare words.
Sometimes he will seem to be charmed with words of holy scripture, and to fly from the letter and dead verbality, who must only start at the life and animated materials thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors VERBALLY. adv. [from verbal.]
1. In words; orally.
The manner of our denying the deity of Christ here prohibited, was by words and oral expressions verbally to deny it. South's Sermons
2. Word for word.
'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally, and well, at the same time. Dryden
VERBATIM. adv. [Latin.] Word for word.
Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen. Shakspeare
See the transcripts of both charters verbatim in Mat.
Paris. Hale
TO VERBERATE. v. a. [verbero, Lat.] To beat; to strike.
VERBERATION. n. f. [verberatio, Fr. from verberate.] Blows; beating.

the effects of which are redness and inflammation; all the effects of a soft press or verberation. Arbutnot VERBOSE. adj. [verbosus, Lat.] Exuberant in words; pro-lix; tedious by multiplicity of words.
Let envy
Ill-judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake, Draw tuns unmeasurable. Prior
They ought to be brief, and not too verbose in their way of speaking; and to propound the matter of their argument in a mild and gentle manner. Ayliffe's Parergon VERBOSITY. n. f. [verbositas, Fr. from verbosus.] Exuberance of words; much empty talk.
He draweth out the thread of his verbosity Finer than the staple of his argument. Shakspeare
To give an hint more of the verbosity of this philosophy, a short view of a definition or two will be sufficient evidence. Glauville
Homer is guilty of verbosity, and of a tedious prolix manner of speaking; he is the greatest talker of all antiquity. Broomer
VERDANT. n. f. [verdantus, Fr. viridans, Lat.] Green. This word is so lately naturalized, that Skinner could find it only in a dictionary.

1. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority. The mace of a dean.
Suppose him now a dean complete,
Devoutly lolling in his seat;
The silver verge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side.
2. [verge, Latin.] The brink; the edge; the utmost border.
Would the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to fear me to the brain. Shakspeare
I say, and will in battle prove,
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge,
That ever was survey'd by English eye. Shakspeare
You are old,
Nature in you stands on the very verge Of her confine. Shakspeare, K. Lear
Serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Left it again dissolve and show'r the earth.
Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul, that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all, and verge enough for more. Dryden
Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem.
Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir,
To sooth his care, and, free from noise and strife,
Conduct him gently to the verge of life. Pope
3. In law.
Verge is the compass of the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seems to have been 12 miles round. Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and holding it in his hand, I sweareth fealty to the lord of a manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge. Crovel
Fear not; whom we raise,
We will make fast within a hallow'd verge. Shakspeare
TO VERGE. v. n. [vergo, Lat.] To tend; to bend downwards.
They serve indifferently for vowels in respect of the aperture, and for consonants in respect of the pene-aperture, and so much the more verging either way, according to the respective occasions. Holder
The nearer I find myself verging to that period of life which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left. Swift Such are indicated, when the juices of a human body verge to putrefaction. Arbutnot
Man,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not the whole. Pope VERGER. n. f. [from verge.] He that carries the mace before the dean.
I can tip the verges with half a crown, and get into the best seat. Farghar
VERIDICAL. adj. [veridicus, Latin.] Telling truth.
VERIFICATION. n. f. [from veriffy.] Confirmation by argument or evidence.
In verification of this we will mention a phenomenon of our engine.
TO VERIFY. v. n. [verifier, Fr.] To justify against charge of falshood; to confirm; to prove true.
What seemeth to have been uttered concerning sermons, and their efficacy or necessity, in regard of divine matter, must consequently be verified in sundry other kinds of teaching, if the matter be the same in all. Hester
This is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored. Bacon
So shalt thou best fulfill, best verify
The prophets old, who sung thy endless reign. Milton
So spake this oracle, then veriff'd
When Jesus, son of Mary, second Eve. Milton's Par. Lost
Though you may mistake a year;
Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be veriff'd at last. Swift Spain shall have three kings; which is now wonderfully verified; for besides the king of Portugal, there are now two rivals for Spain. Swift's Martin's Prophecy VERILY. adv. [from verus.]
1. In truth; certainly.
Verily 'tis better to be lowly born,
Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief. Shakspeare
2. With

VER

2. With great confidence.
It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavourers of that voyage, the enterprise had succeeded. Bacon
By repeating the sacramental test, we are verily persuaded the consequence will be an entire alteration of religion among us. Swift on the Sacramental Test VERISIMILAR. adj. [verisimilitudo, Latin.] Probable; likely.
VERISIMILITUDE. n. f. [verisimilitudo, Latin.] Probability; likelihood; resemblance of truth.
Touching the verisimilitude or probable truth of this relation, several reasons seem to overthrow it. Brown
A noble nation, upon whom if not such verities, at least such verisimilitudes of fortune were placed. Brown's Vul. Er.
Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase; but true knowledge is dear and difficult. I like a point, it requires an acuteness to its discovery: while verisimilitude, like the expanded superficies, is obvious, sensible, and affords a large and easy held for loose enquiry. Glauville
The plot, the wit, the characters, the passions, are exalted as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimilitude. Dryden's Essay on Dramatick Poetry Though Horace gives permission to painters and poets to dash every thing, yet he encourages neither to make things out of nature and verisimilitude. Dryden VERITABLE. adj. [veritable, Fr.] True; agreeable to fact.
Indeed 'tis true?
— Most veritable; the year succeeding made from insects in oak-apples, is I doubt too indistinct, nor veritable from event. Brown's Vulgar Errors
VERITY. n. f. [veritas, Fr. veritas, Latin.]
1. Truth; consonance to the reality of things.
If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of religion established, let them believe God himself thus miraculously working for it. Hooker
I saw their weapons drawn; there was a noise;
That's verity. Shakspeare's Tempest
The precipitancy of disputation, and the fur and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity; its calm intimations can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whistle among a crowd of sailors in a storm. Glauville
It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty. South
2. A true assertion; a true tenet.
And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity. Sidney Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleases God, of his gracious goodness, to inflat that celestial verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls. Hooker
If there come truth from them,
Why by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well?
Must virtue be preferred by a lie?
Virtue and truth do ever best agree;
By this it seems to be a verity,
Since the effects so good and virtuous be. Davies
Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts.
VERJUICE. n. f. [verjus, French.] Acid liquor exptrelled from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced zarges.
Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love
verjuice. L'Estrange
The barley-pudding comes in place;
Then bids fall on; himself, for saving charges,
A peck'd sic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden
The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd
Through th' infix'd graft, a grateful mixture forms
Of tart and sweet. Philips VERMICELLI. n. f. [Italian.] A paste rolled and broken in the form of worms.
With oysters, eggs, and vermicelli,
She let him almost burst his belly. Prior VERMICULAR. adj. [vermiculus, Latin.] Acting like a worm;
continued from one part to another of the same body.
By the vermicular motion of the intestines, the grosser parts are deriv'd downwards, while the finer are squeez'd into the narrow orifices of the lacteal vessels. Cheyne
TO VERMICULATE. v. a. [vermiculo, Fr. vermiculatus, Lat.]
To inlay; to work in chequer work; or pieces of divers colours. Bailey
VERMICULATION. n. f. [from vermicular.] Continuation of motion from one part to another.
My heart moves naturally by the motion of palpitation;
my guts by the motion of vermiculation. Hale VERMICULE. n. f. [vermiculus, vermis, Latin.] A little grub, worm.

VER

- I saw the shining oak-ball ichneumon strike its cerebrum into an oak-apple, to lay its eggs therein; and hence are many ver-micules seen towards the outside of these apples. Derham VERMICULOUS. adj. [vermiculosus, Lat.] Full of grubs.
VERMIFORM. adj. [vermiforme, Fr. vermis and forma, Lat.]
Having the shape of a worm.
VERMIFUGE. n. f. [from vermis and fuge, Lat.] Any medicine that destroys or expels worms.
VERMIL. n. f. [vermeil, vermillon, Fr.]
VERMILION. n. f. [from vermeil, vermillon, Fr.]
1. The cochineal; a grub of a particular plant.
2. Factitious or native cinnabar; sulphur mixed with mercury.
This is the usual, though not primitive signification.
The imperfect metals are subject to rust, except mercury, which is made into vermilion by solution or calcination. Bacon
The fairest and most principal red is vermilion, called in Latin minium. It is a poison, and found where great store of quicksilver is. Peacham
3. Any beautiful red colour.
How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermilion stain,
Like crimion dy'd in grain. Spenser
There grew a goodly tree him fair beside,
Loaded with fruit and apples rose red,
As they in pure vermilion had been dy'd,
Whereof great virtues over all were read. Fairy Queen Simple colours are strong and sensible, though they are clear as vermilion. Dryden's Dufresnoy
TO VERMILION. v. a. [from the noun.] To die red.
A sprightly red vermilion all her face,
And her eyes languish with unusual grace. Glauville VERMINE. n. f. [vermine, Fr. vermis, Latin.] Any noxious animal. Used commonly for small creatures.
What is your study?
— How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin. Shakspeare
The head of a wolf, dried and hanged up in a dove-house, will scare away vermin, such as weazels and polecats. Bacon
An idle person only lives to spend his time, and eat the fruits of the earth, like a vermin or a wolf. Taylor
The stars determine
You are my prisoners, bale vermin. Hudibras
A weazel taken in a trap, was charg'd with misdemeanors, and the poor vermin stood much upon her innocence. L'Estr.
Great injuries these vermin, mice and rats, do in the field. Mortimer's Husbandry
He that has so little wit
To nourish vermin, may be bit. Swift
TO VERMINATE. v. n. [from vermin.] To breed vermine.
VERMINATION. n. f. [from verminate.] Generation of ver-mine.
Redi discarding anomalous generation, tried experiments relating to the vermination of serpents and flesh. Derham VERMINOUS. adj. [from vermine.] Tending to vermine; disposed to breed vermine.
A wasting of childrens flesh depends upon some obstruction of the entrails, or verminous disposition of the body. Harvey VERMIPAROUS. adj. [vermis and pario, Lat.] Producing worms.
Hereby they confound the generation of vermiparous animals with oviparous. Brown's Vulgar Errors VERNACULAR. adj. [vernaculus, Latin.] Native; of one's own country.
London weekly bills number deep in consumptions; the same likewise proving inseparable accidents to most other diseases; which instances do evidently bring a consumption under the notion of a vernacular disease to England. Harvey
The histories of all our former wars are transmitted to us in our vernacular idiom. I do not find in any of our chronicles, that Edward the third ever reconnoiter'd the enemy, though he often discovered the posture of the French, and as often vanquished them. Addison VERNAL. adj. [vernus, Latin.] Belonging to the spring.
With the year
Seasons return; but not to me returns,
Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose. Milton
VERNANT. n. f. [vernans, Lat.] Flourishing as in the spring.
Else had the spring
Perpetual smil'd on earth, with vernant flow'rs,
Equal in days and nights. Milton's Par. Lost VERNILITY. n. f. [verna, Lat.] Servile carriage; the submissive fawning behaviour of a slave. Bailey
VERREL. See FERRULE.
VERSABILITY. n. f. [versabilis, Lat.] Aptness to be turn'd VERSABLENESS. n. f. or wound any way. DiG.
VERSAL. adj. [A cant word for universal.] Total; whole.
Some for brevity.
Have cast the vernal world's nativity. Hudibras
VERSATILE. adj. [versatilis, Lat.]
1. That may be turned round.
2. Changeable;

2. Changeable; variable.
One colour to us standing in one place, hath a contrary aspect in another; as in those versatile representations in the neck of a dove, and folds of scarlet. Glaville.
3. Easily applied to a new task.
VERSATILENESS. n. f. [from versatilis.] The quality of being versatile.
VERSE. n. f. [from versus, Latin.]
1. A line consisting of a certain succession of sounds, and number of syllables.
Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love. Shakefp.
2. [from verset, Fr.] A section or paragraph of a book.
Thus far the questions proceed upon the construction of the first earth; in the following verses they proceed upon the demolition of that earth. Burnet.
3. Poetry; lays; metrical language.
Verse embalms virtue: and tombs and thrones of rhymes Preserve frail transitory fame as much Donne.
As spice doth body from air's corrupt touch.
If envious eyes their hurtful rays have cast,
More powerful verse shall free thee from the blast. Dryden.
Whilst the did her various pow'r dispole;
Virtue was taught in verse, and Athens' glory rose. Prior.
You compose
In play-foot verses, or hobbling prose. Prior.
4. A piece of poetry.
Let this verse, my friend, be thine. Pope.
TO VERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tell in verse; to relate poetically.
In the shape of Corin fate all day,
Playing on pipes of corn, and versing love. Shakefp.
TO BE VERSED. v. n. [from versor, Latin.] To be skilled in; to be acquainted with.
She might be ignorant of their nations, who was not versed in their names, as not being present at the general survey of animals, when Adam assigned unto every one a name concordant unto its nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
This, versed in death, th' infernal knight relates.
And then for proof fulfill'd their common fates. Dryden.
VERSEMAN. n. f. [verse and man.] A poet; a writer in verse.
The god of us versemen, you know, child, the sun. Prior.
VERSCULE. n. f. [versculus, Latin.] A little verse.
VERSIFICATION. n. f. [versification, Fr. from versify.] The art or practice of making verses.
Donne alone had your talent, but was not happy to arrive at your versification. Dryden.
Some object to his versification; which is in poetry, what colouring is in painting, a beautiful ornament. But if the proportions are just, though the colours should happen to be rough, the piece may be of inestimable value. Granville.
VERIFICATION. n. f. [versification, Fr. from versify.] The art or practice of making verses.
VERIFIER. n. f. [versifier, Latin.] A versifier; a maker of verses with or without the spirit of poetry.
Statius, the best versifier next Virgil, knew not how to design after him. Dryden.
In Job and the Psalms we shall find more sublime ideas, more elevated language, than in any of the heathen versifiers of Greece or Rome. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
TO VERSIFY. v. n. [versifier, Fr. versifier, Latin.] To make verses.
You would wonder to hear how soon even children will begin to versify. Sidney.
To follow rather the Goths in rhyming, than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat bread among men. Asham.
I'll versify in spite, and do my best,
To make as much waste paper as the rest. Dryden.
TO VERSIFY. v. a. To relate in verse.
Unintermix'd with fictitious fantasies, Daniel.
I'll versify the truth, not poetize.
VERSION. n. f. [version, Fr. versio, Latin.]
1. Change; transformation.
Springs, the antients thought to be made by the version of air into water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. Change of direction.
Comets are rather gazed upon, than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comets, for magnitude, colour, version of the beams, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon.
3. Translation.
This exact propriety of Virgil I particularly regarded; but must confess, that I have not been able to make him appear wholly like himself. For where the original is close, no version can reach it in the same compass. Dryden.
4. The act of translating.
VERT. n. f. [vert, Fr.]
1. Vert, in the laws of the forest, signifies every thing that grows, and bears a green leaf within the forest, that may cover and hide a deer. Cowel.

VER

- I find no mention in all the records of Ireland, of a park or free warren, notwithstanding the great plenty of vert and venison. Sir J. Davies.
- VERTEBRAL. adj. [from vertebra, Latin.] Relating to the joints of the spine.
The carotid, vertebral, and splenic arteries are not only variously contorted, but here and there dilated, to moderate the motion of the blood. Ray on the Creation.
VERTEBRE. n. f. [vertebre, Fr. vertebra, Latin.] A joint of the back.
The several vertebrae are so elegantly compacted together, that they are as strong as if they were but one bone. Ray.
- VERTEX. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Zenith; the point over head.
These keep the vertex; but betwixt the bear
And shining zodiac, where the planets err,
A thousand figur'd constellations roll. Creech.
2. A top of a hill.
Mountains especially abound with different species of vegetables; every vertex or eminence affording new kinds. Darham.
- VERTICAL. adj. [vertical, Fr. from vertex.]
1. Placed in the zenith.
'Tis raging noon; and vertical the sun
Darts on the head direct his forceful rays. Thomson.
2. Placed in a direction perpendicular to the horizon.
From these laws, all the rules of bodies ascending or descending in vertical lines may be deduced. Chyene.
- VERTICALITY. n. f. [from vertical.] The state of being in the zenith.
Unto them the sun is vertical twice a year; making two distinct summers in the different points of the verticality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- VERTICALLY. adv. [from vertical.] In the zenith.
Although it be not vertical unto any part of Asia, yet it vertically passeth over Peru and Brasilia. Brown.
- VERTICILLATE. adj. [from verticillus, Latin.]
Verticillate plants are such as have their flowers intermix'd with small leaves growing in a kind of whorls about the joints of a stalk, as penny-royal, horchound, &c. Quincy.
- VERTICITY. n. f. [from vertex.] The power of turning; circumvolution; rotation.
Those stars do not peculiarly glance on us, but carry a common regard unto all countries, unto whom their verticity is also common. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
We believe the verticity of the needle, without a certificate from the days of old. Glaville.
Whether they be globules, or whether they have a verticity about their own centers, that produce the idea of whiteness in us, the more particles of light are reflected from a body, the whiter does the body appear. Locke.
- VERTIGINOUS. adj. [vertiginosus, Latin.]
1. Turning round; rotatory.
This vertiginous motion gives day and night successively over the whole earth, and makes it habitable all around. Bentley.
2. Giddy.
These extinguish candles, make the workmen faint and vertiginous; and, when very great, suffocates and kills them. Woodward.
- VERTIGO. n. f. [Latin.] A giddiness; a sense of turning in the head.
Vertigo is the appearance of visible objects that are without motion, as if they turned round, attended with a fear of falling, and a dimness of sight.
The forerunners of an apoplexy are dulness, vertigo, tremblings. Arbutnot.
That old vertigo in his head,
Will never leave him till he's dead. Swift.
- VERVAIN. n. f. [verveine, Fr. vervaine, Latin.] A plant.
VERVINE. n. f. [verveine, Fr. vervaine, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a labiate flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip is upright, and commonly divided into two; but the under lip is cut into three parts; so that at first sight it appears like a flower with five leaves. These are succeeded by four naked seeds, which fill the calyx. The flowers generally grow in spikes, but not in whorls, round the stalks. Miller.
The nightshade flows to work him ill,
Therewith the vervain, and her dill,
That hindreth witches of their will.
Some scatt'ring pot-herbs here and there he found,
Which cultivated with his daily care,
And bruis'd with vervain, were his frugal fare. Dryden.
- VERVAIN mallow. n. f. A plant.
It hath the whole habit of the mallow or althea; but differs from it in having its leaves deeply divided. Miller.
- VERVULES. n. f. [vervulle, Fr.] Labels tied to a hawk.
- VERY. adv. [very, or orah, French; whence very in ancient English.]
1. True; real.
Why do I pity him,
That with his very heart deserveth me. Shakefp.
In very deed, as the Lord liveth. 1 Sam. xxv. 34.
O that

VES

- O that in very deed we might behold it. Dryden and Lee.
2. Having any qualities, commonly bad, in an eminent degree.
Those who had drunk of Circe's cup, were turned into very beasts. Davies.
There, where very desolation dwells,
By grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid shades,
She may pass on. Milton.
3. To note the things emphatically, or eminently.
'Tis an ill office for a gentleman;
Especially against his very friend.
Was not my love Shakefp.
The verier wag o'th' two?
We can contain ourselves, Shakefp.
Were he the veriest antick in the world.
In a feeing age, the very knowledge of former times palls but for ignorance in a better dress. South.
The pictures of our great grandmothers in Queen Elizabeth's time, are clothed down to the very wrists, and up to the very chin. Addison's Guardian.
4. Same.
Women are as roses, whose fair flower
Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour. Shakefp.
The cocks beat the partridge, which she laid to heart;
but finding these very cocks cutting one another, she comforted herself. L'Estrange.
So catholic a grace is charity, that whatever time is the special opportunity of any other christian grace, that very time is also the special opportunity of charity. Spratt.
- VERV. adv. In a great degree; in an eminent degree.
The Greek orator was so very famous for this, that his antagonist reading over the oration which had procured his banishment, asked them, if they were so much affected by the bare reading of it, how much more they would have been alarmed, had they heard him? Addison.
- TO VESICATE. v. a. [vesica, Latin.] To blister.
Celsus proposes, that in all these internal wounds, the external parts be vesicated, to make more powerful revulsion from within. Wise's Surgery.
I saw the cuticle vesicated, and shining with a burning heat. Wise.
- VESICATION. n. f. [from vesicate.] Blistering; separation of the cuticle.
I applied some vinegar prepared with litharge, defending the vesication with plasters. Wise's Surgery.
- VESICATORY. n. f. [vesicatorium, technical Latin.] A blistering medicine.
- VESSICLE. n. f. [vesicula, Latin.] A small cuticle, filled or inflated.
Nor is the humour contained in smaller veins, but in a vesicle, or little bladder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The lungs are made up of such air pipes and vesicles interwoven with blood-vessels, to purify, ferment, or supply the languorous mass with nitro-aerial particles. Ray.
- VESICULAR. adj. [from vesicula, Latin.] Hollow; full of small interstices.
A muscle is a bundle of vesicular threads, or of solid filaments, involved in one common membrane. Obeyne.
- VESPER. n. f. [Latin.] The evening star; the evening.
These signs are black Vesper's pageants. Shakefp.
- VESPER. n. f. [without the singular, from vesperus, Latin.] The evening service of the Romish church.
- VESPERTINE. adj. [vesperinus, Latin.] Happening or coming in the evening; pertaining to the evening.
- VESSEL. n. f. [vaselle, Fr. vas, Latin.]
1. Any thing in which liquids, or other things, are put.
For Banquo's ill heave I fill'd my mind;
Put rancours in the *vesse*l of my peace, Shakefp. Macbeth.
Only for them.
If you have two *vesse*l to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, there still remains one *vesse*l empty. Burnet.
2. The containing parts of an animal body.
Of these elements are constituted the smallest fibres; of those fibres the *vesse*ls; of those *vesse*ls the organs of the body. Arbutnot on Aliments.
3. Any vehicle in which men or goods are carried on the water.
The sons and nephews of Noah, who peopled the isles, had *vesse*ls to transport themselves. Raleigh's Essays.
The *vesse*l is represented as stranded. The figure before it seems to lift it off the shallows. Addison on Medals.
From storms of rage, and dangerous rocks of pride,
Let thy strong hand this little *vesse*l guide;
It was thy hand that made it: through the tide
Impetuous of this life, let thy command
Direct my course, and bring me safe to land. Prior.
Now secure the painted *vesse*l glides;
The fun-beams trembling on the floating tides. Pope.
4. Any capacity; any thing containing.
I have my fill
Of knowledge, what this *vesse*l can contain. Milton.
TO VESSEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a vessel; to barrel.

VET

- Take earth, and vest it; and in that set the feed. Bacon.
- VE'SSETS. n. f. A kind of cloth commonly made in Suffolk. Bailey.
- VE'SSION. n. f. [among horsemen.] A windgall, or soft swelling on the inside and outside of a horse's hoof. Diët.
- VEST. n. f. [vestis, Latin.] An outer garment.
Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
When the queen in royal habit's dress,
Old myttick emblems grace th' imperial vest. Smith.
- TO VEST. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To dress; to deck; to enrobe.
The verdant fields with those of heav'n may vie;
With ether vested, and a purple sky. Dryden.
Light! Nature's resplendent robe;
Without whose vesting beauty all were wrapt
In gloom. Thomson.
2. To dress in a long garment.
Just Symeon, and prophetic Anna spoke,
Before the altar and the vested priest. Milton.
3. To make possessor of; to invest with.
To settle men's consciences, 'tis necessary that they know the person, who by right is vested with power over them. Locke.
Had I been vested with the monarch's pow'r,
Thou must have sigh'd, unlucky youth! in vain. Prior.
4. To place in possession.
The militia their commissioners positively required to be entirely vested in the parliament. Clarendon.
Empire and dominion was vested in him, for the good and behoof of others. Locke.
- VE'STAL. n. f. [vestalis, Latin.] A virgin consecrated to Vesta; a pure virgin.
Women are not
In their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure
The ne'er-touch'd vestal. Shakefp.
How happy is the blameless vestal's lot?
The world forgetting, by the world forgot. Pope.
- VE'STAL. adj. [vestalis, Latin.] Denoting pure virginity.
Her vestal livery is but sick and green, Shakefp.
And none but fools do wear it.
- VE'STIBULE. n. f. [vestibulum, Latin.] The porch or first entrance of a house.
VE'STIGE. n. f. [vestigium, Latin.] Footstep; mark left behind in passing.
The truth passes so slightly through men's imaginations, that they must use great subtilty to track its vestiges. Harvey.
- VE'STMENT. n. f. [vestimentum, Latin.] Garment; part of dress.
Were it not better that the love which men bear unto God, should make the least things that are employed in his service amiable, than that their over-scrupulous dislike of so mean a thing as a vestment, should from the very service of God withdraw their hearts and affections. Hooker.
Heaven then would seem thy image, and reflect Those sable vestments, and that bright aspect. Waller.
The sculptors could not give vestments suitable to the quality of the persons represented. Dryden.
- VE'STRY. n. f. [vestiarius, Fr. vestiarium, Latin.]
1. A room appendant to the church, in which the sacerdotal garments, and consecrated things are deposited.
Bold Amycus, from the robb'd vestry brings
The chalices of heav'n; and holy things
Of precious weight. Dryden.
2. A parochial assembly commonly convened in the vestry.
The common-council are chosen every year, so many for every parish, by the vestry, and common convention of the people of that parish. Clarendon.
Go with me where paltry constables will not summon us to vestries. Blount to Pope.
- VE'STURE. n. f. [vesture, old Fr. vestura, Italian.]
1. Garment; robe.
Her breasts half hid, and half were laid to show;
Her envious vesture greedily fight repelling. Fairfax.
What, weep you when you but behold
Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Shakefp. Julius Cæsar.
To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss. Shakefp.
Here ruddy brais, and gold resplendent blaz'd;
There polish'd chests embroider'd vestures grac'd. Pope.
2. Dress; habit; external form.
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
But this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly clothe us in, we cannot hear it. Shakefp.
Rocks, precipices, and gulfs, apparell'd with a vesture of plants, would resemble mountains and vallies. Bentley.
- VETCH. n. f. [vicia, Latin.] A plant with a papilionaceous flower; from the empalement arises the pointal, which becomes a pod full of roundish or angular seeds: to which must be added, that the leaves grow by pairs on a middle rib, ending in a tendril.

UGL

- Where vetches, pulse, and tares have food,
And stalks of lupines grew. Dryden.
An ervum is a sort of vetch, or small pea. Arbutnot.
VE'CHY. n. f. [from vetch.] Made of vetches; abounding in vetches; consisting of vetch or pea-furrow.
If to my cottage thou wilt resort,
There may'st thou liege in a vetchy bed,
'Till fairer fortune shew forth his head. Spenser.
VE'TERAN. n. f. [from veteranus, Latin.] An old soldier; a man long practised in any thing.
We were forced to uncover, or be regarded as veterans in the beau monde. Addison.
The Arians, for the credit of their faction, took the eldest,
the best experienced, the most wary, and the longest-practised veterans they had amongst them. Hooker.
If king Charles II. had made war upon France, he might have conquered it by the many veterans, which had been inured to service in the civil wars. Addison.
Ensigns that pierce'd the foe's remotest lines,
The hardy veterans with tears resign. Addison.
VE'TERAN. adj. Long practised in war; long experienced.
There was a mighty strong army of land-forces, to the number of fifty thousand veteran soldiers. Bacon.
The British youth shall hail thy wise command;
Thy temper'd ardour, and thy veteran skill. Thompson.
VETERINARIAN. n. f. [from veterinarius, Lat.] One skilled in the diseases of cattle.
That a horse has no gall, is not only swallowed by common farriers, but also receiv'd by good veterinarians, and some who have laudably discours'd upon horses. Brown.
TO VEX. v. a. [from vex, Latin.]
1. To plague; to torment; to harass.
Do you think
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd? Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes. Shak.
When the pressed him daily, so that his soul was vexed unto death, he told her all his heart. Judges xvi. 16.
Still may the dog the wandering troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train. Dryden.
You are the cause of all my care;
Your eyes ten thousand dangers dart;
Ten thousand torments vex my heart;
I love, and I despair. Prior.
2. To disturb; to disquiet.
Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex'd sea; singing aloud. Shakespeare.
Rang'd on the banks beneath our equal oars,
While e'en the waves, and the vex'd ocean roars. Pope.
3. To trouble with slight provocations.
VEXA'TION. n. f. [from vex.]
1. The act of troubling.
O that husband,
My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated vexations of it. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
2. The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.
Vexation almost stops my breath,
That fondred friends greet in the hour of death. Shakespeare.
Passions too violent, instead of heightening our pleasures, afford us nothing but vexation and pain. Temple.
3. The cause of trouble or uneasiness.
Your children were vexation to your youth;
But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shakespeare.
4. An act of harassing by law.
Albeit the party grieved thereby, may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation. Bacon.
5. A slight teasing trouble.
VEXA'TIOUS. adj. [from vexation.]
1. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.
Consider him maintaining his usurped title, by continual vexatious wars against the kings of Judah. South.
Vexatious thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;
Haunted my nights, and terrify'd my days;
Salk'd through my gardens, and purf'd my ways;
No flut from art bow't, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.
2. Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.
He leads a vexatious life, who in his noblest actions is so gored with scruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another. Digby.
3. Teasing; slightly troublesome.
VEXA'TIOUSLY. adv. [from vexatious.] Troublesomely; uneasily.
VEXA'TIOUSNESS. n. f. [from vexatious.] Troublesomeness; uneasiness.
VEXER. [from vex.] He who vexes.
UGLY. adv. [from ugly.] Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.
UGLINESS. n. f. [from ugly.]
1. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

VIB

- All that else seem'd fair and fresh in sight,
Was turned now to dreadful ugliness. Spenser.
She takes her topicks from the advantages of old age and ugliness. Dryden.
2. Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.
Their dull ribaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the fin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.
UGLY. adj. [This word was antiently written ugly; whence
Mr. Dier ingeniously deduces it from ugly; that is, like an ouph, elf, or goblin. In Saxon uga is terror; and in Gothic ugan is to fear.] Deformed; offensive to the sight;
contrary to beautiful.
If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life, Shakespeare.
That makes me ugly. Shakespeare.
O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly fights, of ghastly dreams. Shakespeare.
Was this the cottage, and the safe abode
Thou toldst me of? What grim aspects are these.
These ugly-headed monsters? Milton.
VIAL. n. f. [from vialis.] A small bottle.
Edward's seven fons
Were as seven vials of his sacred blood. Shakespeare.
And from your sacred vials pour your grace
Upon my daughter's head. Shakespeare.
Take thou this vial, being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off.
Another lamp burnt in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the antient Romans inclosed in a glass
vial. Wilkins.
I placed a thin vial, well stopp'd up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing follow'd. Addison.
Chemical waters, that are each transparent, when separated, ferment into a thick troubled liquor, when mix'd in the same vial. Addison.
TO VIAL. v. a. To inclose in a vial.
This she with precious vial'd liquors heals;
For which the shepherds at the festivals
Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays. Milton.
VIALD. n. f. [from vialis, Fr. vivanda, Ital.] Food; meat dress'd.
The belly only like a gulf remain'd,
Forth' midst of the body idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viald. Shakespeare.
No matter, since
They've left their vials behind, for we have stomachs.
Will please you taste of what is here?
These are not fruits forbidden; no interdiction
Defends the touching of these vials pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil. Milton.
From some fons of food let's pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such vials, had better to abstain. Ray.
The tables in fair order spread;
Vials of various kinds allure the taste,
Of choicest sort and favour; rich repast!
VIALTICUM. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Provision for a journey.
2. The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.
TO VIBRATE. v. a. [from vibro, Latin.]
1. To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.
2. To make to quiver.
Breath vocalized, that is vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not. Holder.
TO VIBRATE. v. n.
1. To play up and down, or to and fro.
The air, compressed by the fall and weight of the quick-silver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate a little up and down. Dryden.
Do not all fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light, and shine? And is not this emission performed by the vibrating motions of their parts? Newton.
2. To quiver.
The whisper, that to greatness fill too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear. Pope.
VIBRA'TION. n. f. [from vibro, Latin.] The act of moving, or being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns; the act of quivering.
It sparkled like the coal upon the altar, with the fervours of piety, the heats of devotion, and the fallies and vibrations of an harmless activity. South.
Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? Which vibra- tions being propagated along the solid fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, cause the sense of feeling. Newton.
Mild vibrations looth the parted soul,
New to the dawning of celestial day. Thompson.

VICAR.

VIC

- VICAR. n. f. [from vicarius, Latin.]
1. The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.
Procure the vicar
To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakespeare.
Yours is the prize;
The vicar my defeat, and all the village see. Dryden.
A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spoiling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy decried, what a contempt must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order. Swift.
2. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.
An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Ayliffe.
VICARAGE. n. f. [from vicar.] The benefice of a vicar.
This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never deserted his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.
VICARIOUS. adj. [from vicarius, Latin.] Deputed; delegated; acting in the place of another.
The soul in the body is but a subordinate efficient, and vicarious and instrumental in the hands of the Almighty, being but his substitute in this regimen of the body. Hale.
What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul. Norris.
VICARSHIP. n. f. [from vicar.] The office of a vicar.
VICE. n. f. [from vitium, Latin.]
1. The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate life.
No spirit more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton.
The foundation of error will lie in wrong measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.
2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.
No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shakespeare.
Yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed.
Un govern'd appetite, a brutish vice. Shakespeare.
I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.
3. The fool, or punchinello of old shows.
I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to sustain;
Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath,
Cries, ah, ha! to the devil. Shakespeare.
His face made of brass, like a vice in a game. Tupper.
4. [Vice, Dutch.] A kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen.
He found that marbles taught him percussion; bottle-screws,
the vice; whittigges, the axis in peritrochio. Arbutnot and Pope.
5. Gripe; grasp.
If I but fist him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakespeare.
6. [Vice, Latin.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superiour, or who has the second rank in command: as a vicary; vice-chancellor.
TO VICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To draw.
With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen't, or been an instrument
To vice you to't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly. Shakespeare's Winter Tale.
VICEDADMIRAL. n. f. [from vice and admiral.]
1. The second commander of a fleet.
The foremost of the fleet was the admiral: the rear-admiral was Cara Malometes, an arch-pirate. The vice- admiral in the middle of the fleet with a great squadron of gallees, struck sail directly. Knolles.
2. A naval officer of the second rank.
VICEDADMIRALTY. n. f. [from vice-admiral.] The office of a vice-admiral.
The vice-admiralty is exercised by Mr. Trenanion. Carew.
VICAGENT. n. f. [from vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another.
A vassal Satan hath made his vice-agent, to cross whatever the faithful ought to do. Hooker.
VICED. adj. [from vicied.] Vicious; corrupt.
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakespeare.
VICEREGENT. n. f. [from vicem gerens, Lat.] A lieutenant;
one who is intrusted with the power of the superiour, by whom he is deputed.
All precepts concerning kings are comprehended in these;
remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's vice-gerent.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God; in unshaken duty to his vice-gerent; in hearty obedience to his church. Sprat.

VIC

- Great Father of the gods, when for our crimes
Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times;
Some tyrant king, the terror of his age,
The type and true vice-gerent of thy rage,
Thus punish. Dryden.
Thou great vice-gerent of the king;
In all affairs thou sole director. Swift.
VICEREGENT. adj. [from viceregens, Lat.] Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.
Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee,
Vicerent son! To thee I have transfer'd
All judgment, whether in heav'n, or earth, or hell. Milton.
VICERGENCY. n. f. [from viceregent.] The office of a vice- gerent; lieutenant; deputed power.
The authority of conference stands founded upon its vice- gerency and deputation under God. South.
VICERCHANCELLOR. n. f. [from vice-chancellor, Latin.] The second magistrate of the universities.
VICENARY. adj. [from vicenarius, Lat.] Belonging to twenty. Bailey.
VICEROY. n. f. [from vicereis, French.] He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.
Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroi of the whole? Shakespeare.
Mendoza, viceroi of Peru, was wont to say, that the government of Peru was the best place the king of Spain gave, save that it was somewhat too near Madrid. Bacon.
We are so far from having a king, that even the viceroi is generally absent four fifths of his time. Swift.
VICEROYALTY. n. f. [from viceroi.] Dignity of a viceroi.
These parts furnish out vice-royalties for the grandes; but in war are incumbrances to the kingdom. Addison.
VICERY. n. f. [Of this word I know not well the meaning or original: a vice thing is now called in vulgar language, point vice, from the French perhaps, point de vice; whence the barbarous word vice may be derived.] Nicety; exactness.
A word not used.
Here is to the fruit of Pem,
Grafted upon Stub his stem;
With the peakish nicety,
And old Sherwood's vice. B. Johnson.
VICINITY. n. f. [from vicinus, Latin.]
1. Nearness; state of being near.
The position of things is such, that there is a vicinity between agents and patients, that the one incessantly invades the other. Hale.
The abundance and vicinity of country seats. Swift.
2. Neighbourhood.
He shall find out and recall the wandering particles home, and fix them in their old vicinity. Rogers.
Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun. Bentley.
VICINAGE. n. f. [from vicinia, Lat.] Neighbourhood; places adjoining.
VICINAL. adj. [from vicinus, Lat.] Near; neighbouring.
VICINE. adj. [from vicinus, Lat.] Near; neighbouring.
Opening other vicine passages might obliterate any track;
as the making of one hole in the yielding mud, defaces the print of another near it. Glanville.
VICIOUS. adj. [from vice.] See VITIOUS. Devoted to vice;
not addicted to virtue.
He heard this heavy curse,
Servants of servants on his vice-ous race. Milton.
VICISSITUDE. [from vicissitudo, Latin.]
1. Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.
It makes through heav'n
Grateful vicissitude, like day and night. Milton.
The rays of light are alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.
This succession of things upon the earth, is the result of the vicissitude of seasons, and is as constant as is the cause of that vicissitude, the sun's declination. Woodward.
2. Revolution; change.
During the course of the war, did the vicissitudes of good and bad fortune affect us with humility or thankfulness. Atterb.
Verse sweetens toil, however rude the found.
All at her work the village maiden sings;
Nor as she turns the giddy wheel around,
Revolves the sad vicissitude of things. Giffard.
VICINTIES. In law vicinties rents are certain farms, for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them. Vicintial writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff. Bailey.
VICTIM. n. f. [from victima, Latin.]
1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.
All that were authors of so black a deed,
Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost. Denham.
And on the victim pour the ruddy wine. Dryden.
Citumnus' waves, for triumphs after war,
The victim ox, and snowy sheep prepare. Addison.
2. Some-

VIE

2. Something destroyed.
Behold where age's wretched victim lies;
See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes. Prior.
VICTOR. n. f. [Victor, Lat.] Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive, and never but with regard to some single action or person. We rarely say Alexander was victor of Darius, though we say he was victor at Arbela; but we never say he was victor of Persia.
This strange race more strange conceits did yield;
Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought;
Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field. Sidney.
Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind,
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Shaksp.
Although the victor, we submit to Cæsar. Shaksp.
Say where and when
Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the victor's heel. Milt.
Our Hebrew songs and harps in Babylon,
That pleas'd to well our victors ear, declare That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd. Milton.
Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume,
And now the victors fall. Denham.
In love the victors from the vanquish'd fly;
They fly that wound, and they pursue that die.
Fortune's unjust; she ruins oft the brave,
And him who should be victor, makes the slave. Dryden.
Love not a thought on me, I'm out of danger;
Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand. Addison.
VICTORIOUS. adj. [victorieux, Fr.]
1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superiour in contest.
Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquish'd,
Than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.
The great son return'd victorious with his fairs.
That happy fun, said he, will rise again,
Who twice victorious did our navy see:
And I alone must view him rise in vain.
Without one ray of all his star for me. Dryden.
2. Producing conquest.
Sudden these honours shall be snatch'd away,
And curs'd for ever this victorious day. Pope.
3. Betokening conquest.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shaksp.
VICTORIOUSLY. adv. [from victorious.] With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.
That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.
VICTORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from victorious.] The state or quality of being victorious.
VICTORY. n. f. [victoria, Lat.] Conquest; success in contest; triumph.
At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blubb'd at him. Shaksp.
Then to the heav'n of heav'ns he shall ascend
With victory, triumphing o'er his foes. Milton.
Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification and self-denial, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a victory over the most refractory passions. Taylor.
VICTRESS. n. f. [from victor.] A female that conquers.
I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
And she shall be sole victress; Cæsar's Caesar. Shaksp.
VICTUAL. n. f. [victualiter, Fr. vittimaglia, Ital.] Provision
VICTUALS. pl. n. of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance.
He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with victuals and fresh water. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach. Shaksp.
He was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victuals. Kneller.
They, unprovided of tackling and victuals, are forced to sea by a storm. K. Charles.
To VICTUAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To store with provision for food.
Talbot, farewell;
I must go victual Orleans forthwith. Shaksp.
VICTUALLER. n. f. [from victuals.] One who provides victuals.
They plant'd their artillery against the haven, to impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers surceated not to bring all things necessary. Hayward.
Their conquest half is to the victualler due. King.
VIDELICET. adv. [Latin.] To wit; that is. This word is generally written vid.
VIDUITY. n. f. [from viduus, Lat.] Widowhood.
To VIE. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is very uncertain.]
1. To show, or practice in competition.
They vie power and expence with those that are too high. L'Estrange.

VIE

- You vie happiness in a thousand easy and sweet dis-versions. Bevyn.
2. In this passage the meaning seems to be, to add; to accumulate.
She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied to fast.
That in a twink she won me to her love. Shaksp.
To VIE. v. n. To contest; to contend; to strive for superiority.
In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in such a way of life, as may enable them to vie with the best of their family. Addison.
The wool, when shaded with Ancona's dye,
May with the proudest Tyrian purple vie. Addison.
Now voices over voices rise;
While each to be the loudest vies. Swift.
To VIEW. v. a. [veu, Fr. from voir, or voir.]
1. To survey; to look on by way of examination.
Go, and view the country. Jes. vii. 2.
Th' almighty father bent down his eye,
His own works and their works at once to view. Milton.
View not this spire, by measures giv'n,
To buildings rais'd by common hands. Prior.
When'er we view some well-proportion'd dome;
No single parts unequally surprize;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.
2. To see; to perceive by the eye.
With eyes aghast
View'd first their lamentable lot.
No more I hear, no more I view. Milton.
The phantom flies me, as unkind as you.
VIEW. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Prospect.
You should tread a course Pretty, and full of view; yea, haply, near
The residence of Pothumus. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
Vast and indefinite views, which drown all apprehensions of the uttermost objects, are condemned by good authors. Watson.
The walls of Pluto's palace are in view. Dryden.
Cut wide views through mountains to the plain,
You'll with your hill, or shelter'd hill again. Pope.
2. Sight; power of beholding.
Some faster resolution I've in view. Milton.
I go, to take for ever from your view,
Both the lov'd object, and the hated too. Dryden.
These things duly weight'd, will give us a clear view into the state of human liberty. Locke.
Instruct me other joys to prize,
With other beauties charm my partial eyes;
Full in my view set all the bright abode;
And make my soul quit Abelard for God. Pope.
3. Act of seeing.
Th' unexpected found
Of dogs and men, his wakeful ear does wound;
Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
Had giv'n this false alarm; but straight his view
Confirms that more than all he fears is true. Denham.
Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.
4. Sight; eye.
She was not much struck with those objects that now presented themselves to her view. Femals Quixote.
5. Survey; examination by the eye.
Time never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.
6. Intellectual survey.
If the mind has made this inference by finding out the intermediate ideas, and taking a view of the connection of them, it has proceeded rationally. Locke.
7. Space that may be taken in by the eye; reach of sight.
The fame through all the neighb'ring nations flew,
When now the Trojan navy was in view. Dryden.
8. Appearance; show.
In that accomplish'd mind,
Help'd by the night, new graces find;
Which, by the splendour of her view,
Dazzl'd before we never knew. Waller.
9. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.
To give a right view of this mistaken part of liberty, would any one be a changeling, because he is less determin'd by wise considerations than a wife man? Locke.
10. Prospect of interest.
No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason. Locke.
11. Intention; design.
He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees to the state of things at home; with that view he makes all his reflections. Atterbury.
With a view to commerce, in returning from his expedition against the Parthians, he pass'd through Egypt. Arbutnot.
VIEWLESS.

VIG

- VIEWLESS. adj. [from view.] Unseen; not discernible by the sight.
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence about
The pendant world. Shaksp.
Each stair mysteriously was meant, nor stood There always, but drawn up to heav'n sometimes viewless. Milton's Par. Lost.
Swift through the valves the visionary fair
Repas'd, and viewless mix'd with common air. Pope.
Light-bounding from the earth, at once they rise;
Their feet half viewless quiver in the skies. Pope.
VIGESIMA-TION. n. f. [vegesimus, Latin.] The act of putting to death every twentieth man. Bailey.
VIGIL. n. f. [vigilia, Latin.]
1. Watch; devotions performed in the customary hours of rest.
So they in heaven their odes and vigils tun'd. Milton.
Shines! where their vigils pale-ey'd virgins keep,
And pining faints, whose statues learn to weep. Pope.
2. A fast kept before a holiday.
He that out-lives this day, and sees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say to-morrow is St. Crispian. Shaksp.
3. Service used on the night before a holiday.
No altar is to be consecrated without reliques, which placed before the church door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them.
The rivals call my muse another way,
To sing their vigils for th' ensuing day. Dryden.
4. Watch; forbearance of sleep.
Though Venus and her son shou'd spare
Her rebel heart, and never teach her care;
Yet Hymen may perform her vigils keep,
And for another's joy suspend her sleep. Waller.
Nothing wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which attend them. Addison.
VIGILANCE. n. f. [vigilance, Fr. vigilantia, Lat.]
VIGILANCY. n. f. [vigilance, Fr. vigilantia, Lat.]
1. Forbearance of sleep.
Ulysses yielded unseasonably to sleep, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Broome.
2. Watchfulness; circumspection; incessant care.
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? Shaksp.
No post is free, no place,
That guard and most unusual vigilance
Does not attend my taking. Shaksp. K. Lear.
In this their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilance, and voluntary hazard of his person. Watson.
Of these the vigilance
I dread; and to elude, thus wrapp'd in mist
Of midnight vapour, glide obscure.
We are enabled to subdue all other creatures; and use for our behoof the strength of the ox, the sagacity and vigi- lancy of the dog. Ray.
3. Guard; watch.
In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from heav'n. Milton.
VIGILANT. adj. [vigilant, Latin.] Watchful; circumspect;
diligent; attentive.
They have many prayers, but every of them very short,
as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; left that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.
Take your places, and be vigilant:
If any noise or soldier you perceive,
Let us have knowledge. Shaksp.peare.
The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration to soon, that he procured the king to send a message to the master of the rolls. Clarend.
VIGILANTLY. adv. [from vigilant.] Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.
Thus in peace, either of the kings to vigilantly observed every motion of the others, as if they had lived upon the alarm. Hayward.
VIGOROUS. adj. [from vigor, Latin.] Forceful; not weakened; full of strength and life.
Fam'd for his valour young;
At sea successful, vigorous and strong! Waller.
Their appetite is not dull'd by being gratified, but returns always fresh and vigorous. Atterbury.
VIGOROUSLY. adv. [from vigorous.] With force; forcibly;
without weakness.
The prince had two giant ships;
With his one so vigorously he press'd,
And flew to home, they could not rise again. Dryden.
If the fire burns bright and vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled. South.

VIL

- That prince whose cause you espouse so vigorously, is the principal in the war, and you but a second. Swift.
VIGOROUSNESS. n. f. [from vigor.] Force; strength.
He hath given excellent succourance and vigorously to the sufferers, arming them with strange courage, heroic fortitu-tude, invincible resolution, and glorious patience. Taylor.
VIGOUR. n. f. [vigor, Lat.]
1. Force; strength.
Sometimes went and sometimes ran,
With supple joints, as lively vigour led. Milton.
Shame to be overcome,
Wou'd utmost vigour raise, and rais'd unite. Milton.
Pernicious fire wither'd all their strength,
And of their wonted vigour left them drain'd. Milton.
The mind and spirit remains Invincible, and vigour soon returns. Milton.
No deep within her gulf can hold Immortal vigour. Milton.
The vigour of this arm was never vain:
Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.
2. Mental force; intellectual ability.
3. Energy; efficacy.
In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.
How does Cartellus all his finews strain,
The earth's attractive vigour to explain? Blackmore.
VILE. adj. [vil, Fr. vilis, Lat.] Base; mean; worthless;
sordid; despicable.
Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God, were in his sight to vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.
I disdain scorn'd, and craved death,
Rather than I would be so vile esteem'd.
He to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; he he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition. Shaksp.
The inhabitants account gold but as a vile thing. Abbot.
That sinful creature man elect'd is,
And in our place the heavens' possels he must;
Vile man, begot of clay, and born of dust. Fairfax.
A spontaneous production is against matter of fact; a thing without example not only in man, but the vile of weeds. Bentl.
2. Morally impure; wicked.
Rector'd by thee, vile as I am, to place
Of new acceptance. Milton.
VILED. adj. [from vile, whence revile.] Abusive; scurrilous;
defamatory.
He granted life to all except to one, who had used vil'd speeches against king Edward. Hayward.
VILELY. adv. [from vile.] Basely; meanly; shamefully.
The Volcians vilely yielded the town. Shaksp.
How can I
Forget my Hector, treated with dishonour, Depriv'd of funeral rites, and vilely dragg'd,
A bloody corse, about the walls of Troy. A. Phillips.
VILENESS. n. f. [from vile.]
1. Baseness; meanness; despicableness.
His vileness us shall never awe:
But here our sports shall be:
Such as the golden world first saw,
Most innocent and free. Drayton.
Reflect on the essential vileness of matter, and its impotence to conserve its own being. Creech.
Considering the vileness of the clay, I wondered that no tribune of that age durst ever venture to ask the potter, what dost thou make? Swift.
2. Moral or intellectual baseness.
Then, vileness of mankind!
Could one, alas! repeat me good or great,
Wash my pale body, or bewail my fate?
To VILIFY. v. a. [from vile.] To debase; to defame; to make contemptible.
Tomalin could not abide,
To hear his sovereign vilify'd. Drayton.
Their maker's image
Forsook them, when themselves they vilify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite; and took His image whom they serv'd. Milton.
The displeasure of their prince, those may expect, who would put in practice all methods to vilify his person. Addison.
VILL. n. f. [vill, Fr. villa, Latin.] A village; a small collection of houses. Little in use.
This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor, town, or vill. Hale.
VILLAGE. n. f. [villa, Lat.] A country seat.
The ancient Romans lay the foundations of their villages and palaces within the very borders of the sea. Addison.
All vast possessions; just the same the case,
Whether you call them villa, park, or chase. Pope.

VIL

VILLAGE. n. f. [village, Fr.] A small collection of houses in the country, less than a town.

Beggars, with roaring voices, from low farms,
Or pelting villages, sheep coats, and mills,
Inforce their charity. Shakespeare.

The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn.
You have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so; but, like the village curs,
Bark when their fellows do. Shakespeare.

The country villages were burnt down to the ground. Knolles.
Those village-words give us a mean idea of the thing. Dryden.

Seam'd o'er with wounds which his own fabre gave,
In the vile habit of a village slave. Pope.

VILLAGER. n. f. [from village.] An inhabitant of the village.

Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions. Shakespeare.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milton.

If there are conveniences of life, which common use reaches not, it is not reason to reject them, because every villager doth not know them. Locke.

VILLAGERY. n. f. [from village.] District of villages.

Robin Goodfellow, are you not he,
That fright the maidens of the villagery? Shakespeare.

VILLAIN. n. f. [villain, Fr. villanus, low Latin.]

1. One who held by a base tenure.
The Irish inhabiting the lands fully conquered, being in condition of slaves and villains, did render a greater revenue, than if they had been made the king's free subjects. Davies.

2. A wicked wretch.
We were prevented by a dozen armed knights, or rather villains, who, using this time of their extreme feebleness, all together set upon them.

O villain! villain! his very opinion in the letter. Abhorred villain! unnatural, detested, brutish villain! Shakespeare.

That names me traitor, villain-like he lies. Shakespeare.
He was stabbed to the heart by the hand of a villain, upon the mere impious pretence of his being odious to the parliament. Clarendon.

Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix;
Of crooked counsels, and dark politticks. Pope.

VILLANAGE. n. f. [from villain.]

1. The state of a villain; base servitude.
They exercise most bitter tyranny,
Upon the parts brought into their bondage:
No wretchedness is like to sinful villanage. Fairy Queen.

Upon every such surrender and grant, there was but one freholder, which was the lord himself; all the rest were but tenants in villanage, and were not fit to be sworn in juries. Davies.

2. Bafenefs; infamy.
If in thy smoke it ends, their glories shine;
But infamy and villanage are thine. Dryden.

To VILLANIZE. v. a. [from villain.] To debase; to degrade;
to defame.

Were virtue by descent, a noble name
Could never villanize his father's fame;
But, as the first, the last of all the line,
Would, like the sun, ex't in descending shine. Dryden.

There are the fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments; whose glory is in their shame, in the debasing and villanizing of mankind to the condition of beasts. Bentley.

VILLANOUS. adj. [from villain.]

1. Bafe; vile; wicked.
2. Sorry.
Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villanous trick of thine eye
doth warrant me. Shakespeare.

3. It is used by Shakespeare to exaggerate any think detestable.

We shall lose our time,
And all be turn'd to barnacles or apes,
With foreheads villanous low. Shakespeare. Tempest.

VILLANOUSLY. adv. [from villanous.] Wickedly; basely.

The wandering Numidian falsified his faith, and villanously flew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself. Knolles.

VILLANOUSNESS. n. f. [from villanous.] Bafenefs; wickedness.

VILLANY. n. f. [from villain; villannie, old French.]

1. Wickedness; bafenefs; depravity.
Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly
my own opinion; but chiefly a villanous trick of thine eye
doth warrant me. Shakespeare.

2. For villainy is not without such a reum:
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare.

He is the prince's jester; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany. Shakespeare.

3. A wicked action; a crime.

VIN

No villany, or flagitious action was ever yet committed;
but a lie was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

Such villanies rous'd Horace into wrath;
And 'tis more noble to pursue his path,
Than an old tale. Dryden.

VILLANICK. adj. [villanicus, Lat.] Belonging to villages.

Evening dragon came,
Affailant on the perched roofts,
And nests in order rang'd,
Of tame villanick fowl. Milton.

VILLI. n. f. [Latin.]

In anatomy, are the same as fibres; and in botany, small hairs like the grain of pluff or flage, with which, as a kind of excrecence, some trees do abound. Quincy.

VILLOUS. adj. [villofus, Lat.] Shaggy; rough.

The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villous coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger. Art.

VIMINEOUS. adj. [vimineus, Latin.] Made of twigs.

As in the hive's vimineous dome,
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry. Prior.

VINCIBLE. adj. [from vincis, Lat.] Conquerable; supe-rable.

He not vincible in spirit, and well assured that shortness of provision would in a short time draw the seditious to shorter limits, drew his sword. Hayward.

Because 'twas absolutely in my power to have attended more heedfully, there was liberty in the principle, the mistake which influenced the action was vincible. Norris.

VINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from vincible.] Liableness to be overcome. Dill.

VINCTURE. n. f. [vinctura, Lat.] A binding.

VINDICABLE. adj. [vindicabilis, Latin.] Belonging to a vindice.

To VINDICATE. v. n. [vindicat, Latin.] To gather the vintage.

Now vindicat, and take your bees towards the expiration of this month. Evans.

VINDICATION. n. f. [vindicatio, Lat.] Grape-gathering. Bailey.

To VINDICATE. v. a. [vindicat, Lat.]

1. To justify; to support; to maintain.
Where the respondent denies any proposition, the opponent must directly vindicate and confirm that proposition; i. e. he must make that proposition the conclusion of his next syl-logism. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. To revenge; to avenge.
We ought to have added, how far an holy war is to be purged; whether to enforce a new belief, and to vindicate or punish infidelity? Bacon.

Man is not more inclinable to obey God than man; but God is more powerful to exact subjection, and to vindicate rebellion. Payson on the Creed.

The more numerous the offenders are, the more his justice is concerned to vindicate the affront.

Assemble ours, and all the Theban race,
To vindicate on Athens thy disgrace. Dryden.

3. To assert; to claim with efficacy.
Never any touch'd upon this way, which our poet justly has vindicated to himself. Dryden's Pref. to Ovid.

The beauty of this town, without a fleet,
From all the world shall vindicate her trade. Dryden.

4. To clear; to protect.
God's ways of dealing with us, are by proposition of terrors and promises. To these is added the authority of the commander, vindicated from our neglect by the interposition of the greatest signs and wonders, in the hands of his prophets, and of his son. Hammond.

I may assert eternal providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to man. Milton.

VINDICATION. n. f. [vindicatio, Fr. from vindicat.] Defence; assertion; justification.

This is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice, in endeavouring to betray the Greeks. Braune.

VINDICATIVE. adj. [from vindicat.] Revengeful; given to revenge.

He, in heat of action,
Is more vindicative than jealous love. Shakespeare.

Public revenges are for the most part fortunate; but in private revenges it is not so. Vindicative persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate. Bacon.

The fruits of aduſted choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit. Howell.

Do not too many believe no zeal to be spiritual, but what is censorious or vindicative? Whereas no zeal is spiritual, that is not also charitable. Spratt's Sermons.

Distinguish betwixt a passion purely vindicative, and those counsels where divine justice avenges the innocent. L'Estrange.

VINDICATOR.

VIN

VINDICATOR. n. f. [from vindicat.] One who vindicates;

an assertor; or avenger.

He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmost rigour; and consequently a noble soul is better pleas'd with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temporizing poet. Dryden.

VINDICATORY. adj. [from vindicat.]

1. Punitory; performing the office of vengeance.
The afflictions of Job were no vindicatory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbs.

2. Defensory; justificatory.

VINDICTIVE. adj. [from vindicta, Latin.] Given to revenge;
revengeful.

I am vindictive enough to repel force by force. Dryden.

Angustus was of a nature too vindictive, to have contented himself with so small a revenge. Dryden.

VINE. n. f. [vinis, Latin.] The plant that bears the grape.

The flower consists of many leaves placed in a regular order, and expanding in form of a rose; the ovary, which is situated in the bottom of the flower, becomes a round fruit, full of juice, and contains many small stones in each.

The tree is climbing, sending forth claspers at the joints, by which it fastens itself to what plant stands near it, and the fruit is produced in bunches. The species are, 1. The wild vine, commonly called the claret grape. 2. The July grape. 3. The Corinth grape, vulgarly called the currant grape. 4. The passley leav'd grape. 5. The miller's grape. This is called the Burgundy in England; the leaves of this sort are very much powdered with white in the spring, from whence it had the name of miller's grape. 6. Is what is called in Burgundy Pineau, and at Orleans, Auverna; it makes very good wine. 7. The white chaffelas, or royal muscadine: it is a large white grape; the juice is very rich. 8. The black chaffelas, or black muscadine; the juice is very rich. 9. The red chaffelas, or red muscadine. 10. The burlake grape.

11. The white muscat, or white Frontinac. 12. The red Frontinac. 13. The black Frontinac. 14. The damask grape. 15. The white sweet water. 16. The black sweet water. 17. The white muscadine. 18. The raisin grape.

19. The Greek grape. 20. The pearl grape. 21. The St. Peter's grape, or hesperian. 22. The malmey grape.

23. The malmey muscadine. 24. The red Hamburg grape. 25. The black Hamburg, or warmer grape. 26. The Switzerland grape. 27. The white muscat, or Frontinac of Alexandria; called also the Jerusalem muscat and gros musc.

cat. 28. The red muscat, or Frontinac of Alexandria.

29. The white muscat grape. 30. The white morillon.

31. The Alicante grape. 32. The white Auvernat. 33. The grey Auvernat. 34. The raisin muscat. The late duke of Lucany, who was very curious in collecting all the sorts of Italian and Greek grapes into his vineyards, was possessed of upwards of three hundred several varieties. Miller.

The vine-prop elm, the poplar never dry. Fairy Queen.

In her days every man shall eat in safety,
Under his own vine, what he plants. Shakespeare.

The captain left of the poor to be vine-dressers. 2 Kings xxv.

Depending vines the shelving cavern screen,
With purple clusters blushing through the green. Pope.

VINEGAR. n. f. [vinagre, Fr.]

1. Wine grown sour.

Vinegar is made by setting the vessel of wine against the hot sun; and therefore vinegar will not burn, much of the finer parts being exhaled. Bacon.

Heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour. Pope.

2. Any thing really or metaphorically sour.

Some laugh like parrots at a bag-piper,
And others of such vinegar aspect.

That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile. Shakespeare.

VINNEWED, or Vinney. adj. Mouldy.

VINEYARD. n. f. [vinetum, Saxon.] A ground planted with vines.

Let us not live in France; let us quit all,
And give our vineyards to a barb'rous people. Shakespeare.

Though some had so forfeited in the vineyards, and with the wines, that they had been left behind, the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home again. Clarendon.

VINEOUS. adj. [from vinum, Latin.] Having the qualities of wine; consisting of wine.

The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit. Boyle.

Water will imbibe
The small remains of spirit, and acquire A vinous flavour. Philips.

VINTAGE. n. f. [vinage, Fr.] The produce of the vine for the year.

The best vines are in the driest vintages. Bacon.

Our first success in war make Bacchus crown,
And half the vintage of the year our own. Waller.

VINTAGER. n. f. [from vintage.] He who gathers the vintage. Ainsworth.

VINTNER. n. f. [from vinum, Lat.] One who sells wine.

VIO

The vintner may draw what religion he pleases. Howell.

The vintner, by mixing poison with his wines, destroys more lives than any malignant disease. Swift.

VINTRY. n. f. The place where wine is sold. Ainsworth.

VIOLE. n. f. [violle, Fr. viola, Ital.] A stringed instrument of music.

My tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstringed viol, or a harp. Shakespeare.

To strain a string, stop it with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols. Bacon.

Loud o'er the rest Cremona's trumpet doth found;
Me softer airs besit, and softer strings
Of lute, or viol, still more apt for mournful things. Milton.

VIOLE. n. f. [viol, Ital.] A stringed instrument of
music.

VIOLE. n. f. [viol, Ital.] A stringed instrument of

VIR

4. Unjustly assailant; murderous.
Some violent hands were laid on Humphry's life. Shakep.
A foe subtle or violent. Milton.
5. Unreasonably vehement.
We might be reckoned fierce and violent, to tear away that, which, if our mouths did condemn, our consciences would form and repine thereat. Hooker.
The covetous extortioner should remember, that such vi- olents shall not take heaven, but hell by force. Decay of Piety.
6. Extorted; not voluntary.
Vows made in pain, are violent and void. Milton.
VIOLENTLY. adv. [from violent.] With force; forcibly; vehemently.
Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redreis. Shakep. Coriolanus.
Flame burneth more violently towards the sides, than in the midst. Bacon.
Ancient privileges must not, without great necessities, be revoked, nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws rigorously. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
VIOLET. n. f. [viollette, Fr. viola, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a petalaceous anomalous flower, somewhat resembling the papilionaceous flower; for its two upper petals represent the standard, the two side ones the wings; but the lower one, which ends in a tail, resembles the iris. Out of the empalement arises the point, which becomes a three-cornered fruit opening into three parts, and full of roundish seeds. There are nine species. Miller.
When daisies pied, and violets blue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakep.
Sweet echo, sweetest nymph that liv'st unseen,
By flow Meander's margent green,
And in the violet emboider'd vale. Milton.
It alters not our simple idea, whether we think that blue be in the violet itself, or in our mind only; and only the power of producing it by the texture of its parts, to be in the violet itself. Locke.
VIOLIN. n. f. [violin, Fr. from viol.] A fiddle; a stringed instrument of music.
Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;
Praise with violins, and lutes. Sandys.
Sharp violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs, and desperation,
For the fair disdainful dame. Dryden.
VIOLIST. n. f. [from viol.] A player on the viol.
VIOLONCELLO. n. f. [Italian.] A stringed instrument of music.
VIPER. n. f. [vipera, Lat.]
1. A serpent of that species which brings its young alive, of which most are poisonous.
A viper came out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. Acts xxviii.
He'll gall of asps with thirsty lips suck in;
The viper's deadly teeth shall pierce his skin. Sandys.
Viper-catchers have a remedy, in which they place such great confidence, as to be no more afraid of the bite of a viper, than of a common puncture. This is no other than axungia viperina, presently rubbed into the wound. Derham.
2. Any thing mischievous.
Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself? Shakep. Coriolanus.
VIPERINE. n. f. [viperinus, Lat.] Belonging to a viper.
VIPEROUS. adj. [vipereus, Lat. from viper.] Having the qualities of a viper.
My tender years can tell,
Civil diffention is a viperous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth. Shakep.
We are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor. Shakep.
Some viperous critick may bereave
Th' opinion of thy worth for some defect. Daniel's Musaph.
VIPER'S BIGLEFS. n. f. [echium, Lat.] A plant.
The characters are, the cup of the flower is large, and divided into five long slender segments; the flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a funnel, and somewhat inflected, having its upper part stretched, but in a greater length than the lower; the upper part, or galea of the flower, is divided into two; and the lower part, or beard, into three parts: in the middle of the flower are produced five stamina (or threads) which are reflexed. Each flower is succeeded by four seeds, which are in form of a viper's head. Miller.
VIPER'S GRASS. n. f. [spiranthera, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a semi-dolichous flower, consisting of many half florets, which rest upon the embryos, which are included in one common empalement, which is scaly: the embryos afterwards become oblong seeds, which are furnished with down. Miller.
VIRAGO. n. f. [Latin.]
1. A female warrior; a woman with the qualities of a man.
Melpomene represented like a virago or manly lady, with a majestick and grave countenance. Peacbam.

VIR

- To arms! to arms! the fierce virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies. Pope.
2. It is commonly used in detestation for an impudent turbulent woman.
VIRGIL. n. f. [virgile, virgile, Fr.] A sort of little ancient French poem, that consisted only of two rhymes and short verses, with stops. L'Acad.
The mournful muse in mirth now list ne make,
As she was wont in youth and summer days;
But if thou algate list like virgiles,
And looser songs of love to underlong.
The band of flutes began to play, Spenser.
To which a lady sung a virgile:
The burden of the song, the daily is so sweet.
VIRGENT. adj. [virgens, Lat.] Green; not faded. Dryden.
In these, yet fresh and virgents, they carve out the figures of men and women. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VIRGE. n. f. [virga, Lat. better verge, from verge, French.]
A dean's mace.
Suppose him now a dean compleat,
Devoutly lolling in his seat;
The silver virge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.
VIRGIN. n. f. [virge, Fr. virgo, Lat.]
1. A maid; a woman unacquainted with men.
This aspect of mine hath fear'd the valiant;
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov'd it too. Shakep.
Senseless bauble!
Art thou a feadary for this act, and look't
So virgin-like without? Shakep. Cymbeline.
The damsel was very fair, and a virgin. Gen. xxiv. 16.
Angelo is an adult'rous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakep.
Much less can that have any place,
At which a virgin hides her face. Cowley.
2. A woman not a mother. Unusual.
Liket to Ceres in her prime,
Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove. Milton.
3. Any thing untouched or unmingled.
Tapers of white wax, commonly called virgin wax, burn with less smoke than common yellow wax. Boyle.
I have found virgin earth in the peat-marshes of Cheshire. Woodward.
Below the upper was a deep bed of sand only, which I weighed, together with the virgin-mould. Derham.
4. The sign of the zodiack in which the sun is in August.
Thence down again by Leo and the Virgin. Milton.
VIRGIN. adj. Beating a virgin; suitable to a virgin; maidenly.
Can you blame her then, being a maid, yet rofod over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy. Shakep. Hen. V.
What fays the silver with her virgin hue? Shakep.
With ease a brother o'ercame
The formal decencies of virgin-thame. Cowley.
To VIRGIN. v. n. [a cant word.] To play the virgin.
A kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
I carried from thee, my dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. Shakep. Coriolanus.
VIRGINAL. adj. [from virgin.] Maidenly; pertaining to a virgin.
On the earth more fair was never seen,
Of chastity and honour virginal. Fairy Queen.
Tears virginal
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax. Shakep.
Purity is a special part of this superstructure, restraining of all desires of the flesh within the known limits of conjugal or virginal chastity. Hammond's Fundamentals.
To VIRGINAL. v. n. To pat; to strike as on the virginal.
A cant word.
Still *virginal*ling upon thy palm. Shakep.
VIRGINAL. n. f. [more usually virginals.] A musical instrument so called, because commonly used by young ladies.
The musician hath produced two means of straining strings.
The one is stopping them with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols; the other is the shortness of the strings, as in harps and virginals. Bacon.
VIRGINITY. n. f. [virginitas, Lat.] Maidenhead; unacquaintance with man.
You do impeach your modesty too much,
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsel of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity. Shakep.
Natural virginity of itself is not a state more acceptable to God; but that which is chosen in order to the conveniences of religion, and separation from worldly incumbrances. Taylor.
VIRILE. n. f. [virilis, Lat.] Belonging to man; not puerile;
not feminine. VIRILITY.

VIR

- VIRILITY. n. f. [virilitas, Fr. virilitas, Lat. from virile.]
1. Manhood; character of man.
The lady made generous advances to the borders of virility. Rambler.
2. Power of procreation.
The great climacterical was past, before they begat children, or gave any testimony of their virility; for none begat children before the age of sixty-five. Brown.
VIRMILION. n. f. Properly vermilion. A red colour.
Egle, the fairest Nais of the flood,
With a vermilion dye his temples stain'd. Roscommon.
VIRTUAL. adj. [virtual, Fr. from virtue.] Having the efficacy without the sensible or material part.
Metaline waters have virtual cold in them. Put therefore wood into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance. Bacon.
Love not the heav'nly spirits? And how their love Express they? by looks only? or, do they mix Irradiance? virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.
Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton.
Neither an actual or virtual intention of the mind, but only that which may be gathered from the outward acts. Stillington.
VIRTUALITY. n. f. [from virtual.] Efficacy.
In one grain of corn there lath dormant a virtuality of many other, and from thence sometimes proceed an hundred ears. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VIRTUALLY. adv. [from virtual.] In effect, though not formally.
They are virtually contained in other words still continued. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Such is our constitution, that the bulk of the people vir- tually give their approbation to every thing they are bound to obey. Addison.
To VIRTUATE. v. a. [from virtue.] To make efficacious.
Potable gold should be endued with a capacity of being assimilated to the innate heat, and radical moisture; or at least virtuated with a power of generating the said effen-tials. Harvey.
VIRTUE. n. f. [virtus, Lat.]
1. Moral goodness.
Either I'm mistaken, or there is virtue in that Falstaff. Shakep.
If there's a power above us,
And that there is, all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue. Addison.
And that which he delights in must be happy. Pope.
Virtue only makes our bliss below.
The character of prince Henry is improved by Shakep.; and through the veil of his vices and irregularities, we see a dawn of greatness and virtue. Shakep. illustrated.
2. A particular moral excellence.
In Belmont is a lady,
And she is fair, and fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues. Shakep. Merchant of Venice.
Remember all his virtues,
And shew mankind that goodness is your care. Addison.
3. Medicinal quality.
All blest secrets,
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Be aidant and remediate. Shakep. K. Lear.
The virtuous bezoar is taken from the beast that feedeth upon the mountains; and that without virtue from those that feed in the vallies. Bacon.
4. Medicinal efficacy.
An essay writer must practise the chymical method, and give the virtue of a full draught in a few drops. Addison.
5. Efficacy; power.
If neither words, nor herbs will do, I'll try stones; for there's a virtue in them. LeStrange.
Where there is a full purpose to please God, there, what a man can do, shall, by virtue thereof, be accepted. Saath.
They are not sure, by virtue of syllogism, that the conclusion certainly follows from the premises. Locke.
This they shall attain, partly in virtue of the promise made by God; and partly in virtue of piety. Atterbury.
He used to travel through Greece, by virtue of this fable, which procured him reception in all the towns. Addison.
6. Acting power.
Jesus knowing that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about. Mark v. 30.
7. Secret agency; efficacy, without visible or material action.
She moves the body, which she doth possess;
Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch. Davies.
8. Bravery; valour.
Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers Took their discharge. Shakep. K. Lear.
The conquest of Palestine, with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations. Raleigh.
9. Excellence; that which gives excellence.
In the Greek poets, as also in Plautus, the oeconomy of poems is better observed than in Terence; who thought the

VIR

- sole grace and virtue of their fable, the sticking in of sentences, as ours do the forcing in of jests. B. Johnson.
10. One of the orders of the celestial hierarchy.
Thrones, domination, principdoms, virtues, pow'rs. Milt.
A winged virtue through th' etherial sky,
From orb to orb unwearied dost thou fly. Tickell.
VIRTUELESS. adj. [from virtue.]
1. Wanting virtue; deprived of virtue.
2. Not having efficacy; without operating qualities.
All second causes, together with nature herself, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become altogether silent, virtueless, and dead. Raleigh.
Virtueless the wilst all herbs and charms,
Wherewith false men increase their patients harms. Fairfax.
Some would make those glorious creatures virtueless. Hakewill.
VIRTUOSO. n. f. [Italian.] A man skilled in antique or natural curiosities; a man studious of painting, statuary, or architecture.
Methinks those generous virtuosi dwell in a higher region than other mortals. Glenville.
Virtuosi, the Italians call a man who loves the noble arts, and is a critick in them. And amongst our French painters, the word virtueux is understood in the same signification. Dryd.
This building was beheld with admiration by the virtuosi of that time. Tatler, No. 52.
Showers of rain are now met with in every water-work;
and the virtuosi's of France covered a little vault with artificial snow. Addison.
VIRTUOUS. adj. [from virtue.]
1. Morally good.
If his occasion were not virtuous,
I should not urge it half so faithfully. Shakep.
Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror. Shakep.
What the wills to do or say,
Is wisest, virtuous, discreetest, best. Milton.
Favour'd of heav'n, who finds
One virtuous rarely found,
That in domestick good combines:
Happy that house! his way to peace is smooth. Milton.
2. [Applied to women.] Chaste.
Mistress Ford, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! Shakep.
3. Done in consequence of moral goodness.
Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind. Dryden.
4. Efficacious; powerful.
With one virtuous touch, th' arch-chemic sun,
Produces, with terrestrial humour mix'd,
Here in the dark, so many precious things. Milton.
5. Having wonderful or eminent properties.
Out of his hand,
That virtuous steel he rudely snatch'd away. Fairy Queen.
Lifting up his virtuous staff on high,
He smote the sea, which calmed was with speed. Spenser.
He own'd that virtuous ring and glass. Milton.
6. Having medicinal qualities.
Some observe that there is a virtuous bezoar, and another without virtue; the virtuous is taken from the beast that feedeth where there are theriacal herbs; and that without virtue, from those that feed where no such herbs are. Bacon.
The ladies fought around
For virtuous herbs, which, gather'd from the ground,
They squeeze'd the juice; and cooling ointment made. Dryd.
VIRTUOUSLY. adv. [from virtuous.] In a virtuous manner;
according to the rules of virtue.
The Gods are my witnesses, I desire to do virtuously. Sidney.
In sum, they taught the world no less virtuously how to die, than they had done before how to live. Hooker.
They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts not; they tempt heav'n. Shak.
Not from grey hairs authority doth flow,
Nor from bald heads, nor from a wrinkled brow;
But our past life, when virtuously spent,
Must to our age those happy fruits present. Denham.
The coffecman has a little daughter four years old, who has been virtuously educated. Addison.
VIRTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from virtuous.] The state or character of being virtuous.
Many other adventures are intermeddled; as the love of Britomert, and virtuousness of Belphebe; and the lasciviousness of Helenora. Spenser.
VIRULENCE. n. f. [from virulent.] Mental poison; malig-virulence. } nity; acrimony of temper; bitterness.
Disputes in religion are managed with virulence and bitterness. Decay of Piety.
It infils into their minds the utmost virulence, instead of that charity which is the perfection and ornament of religion. Addison.
The whigs might easily have maintained a majority among the clergy, if they had not too much encouraged this intemperance of speech, and virulence of pen, in the most profitable of their party. Swift.

VIT

A greater difficulty in the doctrine of eggs is, how the sperm of the cock attaineth into every egg; since the vitallary, or place of the yolk, is very high. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
TO VITIATE. v. a. [vitio, Latin.] To deprave; to spoil; to make less pure.

The sun in his garden gives him the purity of visible objects, and of true nature, before he was vitiated by luxury. Evelyn's Kalend.

The organs of speech are managed by so many muscles, that speech is not easily destroyed, though often somewhat vitiated as to some particular letters. Holder.

Spirits encountering foul bodies, and exciting a fermentation of those vitiated humours, precipitate into putrid fevers. Harvey.

This undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers, and misguide many of them in their judgments, where to approve and where to censure. Garth.

A transposition of the order of the sacramental words, in some men's opinion, vitiates baptism. Ayliffe's Parergon.

VITIATION. n. f. [from vitiate.] Depravation; corruption.

The forehead extension of the body is imputed to the blood's vitiation by malign, putrid vapours smoking throughout the vessels. Harvey on Conjunctions.

TO VITILIGATE. v. n. [vitiosus and litigo, Lat.] To contend in law.

VITILIGATION. n. f. [from vitiligate.] Contention; cavillation.

I'll force you by right ratiocination, Hudibras.

VITIORITY. n. f. [from vitiosus, Lat.] Depravity; corruption.

He charges it wholly upon the corruption, perverseness, and vitiosity of man's will, as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with, unsuccessful. South's Sermons.

VITIOUS. adj. [vitiatus, Fr. vitiosus, Latin.]

1. Corrupt; wicked; opposite to virtuous. It is rather applied to habitual faults, than criminal actions. Make known.

It is no virtuous blot, murder, or foulness That hath depriv'd me of your grace. Shakefp. K. Lear.

Witness th' irreverent son Of him who built the ark; who, for the flame Done to his father, heard his heavy curse, ' Servant of servants,' on his virtuous race. Milton.

Wit's what the virtuous fear, the virtuous shun; By fools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone. Pope.

No troops abroad are so ill disciplin'd as the English; which cannot well be otherwise, while the common soldiers have before their eyes the virtuous example of their leaders. Swift.

2. Corrupt; having physical ill qualities.

When virtuous language contends to be high, it is full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. B. Johnson.

Here from the virtuous air and sickly flies, A plague did on the dumb creation rise. Dryden.

VITIOUSLY. adv. [from vitiosus.] Not virtuously; corruptly.

VITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from vitiosus.] Corruptness; state of being vicious.

When we in our virtuousness grow hard, The wife gods seal our eyes. Shakespeare.

What makes a governor justly despised is virtuousness and ill morals. Virtue must tip the preacher's tongue, and the ruler's scepter with authority. South.

VITREOUS. adj. [vitreus, Fr. vitreus, Lat.] Glassy; consisting of glass; resembling glass.

The hole answers to the pupil of the eye; the crystalline humour to the lenticular glass; the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humour, and the white paper to the retina. Ray on the Creation.

When the phlegm is too viscous, or separates into too great a quantity, it brings the blood into a morbid state: this viscous phlegm seems to be the vitreous petuete of the antients. Arbutnot on Aliments.

VITREOUSNESS. n. f. [from vitreus.] Resemblance of glass.

VITRIFICABLE. adj. [from vitrificate.] Convertible into glass.

TO VITRIFICATE. v. a. [vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.

We have metals vitrified, and other materials, besides those of which you make glass. Bacon.

VITRIFICATION. n. f. [vitrificatio, Fr. from vitrificate.] Production of glass; act of changing, or state of being changed into glass.

For vitrification likewise, what metals will endure it? Also, because vitrification is accounted a kind of death of metals, what vitrification will admit of turning back again, and what not? Bacon's Physical Remarks.

If the heat be more fierce, it maketh the grosser part itself run and melt; as in the making of ordinary glass; and in the vitrification of earth in the inner parts of furnaces; and in the vitrification of brick and metals. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Upon the knowledge of the different ways of making minerals and metals capable of vitrification, depends the art of making counterfeit or fictitious gems. Boyle on Colours.

VIV

TO VITRIFY. v. a. [vitrifier, Fr. vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.

Metals will vitrify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitrified, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough. Bacon.

Iron-slugs, vitrified, has in it cortices encompassing one another, like those in agates. Woodward.

TO VITRIFY. v. n. To become glass; to be changed into glass.

Chymists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitrify in the fire; for all earth, which hath any salt or oil in it, will turn to glass. Arbutnot on Aliments.

VITRIOL. n. f. [vitriol, Fr. vitriolum, Lat.]

Vitriol is produced by addition of a metallic matter with the fossil acid salt.

I rubbed it with the vitriol-stone. Woodward.

VITRIOLATE. adj. [vitriolatus, Fr. from vitriolum, Lat.] In-VITRIOLATED. adj. [vitriolatus, Fr. from vitriolum, Lat.] In-Iron may be dissolved by any tart, salt, or vitriolated water. Bacon.

The water having dissolved the imperfectly calcined body, the vitriolated corpuscles swimming in the liquor, by their occurrences constituted little masses of vitriol, which gave the water they impregnated a fair vitriolated colour. Boyle.

VITRIOLICK. adj. [vitriolique, Fr. from vitriolum, Lat.] Re-
VITRIOLIC. adj. [vitriolique, Fr. from vitriolum, Lat.] Re-Copperas of Mars, by some called salt of steel, made by the spirits of vitriol or sulphur, will, after ablation, be attracted by the loadstone; and therefore whether those shooting salts partake but little of steel, and be not rather the vi-triolous spirits fixed unto salt by the effluvia or odour of steel, is not without good question. Bacon's Vulg. Errors.

These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mix'd with a smatch of a vitriolick. Gray's Miscell.

By over-fermentation, or long-keeping, wine becomes sharp as in hock, like the vitriolick acidity. Plur.

VITULINE. adj. [vitulinus, Lat.] Belonging to a calf, or to
 veal.

VITUPERABLE. adj. [vituperabilis, Lat.] Blame worthy. Aug.
TO VITUPERATE. v. a. [vituperare, Fr. vituperare, Latin.] To blame; to censure.

VITUPERATION. n. f. [vituperatio, Lat.] Blame; censure.

Such a writing ought to be clean, and free from any civil or vituperation of nature. Ayliffe's Parergon.

VIVACIOUS. adj. [vivax, Lat.]

1. Long-lived.

Though we should allow them their perpetual calm and equability of heat, they will never be able to prove, that therefore men would be so vivacious as they would have us believe. Bentley.

2. Spritely; gay; active; lively.

VIVACIOUSNESS. n. f. [vivacitas, Fr. from vivacious.]

VIVACITY. n. f. [vivacitas, Fr. from vivacious.]

1. Liveliness; spriteliness.

They are esteemed very hot in operation, and will, in a convenient air, survive some days the loss of their heads and hearts; so vigorous is their vivacity. Boyle.

He had a great vivacity in his countenance. Dryden.

2. Longevity; length of life.

Fables are rais'd concerning the vivacity of deer; for neither are their gestation nor increment such as may afford an argument of long life. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VIVARY. n. f. [vivarium, Lat.] A warren. Ainsworth.

VIVE. adj. [vif, Fr. vivus, Latin.] Lively; forcible; pressing.

By a vive and forcible perfwation, he mov'd him to a war upon Flanders. Bacon.

VIVENCY. n. f. [vivere, Latin.] Manner of supporting or continuing life, or vegetation.

Although not in a distinct and indisputable way of vivency, or answering in all points the property of plants, yet in inferior and descending constitutions, they are determined by feminality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VIVES. n. f. A distemper among horses.

Vives is much like the strangles; and the chief difference is, that for the most part the strangles happen to colts and young horses while they are at grass, by feeding with their heads downwards; by which means the swelling inclines more to the jaws; but the vives happens to horses at any age and time, and is more particularly seated in the glands and kernels under the ears. Farriers Dict.

VIVID. adj. [vividus, Latin.]

1. Lively; quick; striking.

The liquor, retaining its former vivid colour, was grown clear again. Boyle.

To make these experiments the more manifest, such bodies ought to be chosen as have the fullest and most vivid colours, and two of those bodies compared together. Newton.

Ah! what avail his glosly varying dyes?
 The vivid green his shining plumes unfold,
 His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold. Pope.

2. Spritely;

VIZ

2. Spritely; active.

Body is a fit workhouse for sprightly, vivid faculties to excise and exert themselves in. South.

Where the genius is bright, and the imagination vivid,
 the power of memory may lose its improvement. Watts.

VIVIDLY. adv. [from vivid.] With life; with quickness;
 with strength.

In the moon we can with excellent telescopes discern many hills and vallies, whereof some are more, and some less vividly illustrated; and others have a fainter, others a deeper shade. Boyle on Colours.

Sensitive objects affect a man, in the state of this present life, much more warmly and vividly than those which affect only his nobler part, his mind. South.

VIVIDNESS. n. f. [from vivid.] Life; vigour; quickness.

VIVIFICAL. adj. [vivificus, Lat.] Giving life.

TO VIVIFICATE. v. a. [vivifico, Lat.] To animate.

1. To make alive; to inform with life; to animate.

2. To recover from such a change of form as seems to destroy the essential properties.

VIVIFICATION. n. f. [vivificatio, Fr. from vivifico, Lat.] The act of giving life.

If that motion be in a certain order, there followeth vi-vification and figuration. Bacon.

VIVIFICK. adj. [vivifique, Fr. vivifico, Latin.] Giving life; making alive.

Without the sun's salutary and vivifick beams, all motion would cease, and nothing be left but darkness and death. Ray.

TO VIVIFY. v. a. [vivifier, Fr. vivus and facio, Lat.] To make alive; to animate; to endue with life.

It hath been observed by the antients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, of a reddish colour, and dull of motion; which would shew, that snow hath in it a secret warmth, else it could hardly vivify. Bacon.

Sitting on eggs doth vivify, not nourish.

Gut-worms, as soon as vivified, creep into the stomach for nutriment. Harvey on Conjunctions.

VIVIPAROUS. adj. [viviparus and pario, Lat.] Bringing the young alive; opposed to oviparus.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they give suck; but whereas no other flying animals have these parts, we cannot from them infer a viparous exclusion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Their species might continue, though they had been viparous; yet it would have brought their individuals to very small numbers. More's Antidote against Atheism.

If birds had been viviparous, the burthen of their womb had been so great and heavy, that their wings would have failed them. Ray on the Creation.

VIXEN. n. f.

Vixen or fixen is the name of a she-fox; otherwise applied to a woman whose nature and condition is thereby compared to a fox.

O! when the angry, she's keen and shrewd;
 She was a vixen, when she went to school;
 And though she be but little, she is fierce. Shakespeare.

See a pack of spaniels, called lovers, in a hot pursuit of a two-legged vixen, who only flies the whole loud pack, to be singled out by one. Hocherly.

VIZ. n. f. [This word is vidualis, written with a contraction.]
 To wit; that is. A barbarous form of an unnecessary word.

That which so oft by sundry writers
 Has been apply'd 'almost all fighters,
 More justly may b' ascrib'd to this,
 Than any other warrior, viz.

None ever acted both parts bolder,
 Both of a chieftain and a soldier. Hudibras.

The chief of all signs which the Almighty endued man with,
 is humane voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, viz. the letters of the alphabet, form'd by the several motions of the mouth. Holder.

Let this be done relatively, viz. one thing greater or stronger, casting the rest behind, and rendering it less sensible by its opposition. Dryden's Duffresnay.

VIZARD. n. f. [visiere, Fr. See VISOR.] A mask used for disguise.

Let the suits of the maskers be graceful, and such as become the person when the vizards are off. Bacon.

Brought vizard in a civiler disguise. Resurrection.

A lye is like a vizard, that may cover the face indeed, but can never become it. South.

Ye shall know them by their fruits, not by their well or ill living; for they put on the vizard of seeming sanctity. Atterb.

He mistook it for a very whimsical sort of mask, but upon a nearer view he found, that she held her vizard in her hand. Addison.

TO VIZARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To mask.

Degree being vizarded,
 Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask. Shakespeare.

VIZIER. n. f. [properly Wazir.] The prime minister of the Turkish empire.

UMB

He made him vizier, which is the chief of all the balfas. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

This grand vizier presuming to invest
 The chief imperial city of the west;
 With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise,
 His treasure, tents and cannon left a prize. Waller.

ULCER. n. f. [ulcere, Fr. ulcus, Latin.] A fore of continuance; not a new wound.

Thou answer'it, she is fair;
 Pour't in the open ulcer of my heart
 Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice! Shakespeare.

My ulcers swell,
 Corrupt and fwell, Sandy's Paraphrase.

Intestine stone and ulcer, colick pangs. Milton.

While he was dressing that opening, other abscesses were raised, and from the several apostemations sinuous ulcers were made. Wijeman's Surgery.

TO ULCERATE. v. a. [ulcerare, Fr. ulcere, Latin.] To discale with fores.

Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated;
 others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours. Harvey.

An acrid and purulent matter mixeth with the blood, in such as have their lungs ulcerated. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ULCERATION. n. f. [ulceratio, Fr. ulceratio, from ulcere, Lat.]
 1. The act of breaking into ulcers.

2. Ulcer; fore.

The effects of mercury on ulcerations are manifest. Arbut.

ULCEROUS. adj. [ulcerosus, Latin.] Afflicted with fores.

Strangely visited people,
 All swollen and ulcerous he cures. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

An ulcerous disposition of the lungs, and an ulcer of the lungs, may be apoplytically termed causes of a pulmonique consumption. Harvey on Conjunctions.

ULCEROUSNESS. n. f. [from ulcerous.] The state of being ul-cerous.

ULCERED. adj. [ulceré, Fr. from ulcer.] Grown by time from a hurt to an ulcer.

Æsculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat; the first for licking ulcer'd wounds, and the goat's milk for the discales of the stomach. Temple.

ULGINOUS. adj. [uliginosus, Latin.] Slimy; muddy.

The uliginous lacteous matter taken notice of in the coral fishings upon the coast of Italy, was only a collection of the corallin particles. Woodward.

ULTIMATE. adj. [ultimus, Latin.] Intended in the last resort; being the last in the train of consequences.

I would be at the worst; worst is my port,
 My harbour, and my ultimate repose. Milton.

Many actions apt to procure fame, are not conducive to this our ultimate happiness. Addison.

The ultimate allotment of God to men, is really a consequence of their own voluntary choice, in doing good or evil. Rogers's Sermons.

ULTIMATELY. adv. [from ultimate.] In the last consequence.

Charity is more extensive than either of the two other graces, which center ultimately in ourselves; for we believe, and we hope for our own fakes; but love, which is a more disinterested principle, carries us out of ourselves, into desires and endeavours of promoting the interests of other beings. Atterbury.

Trust in our own powers, ultimately terminates in the friendship of other men, which these advantages assure to us. Rogers's Sermons.

ULTIMITY. n. f. [ultimus, Latin.] The last stage; the last consequence. A word very convenient, but not in use.

Alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, is the ultimity of that process. Bacon.

ULTRAMARINE. n. f. [ultra and marinus, Latin.] One of the noblest blue colours used in painting, produced by calcination from the stone called lapis lazuli. Hill.

Others, notwithstanding they are brown, cease not to be soft and faint, as the blue of ultramarine. Dryden.

ULTRAMARINE. adj. [ultra marinus, Lat.] Being beyond the sea; foreign. Ainsworth.

ULTRAMONTANE. adj. [ultramontanus, Fr. ultra montanus, Lat.]
 Being beyond the mountains.

ULTRAMUNDANE. adj. [ultra and mundus, Lat.] Being beyond the world.

ULTRONEOUS. adj. [ultra, Lat.] Spontaneous; voluntary.

UMBEL. n. f. In botany, the extremity of a stalk or branch divided into several pedicles or rays, beginning from the same point, and opening to as to form an inverted cone. Diët.

UMBELLATED. adj. In botany, is said of flowers when many of them grow together in umbels. Diët.

UMBELLIFEROUS. adj. [umbel and fero, Lat.] In botany, being a plant that bears many flowers, growing upon many footstalks, proceeding from the same centre; and chiefly appropriated to such plants whose flowers are composed of five leaves, as fennel and parsnip. Diët.

UMBER. n. f.

1. Umber is a sad colour; which grind with gum-water, and lighten it with a little ceruse, and a shive of saffron. Peacham.

UMP

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face. Shakespeare.
Umbre is very sensible and earthy; there is nothing but pure black which can dispute with it. Dryden.
The umbres, ochres, and minerals found in the fildures, are much finer than those found in the strata. Woodward.
2. A fish. [stymallus, Lat.]
The umber and grayling differ as the herring and pilcher do; but though they may do so in other nations, those in England differ nothing but in their names. Walt. Angler.
UMBERED. adj. [from umber or umbra, Lat.] Shaded; clouded.
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
Fire answers fire; and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
UMBRICAL. adj. [umbilical, Fr. from umbilicus, Lat.] Belonging to the navel.
Birds are nourished by umbilical vessels, and the navel is manifest a day or two after exclusion. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
In a calf, the umbilical vessels terminate in certain bodies divided into a multitude of carnosous papillae, received into so many lockets of the cotyledons growing on the womb. Ray.
UMBLES. n. f. [umbles, Fr.] A deer's entrails. Diet.
UMBO. n. f. [Latin.] The point, or prominent part of a buckler.
Thy words together ty'd in small hanks,
Close as the Macedonian phalanx;
Or like the umbo of the Romans,
Which fierce foes could break by no means. Swift.
UMBRAGE. n. f. [umbrage, Fr.]
1. Shade; screen of trees;
O, might I here
In solitude live savage; in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star, or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening! Milton's Par. Lost.
Men swell ring run
To grots and caves, and the cool umbrage seek
Of woven arborets. Philips.
The rest are umbrages quickly dispell'd; the astrologer
subjects liberty to the motions of heaven. Bramb. against Hobbs.
The opinion carries no show of truth nor umbrage of reason of its side. Woodward.
Such a removal of the metal out of one part of the mass, and collecting of it in another, has mislead some, and given umbrage to an opinion, that there is a growth of metal in ore exposed to the air. Woodward on Pallas.
3. Reluctance; offence; suspicion of injury.
Although he went on with the war, yet it should be but with his sword in his hand, to bend the stiffness of the other party to accept of peace; and so the king should take no umbrage of his arming and protection. Bacon.
UMBRAGEOUS. adj. [umbrageus, Fr.] Shady; yielding shade.
Umbrageous grots and caves of cool recess. Milton.
Walk daily in a pleasant airy, and umbrageous garden. Harvey.
The fleecing shower is scarce to patter heard,
Beneath th' umbrageous multitude of leaves, Thomson.
UMBRAGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from umbrageous.] Shadiness.
The exceeding umbrageousness of this tree, he compareth to the dark and shadowed life of man; through which the fun of justice being not able to pierce, we have all remained in the shadow of death, till it pleased Christ to climb the tree of the cross, for our enlight'ning and redemption. Raleigh.
UMBRATILE. adj. [umbratilis, Latin.] Being in the shade.
UMBRILE. n. f. [from umbra, Lat.] A screen used in hot UMBRILLA. n. f. [umbrella, Lat.] A screen used in hot countries to keep off the sun, and in others to bear off the rain.
I can carry your umbrella, and fan your ladyship. Dryden.
Good housewives
Defended by th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe through the wet on clinking patterns tread. Gay.
UMBRILETTE. n. f. The visor of the helmet. Spenser.
UMBRILITY. n. f. [umbrilis, Lat.] Shadiness; exclusion of light.
Oiled paper becometh more transparent, and admits the visible rays with much less umbrility. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
UMPIRAGE. n. f. [from umpire.] Arbitration; friendly decision of a controversy.
UMPIRE. n. f. [This word umpire, with great applause from Skinner, derives from un pice, Fr. a father.] An arbitrator; one who, as a common friend, decides disputes.
Give me some present counsel; or, behold,
Twixt my extremes and me, this bloody knife Shall play the umpire; arbitrating that Which the commission of thy years and art
Could to no issue of true honour bring. Shakespeare.
Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence. Shakespeare.

UNA

The learned Sennerius, in that book, takes not upon him to play the advocate for the chymists, but the umpire between them and the peripateticks.
The vast distance that sin had put between the offending creature and the offended Creator, required the help of some great umpire and intercessor, to open him a new way of access to God; and this Christ did for us as mediator. South.
The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause
So far from their own will as from the laws, Dryden.
You for their umpire and their synod take.
UN. A Saxon privative or negative particle answering to in of the Latins, and α of the Greeks, on, Dutch. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs. All the instances of this kind of composition cannot therefore be inserted; but I have collected a number sufficient, perhaps more than sufficient, to explain it.
UNABASHED. adj. [from abashed.] Not shamed; not confuted by modesty.
Earle's on high, stood unabashed Defoe,
And Tutchin flagrant from the scourge below. Pope.
UNABLE. adj. [from ab-.]
1. Not having ability.
The Amalekites set on them, supposing that they had been weary, and unable to resist. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Zeal mov'd thee:
To please thy gods thou didst it; gods unable
To acquit themselves, and prosecute their foes. Milton.
The prize unable to conceal his pain,
Gaz'd on the fair,
And sigh'd, and look'd, and sigh'd again. Dryden.
I intended to put it in practice, though far unable for the attempt of such a poem.
Man, under the disadvantages of a weak and fallen nature, was unable even to form an idea of happiness worthy his reasonable ambition. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Weak; impotent.
A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable;
Beyond all manner of so much I love you. Shakespeare.
UNABOLISHED. adj. [from abolished.] Not repealed; remaining in force.
The number of needless laws unabolished, doth weaken the force of them that are necessary. Hooker.
UNACCEPTABLE. adj. [from acceptabile.] Not pleasing; not such as is well received.
The marquis at that time was very unacceptable to his countrymen. Clerendon.
Tis as indecent as unacceptable, and all men are willing to shrink out of such company, the sober for the hazards, and joyful for the unpleasantness. Government of the Tongue.
Every method for deterring others from the like practices for the future, must be unacceptable and displeasing to the friends of the guilty. Mail's Traveller.
If he thinks from an unacceptable duty, there is a secret reserve of infidelity at the bottom. Rogers's Sermons.
UNACCEPTABLENESS. n. f. [from unacceptable.] State of not pleasing.
This alteration arises from the unacceptableness of the subject I am upon. Collier on Pride.
UNACCEPTED. adj. [from accepted.] Not accepted.
By turns put on the suppliant, and the Lord
Offer'd again the unaccepted wreath,
And choice of happy love, or instant death. Prior.
UNACCESSIBLE. n. f. [from accessibilis.] State of not being to be attained or approached.
Many excellent things are in nature, which, by reason of the remoteness from us, and unaccessibility to them, are not within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.
UNACCOMMODATED. adj. [from accommodatus.] Unfurnished with external convenience.
Unaccommodated man is no more than such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Shakespeare.
UNACCOMPANIED. adj. [from accompanied.] Not attended.
Seldom one accident, prosperous or adverse, cometh un- accompanied with the like. Hayward.
UNACCOMPLISHED. adj. [from accomplished.] Unfinished; incomplete.
Beware of death, thou canst not die unperjur'd,
And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind. Dryden.
Thy vows are mine.
The gods dismay'd at his approach, withdrew,
Nor durst their unaccomplish'd crime pursue. Dryden.
UNACCOUNTABLE. adj. [from accountable.]
1. Not explicable; not to be solved by reason; not reducible to rule.
I shall note difficulties, which are not usually observed, though unaccountable. Glanville.
The folly is so unaccountable, that enemies pass upon us for friends.
There has been an unaccountable disposition of late, to fetch the fashion from the French. What

UNA

What is yet more unaccountable, would he complain of their resisting his omnipotence. Rogers's Sermons.
The Chinese are an unaccountable people, strangely compounded of knowledge and ignorance. Braker's Reflect. on Learn.
The manner whereby the soul and body are united, and how they are distinguished, is wholly unaccountable to us. Swift.
2. Not subject; not controlled.
UNACCOUNTABLY. adv. Strangely.
The boy proved to be the son of the merchant, whose heart had so unaccountably melted at the sight of him. Addison.
UNACCURATE. adj. [from accurate.] Not exact.
Galileo using an unaccurate way, defined the air to be in weight to water but as one to four hundred. Boyle.
UNACCURATENESS. n. f. [from unaccurate.] Want of exact-ness.
It may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccuracy and unaccountingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly to be relied on. Boyle.
UNACCUSTOMED. adj. [from accustomed.]
1. Not used; not habituated.
I was chastised as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke. Jer. xxxi.
The necessity of air to the most of animals unaccustomed to the want of it, may best be judged of by the following experiments. Boyle.
2. New; not usual.
I'll send one to Mantua,
Where that same banish'd runaway doth live,
Shall give him such an unaccustom'd dram,
That he shall soon keep Tibalt company. Shakespeare.
Their pristine worth
The Britons recolect, and gladly change
Sweet native home, for unaccustom'd air. Philips.
An old word ought never to be fixed to an unaccustomed idea, without just and evident necessity. Watts's Logic.
UNACKNOWLEDGED. adj. [from acknowledged.] Not owned.
The fear of what was to come from an unknown, at least an unacknowledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity. Clerendon.
UNACQUAINTANCE. n. f. [from acquaintance.] Want of familiarity; want of knowledge.
The first is an utter unacquaintance with his master's designs, in these words; the servant knoweth not what his master doth. South.
UNACQUAINTED. adj. [from acquainted.]
1. Not known; unusual; not familiarly known.
She greatly grew amazed at the sight,
And th' unacquainted fight began to fear. Fairy Queen.
2. Not having familiar knowledge.
Festus, an infidel, a Roman, one whose ears were un- acquainted with such matter, heard him, but could not reach unto that whereof he spake. Hooker.
Where else
Shall I inform my unacquainted feet
In the blind mazes of this tangled world? Milton.
Art thou a courtier,
Or I a king? My ears are unacquainted
With such bold truths, especially from thee. Denham.
Youth, that with joys had unacquainted been,
Envy'd grey hairs, that once good days had seen. Dryden.
Let us live like those who expect to die, and then we shall find that we fear'd death only because we were unacquainted with it. Wake's Preparation for Death.
UNACTIVE. adj. [from active.]
1. Not brisk; not lively.
Silly people commend tame, unactive children, because they make no noise, nor give them any trouble. Locke.
2. Having no employment.
Man hath his daily work of body, or mind,
Appointed, which declares his dignity;
While other animals unactive range,
And of their doings God takes no account. Milton.
3. Not busy; not diligent.
His life,
Private, unactive, calm, contemplative;
Little suspicious to any king. Paradise Regain'd.
An homage which nature commands all understandings to pay to virtue; and yet it is but a faint, unactive thing; for in defiance of the judgment, the will may still remain as much a stranger to virtue as before. South's Sermons.
4. Having no efficacy.
In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.
UNACTUATED. adj. Not actuated.
The peripatetic matter is a mere unactuated power. Glanv.
UNADMIR'D. adj. Not regarded with honour.
Oh! had I rather unadmird remain'd,
In some lone ile, or distant northern land;
Where the gilt chariot never marks the way. Pope.
UNADORN'D. adj. Not worshipped.
Nor was his name unheard, or unador'd
In ancient Greece. Milton.

UNA

UNADORN'D. adj. Not decorated; not embellished.
The earth, till then Desert, and bare, unlightly, unadorn'd, Brought forth the tender grass. Milton's Par. Lost.
But hoary winter, unadorn'd and bare,
Dwells in the dire retreat, and freezes there. Addison.
UNADVENTUROUS. adj. Not adventurous.
The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modesty, Intelolute, unhardy, unadvent'rous. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
UNADVISED. adj.
1. Imprudent; indiscreet.
Madam, I have unadvis'd
Deliver'd you a paper that I should not. Shakespeare.
2. Done without due thought; rash.
This contract to-night
Is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden,
Too like the light'ning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say, it lightens. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.
These prosperous proceedings were turned back by the un- advis'd forwardness of divers chief counsellors, in making sudden and unreasonable alterations. Hayward.
Specific conformities can be no unadvis'd productions;
but are regulated by the immediate efficiency of some knowing agent. Glanville.
UNADVIS'DLY. adv. Imprudently; rashly; indiscreetly.
A strange kind of speech unto christian ears; and such,
as I hope they themselves do acknowledge unadvis'dly uttered. Hooker.
What man's wit is there able to found the depth of those dangerous and fearful evils, whereinto our weak and impotent nature is inclinable to sink itself, rather than to shew an acknowledgment of error in that which once we have unadvis'dly taken upon us to defend, against the stream of a contrary public resolution. Hooker.
What is done cannot be now amended;
Men shall deal unadvis'dly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent of. Shakespeare.
A word unadvis'dly spoken on the one side, or misunderstood on the other, has rais'd such an aversion to him, as in time has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.
UNADULTERATED. adj. Genuine; not spoiled by spurious mixtures.
I have only discovered one of those channels, by which the history of our Saviour might be conveyed pure and un- adulterated. Addison on the Christian Religion.
UNAFFE'CTED. n. f.
1. Real; not hypocritical.
They bore the king
To lie in solemn state, a public fight:
Groans, cries, and howlings fill the crowded place,
And unaffected sorrow sat on ev'ry face. Dryden.
2. Free from affectation; open; candid; sincere.
The maid improves her charms,
With inward greatness, unaffected widow,
And simplicity of manners. Addison's Cato.
Of softest manners, unaffected mind;
Lover of peace, and friend of human kind. Pope's Epist.
3. Not formed by too rigid observation of rules; not laboured.
Men divinely taught, and better teaching
The solid rules of civil government,
In their majestic, unaffected stile,
Than all the oratory of Greece and Rome. Milton.
4. Not moved; not touched.
UNAFFE'CTEDLY. adv. Really; without any attempt to produce false appearances.
He was always unaffectedly cheerful; no marks of any thing heavy at his heart broke from him. Locke.
UNAFFE'CTING. adj. Not pathetic; not moving the passions.
UNAFFLICTED. adj. Free from trouble.
My unafflicted mind doth feed
On no unholy thoughts for benefit. David's Psalms.
UNAGREE'ABLE. adj. Inconsistent; unsuitable.
Advent'rous work! yet to thy pow'r and mine
Not unagreeable, to found a path
Over this main, from hell to that new world. Milton.
UNAGREE'ABLENESS. n. f. Unsuitableness to; inconsistency with.
Papias, a holy man, and scholar of St. John, having delivered the millennium, men chose rather to admit a doctrine, whose unagreeableness to the gospel oeconomy rendered it suspicious, than think an apostolick man could seduce them. Decay of Piety.
UNAI'DABLE. adj. Not to be helped.
The congregated college have concluded,
That labouring art can never ransom nature
From her unaidable estate. Shakespeare.
UNAI'DED. adj. Not assisted; not helped.
Their number, counting those th' unaided eye
Can see, or by invented tubes descry,
The widest stretch of human thought exceeds. Blackmore.
UNAIMING.

UNA

UNAIMING. adj. Having no particular direction.
The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky:
Such frantick flights are like a madman's dream,
And nature suffers in the wild extreme. Granville.

UNAKING. adj. Not feeling or causing pain.
Shew them th' unaking scars which I would hide,
As if I had received them for the hire
Of their breath only. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

UNALIENABLE. adj. Not to be transferred.
Hereditary right should be kept sacred, not from any un- alienable right in a particular family, but to avoid the consequences that usually attend the ambition of competitors. Swift.

UNALLAYED. adj. Not impaired by bad mixtures.
Unallayed satisfactions are joys too heavenly to fall to many men's shares on earth. Boyle.

UNALLIED. adj.
1. Having no powerful relation.
2. Having no common nature; not congenial.
He is compounded of two very different ingredients, spirit and matter; but how such unallied and disproportioned substances should act upon each other, no man's learning yet could tell him. Collier on Pride.

UNALTERABLE. adj. Unchangeable; immutable.
The law of nature, consisting in a fixed, unalterable relation of one nature to another, is indispensable. South.
They fix unalterable laws,
Settling the same effect on the same cause. Creech.
The truly upright man is inflexible in his uprightness, and unalterable in his purpose. Atterbury.

UNALTERABLENESS. n. f. Immutability; unchangeableness.
This happens from the unalterableness of the corpules, which constitute and compose those bodies. Woodward.

UNALTERABLY. adv. Unchangeably; immutably.
Retain unalterably firm his love intire. Milton's Par. Lost.
The day and year are standard measures, because they are unalterably constituted by those motions. Helder on Time.

UNALTERED. adj. Not changed; not changeable.
It was thought in him an unpardonable offence to alter any thing; in us intolerable that we suffer any thing to remain unaltered. Hooker.
To whom our Saviour, with unalter'd brow;
Thy coming hither, though I know thy scope,
I bid not, or forbid. Paradise Regain'd.
To shew the truth of my unalter'd breast,
Know that your life was giv'n at my request. Dryden.
Since these forms begin, and have their end,
On some unalter'd cause they sure depend. Dryden.
Grains and nuts pass often through animals unalter'd. Arbut.
Amongst the shells that were fair, unaltered, and free from such mineral insinuations, there were some which could not be match'd by any species of shell-fish now found upon the sea shores. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

UNAMAZED. adj. Not astonished; free from astonishment.
Though at the voice much marvelling; at length
Not unamaz'd, the thus in answer spake. Milton.

UNAMBITIOUS. adj. Free from ambition.
My humble muse, free from ambitious strains,
Paints the green forest, and the flow'ry plains. Pope.
I am one of those unambitious people, who will love you forty years hence. Pope.

UNAMENDABLE. adj. [inmendabilis, Lat.] Not to be changed for the better.
He is the same man; so is every one here that you know:
mankind is unamendable. Pope to Swift.

UNAMIALE. adj. Not raising love.
Those who represent religion in an unamiable light, are like the spies sent by Moses, to make a discovery of the land of promise, when, by their reports, they discouraged the people from entering upon it. Addison's Spectator.
These men are so well acquainted with the unamiable part of themselves, that they have not the confidence to think they are really beloved. Addison's Spectator.
Nor are the hills unamiable, whose tops
To heav'n aspire. Philips.

UNANALYSED. adj. Not resolved into simple parts.
Some large crystals of refined and unanalysed nitre, appeared to have each of them fix flat sides. Boyle.

UNANCHORED. adj. Not anchored.
A port there is, inclos'd on either side,
Where ships may rest, unanchored, and untied. Pope.
This sense I doubt.

UNANIMATED. adj. Not enlivened; not vivified.
Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off ev'n in the blossoms of my fin, Shakesp. Hamlet.
Unhous'd, unanointed, unanim'd. Shakesp. Hamlet.

UNANIMATED. adj. Not enlivened; not vivified.
Look on those half lines as the imperfect products of a hasty muse: like the frogs in the Nile, part kindled into life, and part a lump of uninformed, unanimated matter. Dryden.

UNANIMITY. n. f. [unanimitas, Fr.] Agreement in design or opinion.

UNA

An honest party of men acting with unanimitas, are of infinitely greater consequence, than the same party aiming at the same end by different views. Addison.

UNANIMOUS. adj. [unanime, Fr. unanimis, Lat.] Being of one mind; agreeing in design or opinion.
They went to meet
So oft in festivals of joy, and love
Unanimous, as sons of one great fire, Hymning th' eternal father. Milton's Par. Lost.
All bred in arms, unanimous and brave. Dryden.

UNANIMOUSLY. adv. [from unanimous.] With one mind.
This particular is unanimously reported by all the ancient christian authors. Addison on the Christian Religion.

UNANIMATED. adj.
1. Not anointed.
2. Not prepared for death by extreme unction.
Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off ev'n in the blossoms of my fin, Unhous'd, unanointed, unanel'd. Shakesp. Hamlet.

UNANSWERABLE. adj. Not to be refuted.
This is a manifest and unanswerable argument. Raleigh.
I shall not conclude it false, though I think the emergent difficulties, which are its attendants, unanswerable. Glanville.
The pye's question was wisely let fall without a reply, to intimate that it was unanswerable. L'Estrange.
These speculations are strong intimations, not only of the excellency of a human soul, but of its independence on the body; and if they do not prove, do at least confirm, these two great points, which are established by many other reasons that are unanswerable. Addison's Spectator.
As to the excuse drawn from the demands of creditors, if it be real, it is unanswerable. Atterbury's Sermon.

UNANSWERABLY. adv. Beyond confutation.
It will put their little logic hard to it, to prove, that there can be any obedience, where there is no command.
And therefore if unanswerably follows, that the abettors of the forementioned principle plead confidence in a direct and bare-faced contradiction to God's express command. South.

UNANSWERED. adj.
1. Not oppos'd by a reply.
Unanswer'd I left thou boast. Milton's Par. Lost.
Must I tamely bear
This arrogance unanswer'd? Thou'rt a traitor. Addison.
2. Not confuted.
All these reasons, they say, have been brought, and were hitherto never answer'd; besides a number of meriments and jests unanswer'd likewise. Hooker.

3. Not suitably returned.
Quench, Corydon, thy long unanswer'd fire;
Mind what the common wants of life require. Dryden.

UNAPPA'LED. adj. Not daunted; not impress'd by fear.
If my memory must thus be thrall'd
To that strange stroke, which conquered all my senses;
Can thoughts still thinking to rest unappall'd? Sidney.
Infernal ghosts
Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd;
Some bent at thee their fiery darts; while thou Sat'st unappall'd in calm and fearless peace. Milton.
As a lion, unappall'd with fear,
Springs on the toils, and rushes on the spear. Dryden.
Does this appear like guilt? When thus serene,
With eyes erect, and visage unappall'd,
Fixt on that awful face, I stand the charge;
Amaz'd, not fearing. Smith's Phaed. and Hippolytus.

UNAPPA'RELLED. adj. Not dressed; not clothed.
In Peru, though they were an unapparell'd people, and had some customs very barbarous, yet the government of the Incas had many parts of civility. Bacon's Holy Wars.
Till our souls be unapparell'd
Of bodies, they from bliss are banished. Down.

UNAPPA'RENT. adj. Obscure; not visible.
Thy potent voice he hears,
And longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

UNAPPEASABLE. adj. Not to be pacified; implacable.
The unappeasable rage of Hildebrand and his successors, never left perfecting him, by raising one rebellion upon another. Raleigh's Essays.
I see thou art implacable; more deaf
To prays than winds to seas; yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and seas to shore.
Thy anger, unappeasable, still rages,
Eternal tempest never to be calm'd. Milton.
Though unarm'd, I am.

UNAPPEASED. adj. Not pacified.
Sacrifice his flesh,
That to the shadows be not unappeas'd. Shakesp.
His son forgot, his empress unappeas'd. Dryden.
How soon the tyrant with new love is seiz'd.

UNA

UNAPPLICABLE. adj. [from apply.] Such as cannot be applied.
Gratitude, by being confined to the few, has a very narrow province to work on, being acknowledged to be unap- licable, and so consequently ineffectual to all others. Hammond.
their beloved earl of Manchester appeared now as un- applicable to their purposes as the other. Carendon.
The flinging out, and laying in order those intermediate ideas, that demonstratively shew the equality or inequality of unapplicable quantities, has produced discoveries. Locke.

UNAPPREHENDED. adj. Not understood.
They of whom God is altogether unapprehended, are but few in number, and for grossness of wit such, that they hardly seem to hold the place of human being. Hooker.

UNAPPREHENSIVE. adj. [from apprehend.] Not apprehending.
1. Not intelligent; not ready of conception.
The tame temper of mind makes a man unapprehensive and insensible of any misery suffered by others. South.

UNAPPROACHABLE. adj. Inaccessible.
God is light,
And never but in unapproach'd light Dwelt from eternity. Milton's Par. Lost.

UNAPPROVED. adj. [from approve.] Not approved.
Evil into the mind
May come and go to unapproved, and leave
No spot behind. Milton.

UNAPT. adj. [from apt.] Not apt.
1. Dull; not apprehensive.
2. Not ready; not propense.
I am a soldier, and unapt to weep. Shakesp.
My blood hath been too cold and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities. Shakespere.

3. Unfit; not qualified.
Fear doth grow from an apprehension of deity indued with irresistible power to hurt; and is, of all affections (anger excepted) the unaptest to admit any conference with reason. Hooker.
A longing after sensual pleasures is a dissolution of the spirit of a man, and makes it loose, soft and wandering, unapt for noble, wife, or spiritual employments. Taylor.

4. Improper; unfit; unsuitable.
UNAPTLY. adv. [from unapt.] Unfitly; improperly.
He swims on his back, and the shape of his back seems to favour it, being very like the bottom of a boat; nor do his hinder legs unaptly resemble a pair of oars. Grew.

UNAPTNESS. n. f. [from unapt.] Unfitness; unsuitableness.
Men's apparel is commonly made according to their conditions; and their conditions are often governed by their garments: for the person that is gowned, is by his gown put in mind of gravity, and also restrained from lightness by the very unaptness of his weed. Spenser.

2. Dulness; want of apprehension.
That unaptness made you minister
Thus to execute yourself. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

3. Unreadiness; disqualification; want of propension.
The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body, strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken, and thereby gets an unaptness, or an aversion to any vigorous attempt ever after. Locke.

UNAP'ROVED. adj. [from argue.] Not argued.
1. Not disputed.
What thou bid'st,
Unarg'd I obey; so God ordains. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Not censured.
Not that his work liv'd in the hands of foes,
Unarg'd then, and yet hath fame from those. B. Johnson.

TO UNARM. v. a. [from arm.] To disarm; to strip of armour; to deprive of arms.
Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day. Shakesp.
Unarm me, Eros; the long day's talk is done,
And we must sleep. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Galen would not leave unto the world too subtle a theory of poisons; unarming thereby the malice of venomous spirits. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

UNARMED. adj. [from unarm.] Having no armour; having no weapons.
On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: To our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shakesp.
He all unarm'd
Shall chase thee with the terror of his voice
From thy demoniac hold, possession foul;
Thee and thy legions, yelling they shall fly,
And beg to hide them in a herd of swine. Milton.
Though unarm'd, I am.
Here, without my sword or pointed lance,
Hope not, bane man, unquell'd hence to go. Dryden.
Whereas most other creatures are furnished with weapons for their defence; man is born altogether unarmed. Grew.

UNARRA'IGNED. adj. Not brought to a trial.

UNA

As lawful lord, and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarraign'd. Daniel.

UNARRA'YED. adj. Not dressed.
As if this infant world yet unarray'd,
Naked and bare, in nature's lap were laid. Dryden.
Half unarray'd, he ran to his relief,
So hasty and so artless was his grief. Dryden.

UNARTFUL. adj.
1. Having no art, or cunning.
A chearful sweetness in his looks he has,
And innocence unartful in his face. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. Wanting skill.
How unartful would it have been to have set him in a corner, when he was to have given light and warmth to all the bodies round him? Chapman's Phil. Prin.

UNARTFULLY. adv. In an unartful manner.
In the report, although it be not unartfully drawn, and is perfectly in the spirit of a pleader, there is no great skill required to detect the many mistakes. Swift's Miscellany.

UNARTIFICIALLY. adv. Contrarily to art.
Not a feather is unartificially made, misplaced, redundant, or defective. Dorham's Physico-Theology.

UNASKED. adj. Not sought by solicitation.
With what eagerness, what circumstance
Unask'd, thou talkest such pains to tell me only My son's the better man. Denham's Sophy.
The bearded corn ensu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.
How, or why
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lye?
Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice;
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price. Dryden.

UNASPIRING. adj. Not ambitious.
To be modest and un aspiring, in honour preferring one another. Rogers.

UNASSAILED. adj. Not attacked; not assailed.
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. Shakespere.
I believe
That he, the supreme good, to whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glitt'ring guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton's Comus.

UNASSAILABLE. adj. Exempt from assault.
In the number, I do but know one,
That unassailable holds on his rank, Unhark'd of motion. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

UNASSAYED. adj. Unattempted.
What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd
Alone, without exterior help sustain'd. Milton.

UNASSISTED. adj. Not helped.
Its victories were the victories of reason, unassisted by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness. Addison's Freeholder.
What unassisted reason could not discover, that God has let clearly before us in the revelation of the gospel: a felicity equal to our most enlarged desires; a state of immortal and unchangeable glory. Rogers's Sermons.

UNASSISTING. adj. Giving no help.
With these I went, a brother of the war;
Nor idle stood, with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd: yet these I sway'd. Dryden.

UNASSUMING. adj. Not arrogant.
Unassuming worth in secret liv'd,
And died neglected. Thomson's Winter.

UNASSUR'D. adj.
1. Not confident.
The ensuing treatise, with a timorous and unassur'd countenance, adventures into your presence. Glanville.

2. Not to be trusted.
The doubts and dangers, the delays and woes;
The feigned friends, the unassur'd foes,
Do make a lover's life a wretch's hell. Spenser.

UNATTAINABLE. adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.
Praise and prayer are God's due worship; which are unattain- able by our discourses, simply considered, without the benefit of divine revelation. Dryden's Religio Laici.
I do not expect that men should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to: I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do. Locke.

UNATTAINABLENESS. n. f. State of being out of reach.
Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or un- attainableness of the good proposed. Locke.

UNATTEMPTED. adj. Untried; not assayed.
He left no means unattempted of destroying his son. Sidney.
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, ralleth on the rich. Shakesp.
It

UNA

It pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton.
Leave nothing unattempted to destroy
That perjur'd race. Dryden.
Shall we be discouraged from any attempt of doing good, by the possibility of our failing in it? How many of the best things would, at this rate, have been left unattempted? Atterb.
UNATTEMPTED. adj. Having no retinue, or attendants.
Your constancy
Hath left you unattended. Shakef. Macbeth.
With goddess-like demeanor forth she went,
Not unattended. Milton's Par. Lost.
Such unattended generals can never make a revolution in Parnassus. Dryden.
UNATTENDING. adj. Not attending.
Ill is lost that praise,
That is address'd to unattending ears. Milton.
Ev'ry nymph of the flood, her treffes rending,
Throws off her amulet of pearl in the main;
Neptune in anguish his charge unattending;
Vellies are found'ring, and vows are in vain. Dryden.
UNATTENTIVE. adj. Not regarding.
Man's nature is so unattentive to goods, that there can scarce be too many monitors. Government of the Tongue.
Such things are not accompanied with show, and therefore seldom draw the eyes of the unattentive. Tatler, N. 55.
UNATTENDED. adj. Not expected.
Could you afford him such a bribe as that,
A brother's blood yet unattend'd? Rowe.
UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain with respect to any purpose.
When we have endeavoured to find out the strongest causes, wherefore they should imagine that reading is so un- available, the most we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the scriptures dark, and the labour of reading easy. Hooker.
UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain.
Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailable pity show. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
Supine he tumbles on the crimson sands,
Before his helpless friends and native bands,
And spreads for aid his unavailable hands. Pope.
UNAVOIDABLE. adj.
1. Inevitable; not to be shunned.
Oppression on one side, and ambition on the other, are the unavoidable occasions of war. Dryden.
It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions, without certain proofs of their truth. Locke.
Single acts of transgression will, through weakness and surprise, be unavoidable to the best guarded. Rogers.
The merits of Christ will make up the unavoidable deficiencies of our service; will prevail for pardon to our sincere repentance. Rogers.
All sentiments of worldly grandeur vanish at that unavoid- able moment, which decides the destiny of men. Clarissa.
2. Not to be missed in ratiocination.
That something is of itself, is self-evident, because we see things are; and the things that we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always, and of themselves; one of them is unavoidable. Tillotson.
I think it unavoidable for every rational creature, that will examine his own or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal, wise being, who had no beginning. Locke.
UNAVOIDABLENESS. n. f. Inevitability.
How can we conceive it subject to material impressions?
and yet the importunity of pain, and unavoidableness of sensations, strongly persuade that we are so. Glauville.
UNAVOIDABLY. adv. Inevitably.
The most perfect administration must unavoidably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it. Addison.
UNAVOIDED. adj. Inevitable.
We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoided is the danger now. Shakef.
Rare poems ask rare friends;
Yet favours, since the most of mankind be Their unavoided subject, fewest see. B. Johnson.
UNAUTHORISED. adj. Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.
To kiss in private?
An unauthorized kiss. Shakef. Othello.
It is for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command. Dryden.
UNAWARE. } adv. [from aware, or wary.]
UNAWARES. }
1. Without thought; without previous meditation.
It is my father's face,
Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd. Shakef.
Firm we submit; yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unawares. Milton.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium: to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure. Dryden.
'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopp'd off; one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not.
2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.
Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with. Pope.
Left destruction come upon him at unawares, and let his net that he hath hid, catch himself. Spenser.
My hand, unawares to me, was, by the force of that endeavour it just before employed to sustain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it. Boyl.
He breaks at unawares upon our walks,
And, like a midnight wolf, invades the fold. Dryden.
Though we live never so long, we are still surpris'd: we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect. Wale.
UNAWED. adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.
The raging and fanatic distemper of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as, being unawed by any guilt of their own,
could have watched other men's. Clarendon.
Unforc'd by punishment, unawed by fear,
His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.
UNBA'CKED. adj.
1. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.
Then I beat my tabor;
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanc'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt musick. Shakef. Tempest.
A well wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unback'd filly may give thee a fall. Swelling.
They flinch like unback'd fillies. Dennis's Letter.
2. Not countenanced; not aided.
Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unback'd. Daniel's Civil War.
UNBA'LANCED. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.
Let earth unbalanced from her orbit fly.
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky. Pope.
UNBA'LASTED. adj. Not kept steady by ballast; unsteady.
They having but newly left those grammatic flats, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and turmoil'd with their unballast- ed wits, in fathomless and unquiet depths of controversy, do, for the most part, grow into hatred of learning. Milton.
As at sea th' unballast vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides:
So in the bounding chariot tost'd on high,
The youth is hurry'd headlong through the sky. Addison.
UNBA'NDED. adj. [from band.] Wanting a string, or band.
Your hose should be ungarter'd, your bonnet unbanded, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakef.
TO UNBA'R. v. a. [from bar.] To open, by removing the bars; to unbolt.
'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard,
If any other entrance stand unbar'd. Denham.
These rites the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar
Of sacred peace, or loose th' imprisonment war. Dryden.
UNBA'RRED. adj. [from bar, Lat.] Not shaven. Out of use.
Must I go shew them my unbarbed scone?
Must my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie? Shakef. Coriolanus.
UNBA'RKED. adj. [from bark.] Decoratized; stripped of the bark.
A branch of a tree, unbarked some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown. Bacon.
UNBA'SHFUL. adj. Impudent; shameless.
Nor did I with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility. Shakef. Othello.
UNBA'TED. adj. [from bate.] Not repressed; not blunted.
Where is the horse, that doth unread again
His tedious measures with th' unbated fire
That he did pace them first? Shakef. Merch. of Venice.
UNBA'THED. adj. [from bath.] Not wet.
Fierce Palimond, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent;
The blade return'd unbath'd, and to the handle bent. Dryden.
UNBA'TTERED. adj. Not injured by blows.
I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their flaves: or thou, Macbeth;
Or cleve my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded. Shakef. Macbeth.
UNBEA'RING. adj. Bringing no fruit.

UNB

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their head,
And grafts more happy in their stead. Dryden.
TO UNBA'Y. v. a. To let open; to free from the restraint of mounds.
I ought now to loose the reins of my affections, to unbay
the current of my passion, and love on without boundary or measure. Norris's Miscellany.
UNBEA'TEN. adj.
1. Not treated with blows.
His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For he had rode five miles unpur'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turn'd tail towards Neweaton. Bp. Corbet.
2. Not trodden.
We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand.
If your bold muse dare tread unbeaten paths. Roscommon.
Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky. Swift.
UNBECOMING. adj. Indecent; unsuitable; indecorous.
Here's our chief guest.
— If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming. Shakef. Macbeth.
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argu'd fear. Milton's Par. Lost.
I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in beasts than in mankind; and that it was unbecoming of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger. Dryden.
My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall:
I should have dy'd, and not complain'd at all. Dryden.
This petulance in conversation prevails among some of that sex, where it appears the most unbecoming and unnatural. Addison's Freeholder.
Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays.
Such proceed upon debates without unbecoming warmth. Swift.
UNBECOMINGNESS. n. f. Indecency; indecorum.
If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault. Locke.
TO UNBE'D. v. a. To raise from a bed.
Eels unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder. Walton's Angler.
UNBEF'ITTING. adj. Not becoming; not suitable.
Love is full of unbefitting strains,
All wanton as a child, skipping in vain.
Far be it that I should write these fin, or blame!
Or think thee unbefitting holiest place. Milton.
He might several times have made peace with his discontent subjects upon terms not at all unbefitting his dignity or interest; but he rather chose to sacrifice the whole alliance to his private passion. Swift.
TO UNBEGET. v. n. To deprive of existence.
Withes each minute he could unbeget
Those rebel sons, who dare t' usurp his seat. Dryden.
UNBEGOT. } adj. [from begot.]
UNBEGOTTEN. }
1. Eternal; without generation.
Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God? Stillington.
2. Not yet generated.
God omnipotent, must'ring
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot. Shakef.
In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unbegot, to being yet unbegot. Milton's Par. Lost.
Where a child finds his own parents his perverters, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. South's Sermons.
TO UNBEGUILE. v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.
Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heav'n. Denne.
Their conclusions unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused into them, by their conditionary invectives. Hewel's Vocal Forest.
UNBEHE'D. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.
These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
Shine not in vain. Milton.
UNBELIE'F. n. f.
1. Incredulity.
'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,

Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimera's, and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell;
For such there be, but unbelief is blind. Milton.
I'm justly plagu'd by this your unbelief.
And am myself the cause of my own grief. Dryden.
Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief; i. e. a readiness to believe, or to deny every thing at first hearing. Watts.
2. Infidelity; irreligion.
Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where found belief wanteth. Hooker.
TO UNBELIEVE. v. a.
1. To discredit; not to trust.
Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go. Shakef.
So great a prince and favourite to suddenly metamorphosed into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Walton's Buckingham.
2. Not to think real or true.
Nor 'tis than sight and hearing could convince,
Of such an unforeseen and unbelieved offence. Dryden.
UNBELIEVER. n. f. An infidel; one who believes not the scripture of God.
The ancient fathers being often constrained to shew, what warrant they had to much to rely upon the scriptures, endeavoured still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judg'd thereof as they should. Hooker.
What endless war would jealous nations tear,
If none above did witness what they swear?
Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just,
Among themselves to find so little trust. Waller.
In the new testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers. Tillotson.
He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Atterbury.
Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers;
but if you would once convince profligates, by topics drawn from the view of their own quiet reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift's Miscellany.
UNBELIEVING. adj. Infidel.
No pause,
No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
Smote in the rear. Phillips.
This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving
Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles. Addison.
In the days of the apostle, when all who professed themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this severe censure might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers's Sermons.
UNBELOV'D. adj. Not loved.
Who'er you are, not unbelov'd by heav'n,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driv'n. Dryden.
TO UNBE'ND. v. a. To relax; to remit; to ease.
You unbend your noble strength, to think So brain-sickly of things. Shakef. Macbeth.
It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Taylor's Holy Living.
Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares, Attended to the chase by all the flow'r of youth. Denham.
From those great cares when ease your soul unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryden.
I must be in the battle; but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.
UNBENDING. adj.
1. Not suffering flexure.
Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skirts along the main. Pope.
2. Devoted to relaxation.
Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Rowe.
UNBENEVOLENT. adj. Not kind.
A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit, which inclines men to a fierce, unbenevolent behaviour. Rogers's Sermons.
UNBEN'FICED. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.
More vacant pulpits would more converts make;
All would have latitude enough to take:
The rest unbenefic'd your sects maintain. Dryden.
UNBENIGHTED. adj. Never visited by darkness.
Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted thone, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in their light
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNBENIGN.

U N B

UNBENIGN. adj. Malignant; malevolent.
To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join
In synod unbeneign. Milton's Par. Lost, l. x. l. 661.

UNBENT. adj.
1. Not strained by the string.
Apollo heard, and conquering his disdain,
Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryden.
2. Having the bow unstrung.
Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th' elected deer before thee? Shakefp. Cymbeline.
3. Not crushed; not subdued.
But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppo- Dryden.
4. Relaxed; not intent.
Be not always on affairs intent,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent:
When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

UNBESPEMING. adj. Unbecoming.
No emotion of passion transported me by the indignity of his carriage, to do or say any thing unbecoming myself. K. Charles.
Far be the spirit of the chase from them;
Uncomely courage, unbecoming skill. Thomson.

UNBESOURCED. adj. Not intreated.
Left heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath, unbesought, provided; and his hands
Cloath'd us unworthy; pitying while he judg'd. Milton.

UNBESTOWED. adj. Not given; not disposed of.
He had now but one son and one daughter unbested. Bacon.

UNBETRAYED. adj. Not betrayed.
Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel's Civil War.

UNBEWAILED. adj. Not lamented.
Let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

TO UNBETRAY. v. a. [from with.] To free from fascination, TO UNBESS. v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.
That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbias'd give its judgment; being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.
The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are consider'd, gain upon sincere, unbias'd minds. Atterbury.
The truest service a private man may do his country, is by unbiasing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.
Where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Unbias'd, or by favour, or by spite;
Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right. Pope.

UNBIASEDLY. adj. Without external influence; without prejudice.
I have fought the true meaning; and have unbias'dly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBID. v. a. [from with.] To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.
1. Uninvited.
Unbidden guests
Are often welcome when they are gone. Shakefp.
2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.
Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth Unbid. Milton's Par. Lost, l. x. l. 204.
Roses unbid, and ev'ry fragrant flower,
Flew from their stalks, to strow thy nuptial bow'r. Dryden.
Unbidden earth shall wreathing ivy bring,
And fragrant herbs the promises of spring. Dryden.

UNBOTTLED. adj. Free from bigotry.
Erasmus, who was an unbottled Roman Catholick, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him. Addison.

TO UNBOTTLE. v. a. [from bind.] To loose; to untie.
His own woe's author, whose bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it willfully unbinds. Fairy Queen.
Ye Larian dames,
If there be here, who dare maintain
My right, nor think the name of mother vain,
Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And orgies, and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.
On the sixth instant it was thought fit to unbind his head. Tatler, No. 55.

TO UNBOTTLE. v. a. [from bind.] To deprive of episcopal orders.
I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbottled yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

UNBOTTLED. adj. [from bind.] Unbridled; unrestrained.
We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbottled lusts; whereof I take this love to be a fect or eyon. Shakefp. Othello.

U N B

UNBLAMABLE. adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with a fault.
Much more could I say concerning this unblamable inequity of fines and rates.
He lov'd his people, him they idoliz'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That thus unblamable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

UNBLAMABLY. adv. Without taint of fault.
Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behaved ourselves. Thomson, l. 10.

UNBLAMED. adj. Blameless; free from fault.
Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell Long time in peace. Milton's Par. Lost, l. xii. l. 22.
Unblam'd, abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this dome receiv'd her prudent lord,
Who now is doom'd to mourn. Pope's Odyssey.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach;
free from deformity.
O welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity.
Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth.
Is none worthy to be made a wife
In all this town? Suppose her free from strife, Rich, fair, and fruitful; of unblemish'd life. Dryden.
They appointed, out of these new converts, men of the best sense, and of the most unblemish'd lives, to preside over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Not mingled.
None can boast a knowledge deparute from defilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblemished proportions on this side the empyreum. Glavin.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Not disgraced; not injured by any foil.
There, where very desolation dwells,
She may pass on with unblemish'd majesty:
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton.

UNBLEST. adj.
1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.
It is a shameful and unblest thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.
2. Wretched; unhappy.
In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.
What is true passion, if unblest it dies?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies?
UNBLOO'DIED. adj. Not stained with blood.
Who finds the partridge in the partridge's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbloody beak. Shakefp.

UNBLOO'DY. adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.
Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purring streams, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome bev'rage, and unbloody feasts. Dryden.

UNBLOWN. adj. Having the bud yet unexpanded.
Ah! my poor princes! Ah! my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets!
UNBLUSTED. adj. Not becoming obtuse.
A sword, whose weight without a blow might slay;
Able, unblasted, to cut hosts away. Corneille's Dancie.

UNBODIED. adj.
1. Incorporeal; immaterial.
If we could conceive of things as angels and unbodied spirits do, without involving them in those clouds language throws upon them, we should seldom be in danger of such mistakes as are perpetually committed. Watts's Logic.
2. Freed from the body.
She hath the bonds broke of eternal night;
Her soul unbodied of the burdensome corpse.
All things are but alter'd, nothing dies;
And here and there th' unbodiy'd spirit flies. Dryden.

UNBODIED. adj. Not fadden.
Of an unbodied stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes. Shakespeare.
He had given his curiosity its full, unbodied range, and ex-am'd not only in contemplation, but by sensitive experiment, whatever could be good for the sons of men. Decay of Piety.

UNBOUNDEDLY. adv. Without bounds; without limits.
So unbouddedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too. Government of the Tongue.

UNBOUNDEDNESS. n. f. Exemption from limits.
Finitude, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinitude, the unbouddedness of these degrees of properties. Cheyne.

UNBOUNDED. adj. Not bent.
He knits his brow, and frowns an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff, unbowed knee,
Disclaiming duty that to us belongs. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

U N B

UNBOO'KISH. adj.
1. Not studious of books.
2. Not cultivated by erudition.
As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbokish jealousy must contrive
Poor Calio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour, Quite in the wrong. Shakespeare's Othello.

UNBO'RN. adj. Not yet brought into life; future; being to come.
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming tow'rd me. Shakefp. Richard II.
The woes to come, the children yet unborn Shall feel this day, as sharp to them as thorn. Shakefp.
Never so much as in a thought unborn,
Did I offend you. Shakefp. As you like it.
He on the wings of cherubim
Up-lifted, in paternal glory rode Far into chaos, and the world unborn. Milton's Par. Lost.
To what wretched state reliev'd!
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n
To be thus wail'd from us? Milton's Par. Lost.
A queen, from whom
The souls of kings unborn for bodies wait. Dryden.

UNBORROWED. adj. Genuine; native; one's own.
But the luxurious father of the fold,
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly sweat. Dryden.
In substances, especially those which the common and unborrow'd names of any language are applied to, some remarkable, sensible qualities, serve to distinguish one from another. Locke.

UNBOT'OMED. adj.
1. Without bottom; bottomless.
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss. Milton.
2. Having no solid foundation.
This is a special act of christian hope, to be thus unbottom'd of ourselves, and fastened upon God, with a full reliance, trust, and dependance on his mercy. Hammond.

TO UNBOTSOM. v. a.
1. To reveal in confidence.
I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st;
Too well, unbottom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton.
Do we unbosom all our secrets to him, and hide nothing that passeth in the depth of our hearts from him? Atterbury.
2. To open; to disclose.
Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountains wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echo's mild. Milton.

UNBOUGHT. adj.
1. Obtained without money.
The unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden's Horace.
2. Not finding any purchaser.
The merchant will leave our native commodities unbought upon the hands of the farmer, rather than export them to a market, which will not afford him returns with profit. Locke.

UNBOUNDED. adj.
1. Loose; not tied.
2. Wanting a cover.
He that has complex ideas, without particular names for them, would be in no better case than a bookfeller, who had volumes that lay unbound, and without titles; which he could make known to others, only by shewing the loose sheets. Locke.
3. Pretense of unbodiness.
Some from their chains the faithful dogs unbound. Dryden.

UNBOUNDED. adj.
1. Infinite; interminable.
Long were to tell what I have done;
I voyag'd the unreal, vast, unboudded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.
The wide, th' unboudded prospect lies before me;
But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it. Addison.
2. Unlimited; unrestrained.
He was a man
Of an unboudded stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes. Shakespeare.
He had given his curiosity its full, unboudded range, and ex-
am'd not only in contemplation, but by sensitive experiment,
whatever could be good for the sons of men. Decay of Piety.

UNBOUNDEDLY. adv. Without bounds; without limits.
So unbouddedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too. Government of the Tongue.

UNBOUNDEDNESS. n. f. Exemption from limits.
Finitude, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinitude, the unbouddedness of these degrees of properties. Cheyne.

UNBOUNDED. adj. Not bent.
He knits his brow, and frowns an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff, unbowed knee,
Disclaiming duty that to us belongs. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

U N B

TO UNBOWEL. v. n. To exenterate; to eviscerate.
In this chapter I'll unbowel the state of the question. Hakerwill.
It is now become a new species of divinity, to branch out with fond distinctions our holy faith, which the pious simplicity of the first christians received to practice; not to read upon as an anatomy, unbowel and dissect to try experiments. Decay of Piety.

TO UNBRA'CE. v. a.
1. To loose; to relax.
With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight embolling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen, b. 2. c. 4. st. 9.
Somewhat of mournful fure my ears does wound;
Drums unbraced, with soldiers broken cries. Dryden.
Nought shall the paltry and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.
Waiting years, that wither human race,
Exhaust thy spirits, and thy arms unbrace. Pope's Iliad.

2. To make the clothes loose.
Is it phytical,
To walk unbrac'd, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd;
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose. Shakefp.

UNBREATHED. v. a. Not exercised.
They now have toil'd their unbreath'd memories,
With this same play against our nuptials. Shakefp.

UNBREATHING. adj. Unanimated.
They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Shakefp.

UNBRED. adj.
1. Not instructed in civility; ill educated.
Unbred minds must be a little sent abroad. Gov. of Tongue.
Children learn from unbred or debauched servants, un-towardly tricks. Locke on Education.
Sure never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve's Way of the World.
2. Not taught.
A warrior dame,
Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd. Dryden.

UNBRED. adj. Having no breeches.
Looking on my boy's face, methoughts I did recoil Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbred'd,
In my green velvet coat. Shakespeare's Winter Tale.

UNBRI'ED. adj. Not influenced by money or gifts; not hired.
The soul gave all;
Unbri'd it gave; or, if a bribe appear,
No less than heav'n. Dryden.
To succour the distress'd;
Unbri'd by love; unterrify'd by threats. A. Phillips.

UNBRI'DLED. adj. Licentious; not restrained.
This is not well, rash and unbri'dled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king. Shakefp.
We have considered religious zeal, which transgresses in unbri'dled excess. Spratt's Sermons.

TO WHAT LICENCE
Dares thy unbri'dled boldness run itself? B. Johnson.

UNBROKE. adj. [from break.]
1. Not violated.
God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me;
God keep all vows unbroke, are made to thee. Shakefp.
Some married persons, even in their marriage, do please God, by preserving their faith unbroke. Taylor.
He first broke peace in heav'n, and faith, till then Unbroke. Milton.

2. Not subdued; not weakened.
From his seat the Pylion prince arose;
Two centuries already he fulfill'd;
And now began the third, unbroke yet. Dryden.
How broad his shoulders spread! by age unbroke! Pope.

3. Not tamed.
A lonely cow,
Unworn with yokes, unbroke to the plow. Addison.

UNBROTHERLIKE. adj. Ill suited with the character of a UNBROTHERLY. adj. brother.
Victor's unbrottherlike heat towards the eastern churches, fomented that difference about Easter into a schism. Decay of Piety.

UNBRUISED. adj. Not bruised; not hurt.
On Dardan plains,
The fresh, and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions. Shakefp.
Thou't years upon thee, and thou art too full
Of the war's furtives, to go rove with one That's yet unbruised. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye;
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth, with unfust brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shakefp.

UNC

To UNBUCKLE. v. a. To loose from buckles.
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms; sitting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakep. Coriolanus.
He that unbuckles this, till we do please
To doff't for our purpose, shall hear a storm. Shakep.
His flarry helm unbuckled, shew'd him prime In manhood, where youth ended. Milton's Par. Lost.
All unbuckling the rich mail they wore,
Laid their bright arms along the fable shore. Pope.
To UNBUILD. v. a. To raze; to destroy.
This is the way to kindle, not to quench;
T' unbuild the city, and to lay all flat. Shakep.
What will they then but unbuild
His living temples, built by faith to stand;
Their own faith, not another's? Milton's Par. Lost.
UNBUILT. adj. Not yet erected.
Built walls you shun, unbuilt you see. Dryden.
UNBURIED. adj. Not interred; not honoured with the rites of funeral.
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx? Shakep.
The moss which growth upon the skull of a dead man unburied, will staunch blood potently. Bacon.
The hardest ingredient to come by, is the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburied. Bacon.
Him double cares attend,
For his unburied foldiers, and his friend. Dryden.
Breathless he lies; and his unburied ghost,
Depriv'd of funeral rites, pollutes your host. Dryden.
The wand'ring ghosts
Of king's unburied on the walled coasts. Pope's Statius.
UNBURIED. adj.
1. Not confind; not walled; not injured by fire.
Creon denies the rites of funeral fires to those,
Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his foes;
Unburied, unburied, on a heap they lie. Dryden.
2. Not heated with fire.
Burnt wine is more hard and astringent, than wine un-burnt. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 898.
UNBURNING. adj. Not consuming by heat.
What we have said of the unburning fire called light, streaming from the flame of a candle, may easily be applied to all other light deprived of sensible heat. Digby.
To UNBURN. v. a.
1. To rid of a load.
We'll shake all cares and business from our age, Conferring them on younger strengths; while we Unburn'd crawl tow'rd death. Shakep. K. Lear.
2. To throw off.
Sharp Buckingham unburns with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart. Shakep.
3. To disclose what lies heavy on the mind.
From your love I have a warranty
T' unburn all my plots and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe. Shakep.
To UNBUTTON. v. a. To loose any thing buttoned.
Thou art fat-witted with drinking old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper. Shakep. Hen. IV.
Many catch cold on the breast, by leaving their doublets unbuttoned. Harvey on Consumption.
His silk waistcoat was unbuttoned in several places. Addison.
UNCALCINED. adj. Free from calcination.
A saline substance, subtler than sal ammoniac, carried up with it, uncalcined gold in the form of subtle exhalations.
UNCALLED. adj. Not summoned; not sent for; not demanded.
Basilus had servants, who, though they came not uncalled, yet at call were ready. Sidney.
He, bolder now, uncall'd before her stood. Milton.
Beside the struggling boughs, and heard the groan,
Then reach'd her midwife hand to speed the throes. Dryden.
To UNCALM. adj. To disturb.
What strange disquiet has uncalm'd your breast,
Inhuman fair, to rob the dead of rest? Dryden.
UNCANCELLED. adj. Not erased; not abrogated.
I only mourn my yet uncancel'd score; Dryden.
You put me past the pow'r of paying more. Dryden.
UNCANONICAL. adj. Not agreeable to the canons.
UNCAPABLE. adj. [incapable, Fr. incapax, Lat.] Not capable;
not susceptible.
Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch,
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy. Shakep. Mer. of Venice.
He who believes himself incapable of pardon, goes on without any care of reforming. Hammond.
This, whilst they are under the deceit of it, makes them incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous

UNC

lous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.
UNCARED for. adj. Not regarded; not attended to.
Their kings, to better their worldly estate, left their own,
and their people's ghostly condition uncared for. Locke.
UNCA'RNATE. adj. Not fleshly.
Not need we be afraid to ascribe that to the incarnate son, which sometimes is attributed unto the incarnate father. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To UNCA'RNATE. v. a.
1. To disengage from any covering.
See Pompey is uncaring for the combat. Shakep.
Thou shalt be matter, Tranio, in my stead.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so: Tranio, at once Uncare thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak. Shakep.
Partly by his voice, and partly by his ears, was discover'd; and consequently uncared, well laughed at, and well cutgall'd. L'Estrange.
Uncare me, and do with me what you please. Addison.
2. To flay.
All men him uncared 'gan deride. Hubbard's Tale.
UNCA'UGHT. adj. Not yet caught.
Let him fly far;
Not in this land shall he remain uncared,
And sound dispatch'd. Shakep. K. Lear.
His bosom glows with treasures yet uncared. Gay.
UNCA'USED. adj. Having no precedent cause.
UNCA'UTIONS. adj. Not wary; heedless.
Unforeseen, they say, is unprepared:
Uncautious Arcite thought himself alone. Dryden.
UNCELEBRATED. adj. Not solemnized.
Thus was the first day, ev'n and morn;
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial choirs. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii. l. 253.
UNCE'NSURED. adj. Exempt from publick reproach.
How difficult must it be for any ruler to live unce'nsured, where every one of the community is thus qualified for modelling the constitution! Addison's Freeholder.
Fear most to tax an honourable fool,
Whose right it is unce'nsured to be dull.
To be unce'nsured, and to be obscure, is the same thing. Pope's Letters.
UNCERTAIN. adj. [uncertain, Fr. incertus, Lat.]
1. Doubtful; not certainly known.
That sacred pile, so vast, so high,
That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky,
Uncertain seems; and may be thought a proud Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud. Denham.
2. Doubtful; not having certain knowledge.
Man, without the protection of a superior being, is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.
Condemned on Caucasus to lie,
Still to be dying, not to die;
With certain pain, uncertain of relief,
True emblem of a wretched lover's grief. Graville.
3. Not sure in the consequence.
I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glais:
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! Shakespeare's Richard III.
Africanus young, and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim:
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden.
In the bright air the fauchion shone,
Or whistling flings dismiss'd th' uncertain stone. Gay.
The search of our future being, is but a needless, anxious,
and uncertain haste to be knowing, sooner than we can, what, without all this solicitude, we shall know a little later. Pope.
4. Unsettled; unregular.
As the form of our publick service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seem'd best. Hooker.
UNCERTAINED. adj. Made uncertain. A word not used.
The diversity of seasons are not so uncertain by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Radcliff.
UNCERTAINTY. adv. Not surely; not certainly.
They that are past all hope of good, are past
All fear of ill: and yet if he be dead,
Speak softly, or uncertainly. Denham's Say's.
Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which to uncertainly must come:
When what was brought to far, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home.
Names must be of very unsteady meaning, if the ideas be referred to standards without us, that cannot be known at all, or but very imperfectly and uncertainly. Locke.

UNCERTAINTY. n. f.
1. Dubiousness; want of knowledge.
All great concerns must delays endure;
Rashness and haste make all things unsecure;
And if uncertain thy pretensions be,
Stay till fit time wear out uncertainty. Denham.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
Here then remain with you uncertainty;
Let ev'ry feeble rumour shake your hearts. Shakep.
That which makes doubtfulness and uncertainty in the fignification of some, more than other words, is the difference of ideas they stand for. Locke.
2. Contingency; want of certainty.
God's omniscience is a light shining into every dark corner, steadfastly grasping the greatest and most slippery uncertainties. South's Sermons.
3. Something unknown.
Our shepherd's care is every man's care, that quits a moral certainty for an uncertainty, and leaps from the honest business he was brought up to, into a trade he has no skill in. L'Estrange.
To UNCHA'IN. v. a. To free from chains.
Minerva thus to Perseus lent her shield,
Secure of conquest, lent him to the field:
The hero acted what the queen ordain'd;
So was his fame complete, and Andromeda unchain'd. Prior.
UNCHA'NGEABLE. adj. Immutable; not subject to variation.
If the end for which a law provideth, be perpetually necessary; and the way whereby it provideth perpetually also most apt, no doubt but that every such law ought for ever to remain unchangeable. Hooker, b. iii. §. 10.
UNCHA'NGED. adj.
1. Not altered.
When our fortunes are violently changed, our spirits are unchanged. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
More safe I sing with mortal voice; unchanged
To hoarse, or mute. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. Not alterable.
Dismiss thy fear,
And heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear:
More powerful gods have torn thee from my side. Dryden.
Honour unchang'd, a principle profess,
Fixt to one side, but mod'rate to the rest. Pope.
UNCHA'NGEABLENESS. n. f. Immutability.
This unchangeableness of colour I am now to describe. Newt.
UNCHA'NGEABLY. adv. Immutably; without change.
All truth is unchangeably the same; that proposition, which is true at any time, being so for ever. South.
Her first order, disposition, frame,
Must then subsist unchangeably the same. Blackmore.
UNCHA'NGING. adj. Suffering no alteration.
But that thy face is, vize-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee blush. Shakep.
True expression, like th' unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whatever it shines upon:
It gilds all objects, but it alters none. Pope.
To UNCHA'NGE. v. a. To retract an accusation.
Even his mother shall unchange the practice,
And call it accident. Shakep. Hamlet.
UNCHA'RITABLE. adj. Contrary to charity; contrary to the universal love prescribed by Christianity.
All the rich mines of learning ranfack'd are
To furnish ammunition for this war;
Uncharitable zeal our reason whets,
And double edges on our passion sets. Denham.
This fills the minds of weak men with uncharitable interpretations of those actions of which they are not competent judges. Addison's Freeholder, N. 37.
UNCHA'RITABLENESS. n. f. Want of charity.
The penitence of the criminal may have number'd him among the saints, when our untractable uncharitableness may lend us to unquenchable flames. Govern. of the Tongue.
Heaven and hell are the proper regions of mercy and un-charitableness. Asterbury.
UNCHA'RITABLY. adv. In a manner contrary to charity.
I did not mean the cutting off all that nation with the sword; which, far be it from me that I should ever think to desperately, or with so uncharitably. Spenser.
Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And therefore my hopes by you are butcher'd. Shakep.
Men, imprudently and uncharitably often, employ their zeal for perils. Sprat.
UNCHA'RV. adj. Not wary; not cautious.
I've said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid my honour too uncharily out. Shakep.
UNCHA'STE. adj. Lewd; libidinous; not continent; not chaste; not pure.

UNC

One, that in divers places I had heard before blazed, as the most impudently unchaste woman of all Asia. Sidney.
In my master's garments,
Which he infore'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purpose, to violate. Shakep. Cymbeline.
My lady's honour. Shakep.
He hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition. Shakep.
Whoever is unchaste, cannot reverence himself; and the reverence of a man's self is, next religion, the chiefest bridle of all vices. Bacon.
Lust, by unchaste looks,
Lets in defilement to the inward parts.
If he thinks to be separated by reason of her husband's unchaste life, then the man will be incurably ruined. Taylor.
UNCHASTITY. n. f. Lewdness; incontinence.
That generation was more particularly addicted to intemperance, sensuality, and unchastity. Woodward.
When the sun is among the horned signs, he may produce such a spirit of unchastity, as is dangerous to the honour of your worships families. Arbutnot.
UNCHASTFULNESS. n. f. Melancholy; gloominess of temper.
Many, by a natural unchastfulness of heart, love to indulge this uncomfortable way of life. Addison's Spectator.
UNCHE'CKED. adj. Unrestrained; not fluctuated.
What news on the Ryalto?
—Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd, that Anthonio hath a ship of rich lading wreck'd. Shakep. Mer. of Venice.
Apt the mind, or fancy, is to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end. Milton.
Thee on the wing thy uncheck'd vigour bore,
To wanton freely, or securely soar. Smith to J. Phillips.
UNCHE'WED. adj. Not masticated.
He fills his famish'd maw, his mouth runs o'er
With unchew'd morsels, while he churns the gore. Dryden.
To UNCH'L'D. v. a. To deprive of children.
He hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakep.
UNCHRISTIAN. adj.
1. Contrary to the laws of christianity.
It's uncharitable, unchristian, and inhuman, to pass a peremptory sentence of condemnation upon a try'd friend, where there is any room left for a more favourable judgment. L'Estrange.
These unchristian filthers of men, are fatally caught in their own nets. South.
I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis, were it not unchristian. Norris.
2. Unconverted; infidel.
Whereupon grew a question, whether a christian soldier might herein do as the unchristian did, and wear as they wore. Hooker.
UNCHRISTIANNESS. adj. Contrary to christianity.
The unchristianness of those denials might arise from a displeasure to see me prefer my own divines before their ministers. K. Charles.
UNCIRCUMCISED. adj. Not circumcised; not a Jew.
Th' uncircumcised smil'd grimly with disdain. Cowley.
UNCIRCUMCISION. n. f. Omission of circumcision.
God, that gives the law that a Jew shall be circumcised, thereby constitutes uncircumcision an obliquity; which, had he not given that law, had never been such. Hammond.
UNCIRCUMSCRIBED. adj. Unbounded; unlimited.
Though I, uncircumscib'd myself, retire,
And put not forth my goodness. Milton's Par. Lost.
An arbitrary prince is the master of a non-resisting pec-ple; for where the power is uncircumscibed, the obedience ought to be unlimited. Addison.
The sovereign was flattered by a set of men into a persuasion, that the regal authority was unlimited and uncircumscib'd. Addison's Freeholder, N. 2.
UNCIRCUMSPECT. adj. Not cautious; not vigilant.
Their uncircumspect simplicity had been used, especially in matters of religion. Hayward.
UNCIRCUMSTANTIAL. adj. Unimportant. A bad word.
The like particulars, although they seem unimportant, are oft set down in holy scripture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNCIVIL. adj. [incivil, Fr. incivilis, Lat.] Unpolite; not agreeable to rules of elegance, or complaisance.
Your undutiful, uncivil, and uncharitable dealing in this your book, hath detected you. Whitgift.
They love me well, yet I have much to do,
To keep me from uncivil outrages. Shakep.
My friends are so unreasonable, that they would have me be uncivil to him. Spectator, N. 475.
UNCIVILLY. adv. Unpolitely; not complaisantly.
Somewhat in it he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately, as before he had done uncivilly. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNCIVILIZED. adj.
1. Not reclaimed from barbarity.

UNC

But we, brave Britons, foreign laws despis'd,
And kept unconquer'd, and unconquered:
Fierce for the liberties of wit, and bold,
We still defy'd the Romans, as of old.

2. Coarse; indecent.

Several, who have been polished in France, make use of the most coarse, unpolished words in our language. Addison.

UNCLARIFIED. adj. Not purified.

One ounce of whey unpurified; one ounce of oil of vitriol, make no apparent alteration. Bacon's Phys. Remarks.

To UNCLASP. v. a. To open what is shut with clasps.

Thou know'st no less, but all: I have unclasp'd Shakef.
To thee the book, ev'n of my secret soul.
Prayer can unclasp the girdles of the north, saying to a mountain of ice, be thou removed hence, and cast into the sea. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

UNCLASSICK. Not classick.

Angel of dulness, sent to scatter round
Her magic charms o'er all unclassick ground. Pope.

UNCLE. n. f. [uncle, Fr.] The father's or mother's brother.

Hamlet punishes his uncle rather for his own death, than the murder of his father. Shakefpeare's Illustrat.

UNCLEAN. n. f.

1. Foul; dirty; filthy.

Charon,
A forl'd god: down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

Priests are patterns for the rest;
The gold of heav'n, who bear the God impress'd:
But when the precious coin is kept unclean,
The sov'reign's image is no longer seen.
If they be foul, on whom the people trust,
Well may the safer brafs contract a rust. Dryden.

2. Not purified by ritual practices.

3. Foul with sin.

Besides how vile, contemptible, ridiculous,
What act more execrably unclean, profane? Milton.

What agonies must he endure? What difficulties overcome, before he can cleanse himself from the pollutions of sin, and be a fit inhabitant of that holy place, where no unclean thing shall enter? Rogers's Sermons.

4. Lewd; unchaste.

Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairy-like too, pinch the unclean knight,
And ask him, why that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread,
In shape profane. Shakef. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Some tree, whose broad, smooth leaves together fow'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new comers, flame,
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

UNCLEANLINESS. n. f. Want of cleanliness.

This profane liberty and uncleanliness, the archbishop resolv'd to reform. Clarendon.

UNCLEANLY. adj.

1. Foul; filthy; nasty.

Civet is of a baser birth than tar;
The very uncleanly flux of a cat. Shakefpeare.

2. Indecent; unchaste.

'Tis pity that these harmonious writers have ever indulg'd any thing uncleanly or impure to defile their paper. Watts.

UNCLEANNESS. n. f.

1. Lewdness; incontinence.

In St. Giles's I understood that most of the vilest and most miserable houses of uncleanliness were. Grant's Bills of Mortality.

2. Want of cleanliness; nastiness.

Be not curious nor careless in your habit; be not troublesome to thyself, or to others, by unhandfomeness, or un- cleanliness. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

3. Sin; wickedness.

I will save you from all your uncleanliness. Ez. xxxvi. 29.

4. Want of ritual purity.

UNCLEANSED. adj. Not cleansed.

Pond earth is a good compost, if the pond have been long uncleansed: so the water be not too hungry. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To UNCLEW. v. a. [from clew.] To undo.

If I should pay you for't as 'tis extoll'd,
It would unclew me quite. Shakef. Timon of Athens.

To UNCLEW. v. a. To open the closed hand.

The hero to his enterprize recalls;
His fist unclew'd, and the weapon falls. Garth.

As soon as there began a distinction between clipped and unclew'd money, bullion arose. Locke.

To UNCLEW. v. a. To strip; to make naked.

The boughs and branches are never unclew'd and left naked. Raigh's Hist. of the World.

Poor orphans minds are left as unclew'd and naked altogether, as their bodies. Atterbury.

Cover the couch over with thick woollen clothes, the warmth whereof will make it come presently; which once perceived, forthwith unclew it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

UNC

To a distinct knowledge of things, we must unclash them of all these mixtures, that we may contemplate them naked, and in their own nature. Watts's Logic.

To UNCLASH. v. a.

1. To disencumber; to exonerate.

Could I meet 'em
But once a day, it would unclash my heart
Of what lies heavy to't.

2. To set at liberty.

Then air, because unclash'd in empty space,
Flies after fire, and claims the second place. Dryden.

To UNCLASHTER. v. n. To set at large.

Why did I not, unclash'ter'd from the womb,
Take my next lodging in a tomb? Norri.

To UNCLOSE. v. a. To open.

Soon as thy letters trembling I unclose,
That well-known name awakens all my woes. Pope.

UNCLOSED. adj. Not separated by inclosures.

The king's army would, through those unclosed parts, have done them little harm.

UNCLOSED. adj. Free from clouds; clear from obscurity;
not darkened.

The father unfolding bright
Tow'rd the right hand his glory on the fort Blaz'd forth unclosed deity. Milton's Par. Lsg.

True virtues, with unclosed light,
All great, all royal, shine divinely bright.
Blest with temper, whose unclosed ray,
Can make to-morrow cheerful as to-day. Reformant.

UNCLOSEDNESS. n. f. Openness; freedom from gloom.

The love I would persuade, makes nothing more conducive to it, than the greatest unclosedness of the eye, and the perfectest illustration of the object; which is such, that the clearest reason is the most advantageous light it can desire to be seen by. Boyle.

UNCLOSED. adj. Free from a cloud.

Now night in silent state begins to rise,
And twinkling orbs bestrow th' unclosed skies;
Her borrow'd lustre growing Cynthia lends. Gay.

To UNCLUTCH. v. a. To open.

If the terrors of the Lord could not melt his bowels, unclutch his gripping hand, or disfigure him of his prey; yet sure it must discourage him from grasping of heaven too. Decay of Piety.

To UNCLUTCH. v. a. To pull the cap off.

Yonder are two apple-women scolding, and just ready to unclutch one another. Arbutnot and Pope.

wrapped one part upon another.

The spiral air-vessels are like threads of cobweb, a little uncoiled. Derham's Physico-Theology.

UNCOILED. adj. Not coiled.

While thou liv'st, Kate, take a fellow of plain, uncoiled constancy. Shakefpeare's Hen. V.

An ounce of coined standard silver, must be of equal value to an ounce of uncoiled standard silver. Locke.

UNCOLLECTED. adj. Not collected; not recollected.

Aham'd, confus'd, I started from my bed,
And to my soul yet uncollected said;
Into thyself, fond Solomon! return;
Reflect again, and thou again shalt mourn. Prior.

UNCOLOURED. adj. Not stained with any colour, or die.

Out of things uncoloured and transparent, we can represent unto you all several colours. Bacon.

Whether to deck with clouds the uncolour'd sky,
Or wet the thirsty earth with falling show'rs;
Rising, or falling, still advance his praise. Milton.

UNCOMBED. adj. Not parted or adjusted by the comb.

They might perceive his head
To be unmatted, and curled, uncombed hairs, Upstarting stiff. Priety Queen, b. 1. c. 9. st. 22.

Their locks are beds of uncombed snakes, that wind
About their shady brows in wanton rings. Cragheu.

Thy locks uncombed, like a rough wood appear. Dryden.

UNCOMFORTABLE. adj. Inaccessible; unattainable. A low, corrupt word.

UNCOMFORTABLE. n. f. Want of grace; want of beauty.

The ruined churches are so unhandfomely patched, and thatched, that men do even shun the places, for the uncom- fortableness thereof. Spenser's Ireland.

He prais'd women's modesty, and gave orderly, well-behaved reproof to all uncomforness. Shakef.

Those arches which the Tuscan writers call di terro, and di quarto acuto, because they always concur in an acute angle, both for the natural imbecility of the angle itself, and likewise for their very uncomforness, ought to be exiled from judicious eyes. Watson's Architecture.

Forgetting that duty of modest concealment which they owed to the father of their country, in case they had discovered any real uncomforness. K. Charles.

The beauty or uncomforness in good and ill breedings will make deeper impressions on them, in the examples of others, than from any rules. Locke.

UNCOMELY. adj. Not comely; wanting grace.

Though he thought iniquitiveness an uncomely guest, he could not but ask who she was. Sidney.

Neither is the same accounted an uncomely manner of riding: for great warriors say, they never saw a more comely man than the Irishman, nor that cometh on more bravely in his charge. Spenser's Ireland.

Many, who troubled them most in their counsels, durst not go thither, for fear of uncomely affronts. Clarendon.

Uncomely courage, unbefitting skill. Thomson's Autumn.

UNCOMFORTABLE. adj.

1. Affording no comfort; gloomy; dismal; miserable.

He much complaineth of his own uncomfortable exile, wherein he sustained many most grievous indignities, and endured the want of sundry, both pleasures and honours, before enjoyed. Hooker.

Christmas is in the most dead, uncomfortable time of the year, when the poor people would suffer very much, if they had not good cheer to support them. Addison.

Ours is melancholy and uncomfortable portion here below!
A place, where not a day passes, but we eat our bread with sorrow and cares: the present troubles us, the future amazes;
and even the past fills us with grief and anguish. Wake.

The sun ne'er views th' uncomfortable seats,
When radiant he advances or retreats. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Receiving no comfort; melancholy.

UNCOMFORTABLENESS. n. f. Want of cheerfulness.

The want of full dispositions to the holy sacrament, may occasion this uncomfortableness. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

UNCOMFORTABLY. adv. Without cheerfulness.

UNCOMMANDED. adj. Not commanded.

It is easy to see what judgment is to be pass'd upon all those afflicted, uncommanded, absurd austerities of the Romish profession. South.

UNCOMMON. adj. Not frequent; not often found or known.

Some of them are uncommon, but such as the reader must assent to, when he sees them explained. Addison.

UNCOMMONLY. adv. Not frequently; to an uncommon degree.

UNCOMMONNESS. n. f. Infrequency.

Our admiration of the antiquities about Naples and Rome, does not so much arise out of their greatness as uncom-
monness. Addison.

UNCOMPACT. adj. Not compact; not closely cohering.

These rivers were not streams of running matter; for how could a liquid, that lay hardening by degrees, settle in such a furrowed, uncompact surface? Addison.

UNCOMMUNICATED. adj. Not communicated.

There is no such mutual infusion as really causeth the same natural operations or properties to be made common unto both substances; but whatsoever is natural to deity, the same remaineth in Christ uncommunicated unto his manhood; and whatsoever natural to manhood, his deity thereof is uncapable. Hooker.

UNCOMPANIED. adj. Having no companion.

Hence the fled, uncompained, unthought. Fairfax.

UNCOMPASSIONATE. adj. Having no pity.

Neither deep groans, nor silver-fledding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate fire. Shakef.

Hero and Leander were drowned in the uncompassionate furies. Sandys's Journey.

If thou in strength all mortals dost exceed;
In uncompassionate anger do not so. Milton's Agonistes.

UNCOMPELLED. adj. Free from compulsion.

The amorous needle, once joined to the loadstone, would never, uncompelled, forsake the enchanting mineral. Boyle.

Nor, uncompell'd, the dangerous truth betray,
Till twice six times defends the lamp of day. Pope.

UNCOMPLAISANT. adj. Not civil; not obliging.

A natural roughness makes a man uncomplaisant to others, so that he has no deference for their inclinations. Locke.

UNCOMPLEAT. adj. Not perfect; not finished.

Various incidents do not make different fables, but are only the uncompleat and unfinished parts of the same fable. Pope.

UNCOMPOUNDED. adj.

1. Simple; not mixed.

Hardness may be reckoned the property of all uncompounded matter. Newton's Opticks.

Your uncompounded atoms, you Figures in numbers infinite allow;
From which, by various combination, springs
This unconfi'd diversity of things. Blackmore.

2. Simple; not intricate.

The substance of the faith was comprised in that uncom- pounded style, but was afterwards prudently enlarged, for the repelling heretical invaders. Hammond's Fundamentals.

UNCOMPREHENDED. adj. Free from comprehension.

We might be furnished with a reply, by setting down the differing weight of our receiver, when emptied, and when full of uncompreffed air. Boyle.

UNC

UNCOMPREHENSIVE. adj.

1. Unable to comprehend.

2. In Shakefpeare it seems to signify uncomprehensible.

The providence, that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Finds bottom in th' uncomprehens'd deep. Shakef.

UNCONCEIVABLE. adj. Not to be understood; not to be com-prehended by the mind.

In the communication of motion by impulse, we can have no other conception, but of the passing of motion out of one body into another; which is as obscure and unconceivable, as how our minds move or stop our bodies by thought. Locke.

Those atoms wondrous small must be,
Small to an unconceivable degree;
Since though these radiant spoils dispers'd in air,
Do ne'er return, and ne'er the sun repair. Blackmore.

UNCONCEIVABLENESS. n. f. Incomprehensibility.

The unconceivableness of something they find in one, throws men violently into the contrary hypothesis, though altogether as unintelligible. Locke.

UNCONCEIVED. adj. Not thought; not imagined.

Vast is my theme, yet unconceiv'd, and brings Untoward words, scarce loosen'd yet from things. Cretsch.

UNCONCERN. n. n. Negligence; want of interest; freedom from anxiety; freedom from perturbation.

Such things had been charged upon us by the malice of enemies, the want of judgment in friends, and the unconcern of indifferent persons. Swift.

UNCONCERNED. adj.

1. Having no interest.

An idle person is like one that is dead, unconcerned in the changes and necessities of the world. Taylor.

The earth's motion is to be admitted, notwithstanding the seeming contrary evidence of unconcerned senses. Glanville.

It seems a principle in human nature, to incline one way more than another, even in matters where we are wholly unconcerned. Swift.

2. Not anxious; not disturbed; not affected.

See the morn,
All unconcern'd with our unrest, begins
Her rosy progress smiling. Milton's Par. Lsg.

You call'd me into all your joys, and gave me
An equal share; and in this depth of misery
Can I be unconcern'd? Denham's Sephy.

The virgin from the ground
Upstart fresh, already clos'd the wound;
And unconcern'd for all the felt before,
Precipitates her flight along the shore. Dryden.

Happy mortals, unconcern'd for more,
Confin'd their wishes to their native shore. Dryden.

We shall be easy and unconcerned at all the accidents of the way, and regard only the event of the journey. Rogers.

UNCONCERNEDLY. adv. Without interest or affection; without anxiety; without perturbation.

Not the most cruel of our conquering foes,
So unconcern'dly can relate our woes,
As not to lend a tear. Denham.

Death was denounc'd, that frightful sound,
Which ev'n the best can hardly bear:
He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcern'dly cast his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the grizzly challenger. Dryden.

Is heaven, with its pleasures for evermore, to be parted with so unconcernedly? Is an exceeding and eternal weight of glory too light in the balance against the hopeless death of the atheist, and utter extinction. Bentley.

UNCONCERNEDNESS. n. f. Freedom from anxiety, or perturbation.

No man, having done a kindness to another, would think himself justly dealt with, in a total neglect, and unconcerned- ness of the person who had received that kindness. South.

UNCONCERNING. adj. Not interesting; not affecting; not belonging to one.

Things impossible in their nature, or unconcerning to us, cannot beget it. Decay of Piety.

The science of medals, which is charged with so many unconcerning parts of knowledge, and built on such mean materials, appears ridiculous to those that have not examined it. Addison on Antient Medals.

UNCONCERNMENT. n. f. The state of having no share.

Being privileged by an happy unconcernment in those legal murders, you may take a sweeter relish of your own innocence. South.

UNCONCERNMENT. adj. Not decisive; inferring no plain or UNCONCERNING. } certain conclusion or consequence.

Our arguments are inevident and unconcluding. Hale.

He makes his understanding only the warehouse of other mens false and unconcluding reasonings, rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.

UNCONCERNINGNESS. n. f. Quality of being unconcluding.

Either

UNC

Either may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccountableness and the unaccountableness of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

UNCOCCED. adj. Not digested; not matured. Boyle.
My swallow cherry-stones, but void them uncollected. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In theology, I put as great a difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and an uncollected, evanid meteor. Glanville.

Did she extend the gloomy clouds on high,
Where all th' amazing fireworks of the sky,
In uncollected seeds fermenting lie. Blackmore.

UNCONDEMNED. adj. Not condemned.
It was a familiar and uncondemned practice amongst the Greeks and Romans, to expose, without pity, their innocent infants. Locke.

UNCONDITIONAL. adj. Absolute; not limited by any terms.
O pals not, Lord! an absolute decree,
Or bind thy sentence unconditional;
But in thy sentence our remorse foresee, Dryden.

And, in that foresight, this thy doom recal.
Our Saviour left a power in his church to absolve men from their sins; but this was not an absolute and unconditional power vested in any, but founded upon repentance, and on the penitent's belief in him alone. Ayliffe's Parergon.

UNCONFINED. adj.
1. Free from restraint.
I wonder at it. Shakespeare.

That shews thou art unconfin'd.
Chaucer has refined on Boccaccio, and has mended the stories he has borrowed: though prose allows more liberty of thought, and the expression is more easy when unconfin'd by numbers. Our countryman carries weight, and yet wins the race at disadvantage. Dryden.

Poets, a race long unconfin'd and free,
Still fond and proud of savage liberty,
Receive'd his laws. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

2. Having no limits; unbounded.
If that which men esteem their happiness, were, like the light, the same sufficient and unconfin'd good, whether ten thousand enjoy the benefit of it, or but one, we should see men's good will and kind endeavours would be as universal. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and human kind. Pope.

UNCONFINABLE. adj. Unbounded.
You rogue! you stand upon your honour! why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep mine honour. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

UNCONFORMED. adj.
1. Not fortified by resolution; not strengthened; raw; weak.
The unexpected speech
The king had made upon the new-raised force,
In th' unconform'd troops, much fear did breed. Daniel.

2. Not strengthened by additional testimony.
He would have resign'd
To him his heav'nly office, not was long
His witness unconform'd. Milton's Par. Regain'd.

3. Not settled in the church by the rite of confirmation.
UNCONFORM. adj. Unlike; dissimilar; not analogous.
Not unconform to other thinning globes. Milton.

UNCONFORMABLE. adj. Inconformant; not conforming.
Unto those general rules, they know we do not defend, that we may hold any thing unconformable. Hooker.

Moral good, is an action conformable to the rule of our duty. Moral evil, is an action unconformable to it, or a neglect to fulfil it. Watts's Logick.

UNCONFORMITY. n. f. Incongruity; inconsistency.
The moral goodness or evil of men's actions, which consist in their conformity or unconformity to right reason, must be eternal, necessary, and unchangeable. South.

UNCONFUSED. adj. Distinct; free from confusion.
It is more distinct and unconfused than the sensitive memory. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

If in having our ideas in the memory ready at hand, confuses quickness of parts; in this of having them unconfused, and being able nicely to distinguish one thing from another, consists the exactness of judgment. Locke.

UNCONFUSEDLY. adv. Without confusion.
Every one finds that he knows, when any idea is in his understanding, and that, when more than one are there, he knows them, distinctly and unconfusedly, from one another. Locke.

UNCONFUTABLE. adj. Irrefragable; not to be convicted of error.
One political argument they boasted of as unconfutable, that from the marriages of ecclesiastics, would ensue poverty in many of the children, and thence a disgrace and burden to the church. Sprat's Sermons.

UNCONGELATED. adj. Not congealed by cold.
By expelling wine, after four months digestion in horfe-dung, unto the extremity of cold, the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit retire, and be found uncongealed in the center. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNCONJUGAL. adj. Not consistent with matrimonial faith; not befitting a wife or husband.
My name
To all posterity may stand defam'd;
With malediction mention'd, and the blot
Of falsehood, most unconjugal tradue'd. Milton's Agonistes.

UNCONNECTED. adj. Not coherent; not joined by proper transitions or dependence of parts; lax; loose; vague.
Those who contemplate only the fragments broken off from any science, dispersed in short, unconnected discourses, can never survey an entire body of truth. Watts.

UNCONNING. adj. Not forbearing penal notice.
To that hideous place not to confin'd,
By rigour unconning; but that oft Leaving my dolorous prison, I enjoy
Large liberty, to round this globe of earth. Milton.

UNCONQUERABLE. adj. Not to be subdued; insuperable; not to be overcome; invincible.
Louis was darting his thunder on the Alps, and causing his enemies to feel the force of his unconquerable arms. Dryden.

Spadillo, first unconquerable lord!
Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board.
UNCONQUERABLY. adv. Invincibly; insuperably. Pope.

The herds of Iphycus, detain'd in wrong;
Wild, furious herds, unconquerably strong. Pope.

UNCONQUERED. adj.
1. Not subdued; not overcome.
O'ercome by passion and misfortune,
And still unconquer'd by my foes, founds ill. Denham.

UNCONQUER'D. adj. Not yet, in that forlorn estate,
His manly courage overcame his fate. Dryden.

2. Insuperable; invincible.
These brothers had a-while served the king of Pontus; and in all his affairs, especially of war, whereunto they were only apt, they had shewed as unconquer'd courage, so rude a faithfulness. Sidney.

What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield,
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin!
Wherewith the freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone,
But rigid looks, and chaste austerity,
And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence,
With sudden adoration and blank awe? Milton.

UNCONQUER'D. adj. Not yet, in that forlorn estate,
His manly courage overcame his fate. Dryden.

UNCONSCIONABLE. adj.
1. Exceeding the limits of any just claim or expectation.
A man may oppose an unconscionable request for an unjustifiable reason. L'Estrange.

2. Forming unreasonable expectations.
You cannot be so unconscionable as to charge me for not subscribing of my name, for that would reflect too grossly upon your own party, who never dare it. Dryden.

3. Enormous; vast. A low word.
His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n,
Stalking with less unconscionable strides,
And lower looks, but in a sultry chafe. Milton's Agonistes.

4. Not guided or influenced by conscience.
How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable? hardly ever did any man of no conscience continue a man of any credit long. South.

UNCONSCIONABLENESS. n. f. Unreasonableness of hope or claim.
UNCONSCIONABLY. adv. Unreasonably.
Indeed 'tis pity you should miss
Th' arrears of all your services;
And for th' eternal obligation,
Y' have laid upon th' ungrateful nation,
Be us'd to unconscionably hard,
As not to find a just reward. Hudibras, p. ii. cont. 3.

UNCONSCIOUS. adj. Having no mental perception.
Unconscious causes only still impart
Their utmost skill, their utmost power exert;
Those which can freely chuse, discern, and know,
Can more or less of art and care bestow. Blackmore.

UNCONSCIOUSLY. adv. Unconsciously.
A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

UNCONSECRATED. adj. Not sacred; not dedicated; not devoted.
The sin of Israel had even unconsecrated and profaned that sacred edifice, and robbed it of its only defence. South.

UNCONSENTED. adj. Not yielded.
We should extend it even to the weaknesses of our nature, to our proneness to evil: for however these, unconscionable will not be imputed to us, yet are they matter of sorrow. Wake's Preparation for Death.

UNCONSIDERED. adj. Not considered; not attended to.
Love yourself, and in that love,
Not unconconsidered leave your honour. Shakespeare.

UNC

It will not be unconconsidered, that we find no open track in this labyrinth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNCONSONANT. adj. Incongruous; unfit; inconsistent.
It seemeth a thing unconsonant, that the world should honour any other as the Saviour, but him whom it honoureth as the creator of the world. Hooker.

UNCONSTANT. adj. [inconstant, Fr. inconstant, Lat.] Fickle; not steady; changeable; mutable.
More unconstant than the wind; who woos
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the north;
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping south. Shakespeare.

UNCONSTRAINED. adj. Free from compulsion.
Do change their course as several winds arise. May's Vigil.

Will you, with free and unconstrained soul,
Give me your daughter? Shakespeare.

These be the miseries which our first parents brought upon all mankind, unto whom God, in his creation, gave a free and unconstrained will. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Made for his use, yet he has form'd us so,
We unconstrain'd, what he commands us, do. Dryden.

His highness is return'd.
And unconstrain'd? But with what change
Of countenance did he receive the message? Denham.

UNCONSTRAINEDLY. adv. Without force suffered.
Such a patron has frankly, generously, and unconstrainedly relieved me. South's Sermons.

UNCONSTRAINED. n. f. Freedom from constraint; ease.
Mr. Dryden writ more like a scholar, and though the greatest master of poetry, he wanted that easiness, that air of freedom and unconstraint, which is more sensibly to be perceived, than described. Pelton on the Classics.

UNCONSTRUCTIVE. adj. [inconstructive, Lat.] Heady; rash; imprudent.
It was the fair Zelmane, Plexirtus's daughter, whom unconstructive affection, unfortunately born to meadows, had made borrow so much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent rayments. Sidney.

UNCONSTRUCTED. adj. Certain; past dispute.
UNCONSTRUCTED. adj. Not wasted; not destroyed by any wasting power.

That comes to all, but torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge fed
With ever-burning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsum'd, is an idea that always accompanies our complex ideas, signified by the word gold. Locke.

UNCONSUMMATE. adj. Not consummated.
Acron came to the fight,
Who left his spouse betroth'd, and unconsummated night. Dryden.

UNCONSUMED. adj. Not depist.
Which of the peers
Have unconsum'd gone by him, or at least Stood not neglected? Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

UNCONTENTED. adj. Not contented; not satisfied.
To lead this unconcontented gift away. Dryden.

UNCONTENTINGNESS. n. f. Want of power to satisfy.
The decreed unconcontentingness of all other goods, is richly repaired by its being but an aptness to prove a rife to our love's settling in God. Boyle.

UNCONTENTABLE. adj. Indisputable; not controvertible.
Where is the man that has unconcontentable evidence of the truth of all that he holds, or of the fallhood of all he condemns. Locke.

UNCONTENTED. adj. Not disputed; evident.
'Tis by experience unconcontented found,
Bodies orbicular, when whirling round,
Still shake off all things on their surface plac'd. Blackmore.

UNCONTENTED. adj. Not religiously penitent.
The priest, by absolving an unconcontented sinner, cannot make him contrite. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

UNCONTROVERTED. adj. Not disputed; not liable to debate.
One reason of the unconcontroverted certainty of mathematical science is, because 'tis built upon clear and settled significations of names. Glanville.

UNCONTROVERSIALLY. adv.
1. Refutably; powerful beyond opposition.
Gaza mourns,
And all that band them to resist
His unconquerable intent. Milton.

2. Indisputable; irrefragable.
The pension was granted, by reason of the king of England's unconquerable title to England. Hayward.

UNCONTRADICTORY. adj. Not contradictory.
This makes appear the error of those, who think it an uncontradictory maxim, that power is always faster lodged in many hands, than in one; those many are as capable of enslaving as a single person. Swift.

UNC

UNCONTRADICTORY. adv.
1. Without possibility of opposition.
2. Without danger of refutation.

Since this light was to rest within them, and the judgment of it wholly to remain in themselves, they might safely and uncontradictorily pretend it greater or less. South.

UNCONTRADICTORY. adj. Fickle; not steady; changeable; mutable.
More unconstant than the wind; who woos
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the north;
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping south. Shakespeare.

UNCONTRADICTORY. adv.
1. Unrefuted; unopposed; not to be overruled.
Should I try the uncontrouled worth
Of this pure cause, 'twould kindle my rap'd spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,
Extends thy uncontrouled and boundless reign. Dryden.

The British navy, uncontrouled,
Shall wave her double cross 't' extremeest clime Terrific, and return with odorous spoils. Phillips.

2. Not convinced; not refuted.
That Julius Cæsar was fo born, is an uncontrouled report. Hayward.

UNCONTRADICTORY. adv. Without controul; without opposition.
Mankind avert killing, and being killed; but when the phantasm honour has once possessed the mind, no reluctance of humanity is able to make head against it; but it commands uncontrouledly. Decay of Piety.

UNCONVERSABLE. adj. Not suitable to conversation; not social.
Faith and devotion are traduced and ridiculed, as morose, unconversable qualities. Rogers's Sermons.

UNCONVERTED. adj. Not persuaded of the truth of christianity.
Salvation belongeth unto none, but such as call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ: which nations, as yet unconverted, neither do, nor possibly can do, till they believe. Hooker.

The unconverted heathens, who were prelied by the many authorities that confirmed our Saviour's miracles, accounted for them after the same manner. Addison on the Christ. Relig.

The apostle reminds the Ephesians of the guilt and misery of their former unconverted estate, when aliens from the commonwealth of Israel. Rogers's Sermons.

UNCONVINCED. adj. Not convinced.
A way not to be introduced into the seminaries of those, who are to propagate religion, or philosophy, amongst the ignorant and unconvinced. Locke.

UNCONVINCED. v. a. To loose a thing bound with cords.
I have written this too hastily and too loosely: it comes out from the first draught, and unconvinced. Dryden.

UNCONVICT. adj. Honest; upright; not tainted with wickedness; not influenced by iniquitous interests.
The pleasures of sin, and this world's vanities, are censured with unconvict judgment. Hooker.

Men alledge they can ne'er can find
Those beauties in a female mind,
Which raise a flame that will endure,
For ever uncorrupt and pure. Swift.

UNCORRUPTED. adj. Not vitiated; not depraved.
Such a hero never springs,
But from the uncorrupted blood of kings. Reformations.

Man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted reason knew,
And with a native bent did good pursue. Dryden.

Nothing is more valuable than the records of antiquity: I wish we had more of them, and more uncorrupted. Locke.

UNCORRUPTNESS. n. f. Integrity; uprightness.
In doctrine, then uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity. Tit. ii. 7.

TO UNCOVER. v. a.
1. To divest of a covering.
After you are up, uncover your bed, and open the curtains to air it. Harvey.

Seeing an object several millions of leagues, the very instant it is uncovered, may be shewn to be a mistake in matter of fact. Locke.

2. To deprive of cloaths.
Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the skies. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

3. To strip of the roof.
Porches and schools,
Uncover'd, and with scaffolds cumber'd stood. Prior.

4. To shew openly; to strip of a veil, or concealment.
He cover'd; but his robe
Uncover'd more: so rose the Danite strong, Shorn of his strength. Milton's Par. Lost.

There will certainly come some day or other, to uncover every foul of us. Pope's Letters.

5. To bare the head, as in the presence of a superior.
Rather let my head dance on a bloody pole,
Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar groom. Shakespeare.

UNCO'UNSELLABLE. adj. Not to be advised.
It would have been uncounselable to have march'd to any distance, and have left such an enemy at their backs. Clarendon.

UNCO'UNTABLE. adj. Innumerable.
Those uncountable, glorious bodies, were not set in the firmament for no other end than to adorn it. Raleigh.

UNCO'UNTERFEIT. adj. Genuine; not spurious.
True zeal is not any one single affection of the soul, but a strong mixture of many holy affections, filling the heart with all pious intentions; all, not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent. Sprat's Sermon.

To UNCO'UPLE. v. a. To loose dogs from their couples.
Uncouple in the western valley, &c;
Dispatch, I say, and find the forerider. Shaksp.
The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green;
Uncouple here, and let us make a bay. Shaksp.
The land on which they fought, th' appointed place,
In which th' uncoupled hounds began the chase. Dryden.

UNCO'URTEOUS. adj. Uncivil; unpolite.
In behaviour some will say, ever sad, surely sober, and somewhat given to musing, but never uncourteous. Sidney.

UNCO'URTEOUSLY. adv. Uncivily; unpolitely.
Though somewhat merrily, yet uncourteously he railed upon England, objecting extreme beggary, and mere barbarousness unto it. Ajcham's Schoolmaster.

UNCO'URTLINESS. n. f. Unsuitableness of manners to a court; inelegance.
The quakers presented an address, which, notwithstanding the uncourtliness of their phrases, the sense was very honest. Addison.

UNCO'URTLY. adj. Inelegant of manners; uncivil.
The lord treasurer not entering into those refinements of paying the publick money upon private considerations, hath been uncourtly as to stop it. Swift.

UNCO'UTH. adj. [uncūth, Saxon.] Odd; strange; unusual.
A very uncouth sight was to behold,
How he did fashion his untoward pace;
For as he forward mov'd his footling old,
So backward still was turn'd his wrinkled face. Fairy Queen.
The lovers standing in this doleful wife,
A warrior bold unware approached near,
Uncouth in arms yclad, and strange disguise.
I am surprized with an uncouth fear;
A chilling sweat o'erruns my trembling joints;
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see. Shaksp.
The trouble of thy thoughts this night
Affects me equally; nor can I like
This uncouth dream, of evil sprung, I fear. Milton.
Say on;
For I that day was absent, as befeel,
Bound on a voyage uncouth, and obscure,
Far on excursion toward the gates of hell. Milton.
It was to uncouth a fight, for a fox to appear without a tail, that the very thought made him weary of his life. L'Estrange.
The secret ceremonies I conceal. Dryden.
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful to reveal.
I am more in danger to misunderstand his true meaning, than if I had come to him with a mind unpossessed by doctors of my sect, whose reasonings will of course make all chime that way, and make the genuine meaning of the author seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me. Locke.
He made that a pleasant study, which, in the hands of Bartolus and Baldus, was uncouth and rugged. Baker.

UNCO'UTHLY. adv. Oddly; strangely.
Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did their lubber state mankind bestride. Dryden.

UNCO'UTHNESS. n. f. Oddness; strangeness.
To deny himself in the lesser instances, that so when the greater come, they may not have the disadvantage of uncouthness, and perfect strangeness, to enhance their difficulty, must be acknowledged reasonable. Deacy of Piety.

To UNCREA'TE. v. a. To annihilate; to reduce to nothing;
to deprive of existence.
Who created thee, lamenting learn;
Who can uncreate thee thou shalt know. Milton.
Light dies before her uncreating word.
Thus at her felt approach, and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night. Pope's Dunciad.

UNCREA'TED. adj.
1. Not yet created.
How hast thou disturb'd Heav'n's blessed peace, and into nature brought Mystery, uncreated till the crime
Of thy rebellion? Milton.

2. [Inart, Fr.] Not produced by creation.
What cause within, or what without is found,
That can a being uncreated bound?
The next paragraph proves, that the idea we have of God is God himself; it being something, as he says, un- created. Locke.

UNC

UNCREDITABLENESS. n. f. Want of reputation.
To all other disqualifications, we may add this of the uncred- itable: the best that can be said is, that they use wit foolishly, whereof the one part devours the other. Dea. of Piety.

UNCRO'PPED. adj. Not cropped; not gathered.
Thy abundance wants Partakers, and uncropp'd falls to the ground. Milton.

UNCRO'SSED. adj. Uncancelled.
Such gain the cap of him, that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

UNCRO'UDED. adj. Not straitened by want of room.
An amphitheatre,
On its publick shows, unpeopled Rome,
And held uncrouded nations in its womb. Addison.

To UNCRO'WN. v. a. To deprive of a crown; to deprive of sovereignty.
He hath done me wrong;
And therefore I'll uncrown him ere't be long. Shaksp.
Ye pow'r's!
See a sacred king uncrown'd;
See your offspring, Albion, bound. Dryden's Albion.

UNCTION. n. f. [unctio, Fr.]
1. The act of anointing.
The unction of the tabernacle, the table, the laver, the altar of God, with all the instruments appertaining thereto, made them for ever holy. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.

2. Unguent; ointment.
The king himself the sacred unction made;
As king by office, and as priest by trade. Dryden.

3. The act of anointing medically.
Such as are of hot constitutions, should use bathing in hot water, rather than unction. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. Any thing softening, or lenitive.
Mother,
Lay not that flattering unction to your soul,
That not your trespass, but my madness speaks. Shaksp.

5. The rite of anointing in the last hours.
Their extreme unction, administered as the dying man's viaticum, which St. James mentioned as the ceremony of his recovery, may be added. Leamond's Fundamentals.

6. Any thing that excites piety and devotion.
UNCTUOUSLY. n. f. [from unctuous.] Fatness; oiliness.
Fulgurous exhalations contain an unctuousity in them, and arise from the matter of fuel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNCTUOUS. adj. Fat; clammy; oily.
Dry up thy barrow'd veins, and plough-torn leas,
Whereof ingrateful man, with liquor'd draughts,
And morfels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
That from it all consideration slips. Shaksp.
A wand'ring fire,
Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night
Condenses, and the cold environs round, Kindled through agitation to a flame. Milton's Par. Lost.
The trees were unctuous his, and mountain ash. Dryden.
Whether they unctuous exhalations are,
Fir'd by the sun, or seeming to alone. Dryden.
Th' infernal winds,
Dilating, and with unctuous vapour fed,
Disdain'd their narrow cells. Philips.
Camphire, oil-olive, linseed-oil, spirit of turpentine, and amber, are fat, sulphureous, unctuous bodies. Newton.

UNCTUOUSNESS. n. f. Fatness; oiliness; clamminess; greasiness.
A great degree of unctuousness is not necessary to the production of the like effects. Boyle.

UNCULLED. adj. Not gathered.
A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf, Uncull'd, as came to hand. Milton's Par. Lost.

UNCULPABLE. adj. Not blamable.
Those canons do bind, as they are edicts of nature; which the Jews observing as yet unwritten, and thereby framing such church orders, as in their law were not prescribed, are notwithstanding in that respect unculpable. Hooker.

UNCUKOLDDED. adj. Not made a cuckold.
As it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loosewiv'd, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave un- cuckolded. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

UNCULTIVATED. adj. [incultus, Lat.]
1. Not cultivated; not improved by tillage.
Our idle, indeed, too fruitful was before;
But all uncultivated lay, Dryden.
Out of the solar walk.
God gave the world to men in common; but since he gave it for their benefit, it cannot be supposed he meant it should always remain common and uncultivated. Locke.

2. Not instructed; not civilized.
The first tragedians found that serious stile
Too grave for their uncultivated age. Roscommon.
These are instances of nations, where uncultivated nature has been left to itself, without the help of letters. Locke.

UNCUMBERED. adj. Not burthened; not embarrassed.
Lord of yourself, uncumber'd with a wife. Dryden.

UNCURABLE. adj. That cannot be curbed, or checked.
So much uncurable her garboles, Cedars,
Made out of her impatience, which not wanted Shrewdness of policy. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

UNCURBED. adj. Licentious; not restrained.
With frank, and with uncurbed plainness,
Tell us the Dauphin's mind. Shaksp. Hen. V.

To UNCURL. v. a. To loose from ringlets, or convolutions.
There stands a rock; the raging billows roar
Above his head in storms; but when 'tis clear, Unroll their ridgy backs, and at his feet appear. Dryden.
The lion's foe lies prostrate on the plain,
He sheaths his paws, uncurls his angry mane;
And, pleas'd with bloodless honours of the day,
Walks over, and disdains th' inglorious prey. Dryden.
The furies link upon their iron beds,
And snakes uncurl'd hang list'ning round their heads. Pope.

To UNCURL. v. n. To fall from the ringlets.
My fleece of woolly hair now uncurl'd,
Even as an adder, when the doth unroll
To do some fatal execution? Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

UNCURLED. adj. Not collected into ringlets.
Alike in feature both, and garb appear;
With honest faces, though uncurl'd hair. Dryden.
But since, alas! frail beauty must decay;
Curl'd or uncurl'd, since locks will turn to grey;
What then remains, but well our pow'r to use,
And keep good humour still, whate'er we lose? Pope.

UNCURRENT. adj. Not current; not passing in common payment.
Your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, is not crack'd within the ring. Shaksp. Hamlet.
I can no other answer make but thanks;
And thanks, and ever thanks: and oft good turns
Are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay. Shaksp. Hamlet.

To UNCURSE. v. a. To free from any execration.
Uncurse their souls; their peace is made
With head, and not with hands. Shaksp. Richard II.

UNCURST. adj. Not execrated.
Sir John Hotham unapproach'd, unthreaten'd, uncurst by any language or secret imprecation of mine, not long after pays his own and his eldest son's heads. K. Charles.
Heav'n's fire has kept this spot of earth uncurst,
To shew how all things were created first. Waller.

UNCUT. adj. Not cut.
We must resign! heav'n's great foul doth claim,
In forms as loud as his immortal fame:
His dying groans, his last breath shake our isle,
And trees uncut fall for his funeral pile. Waller.

To UNDA'M. v. a. To open; to free from the restraint of mounds.
When the fiery sun too fiercely plays,
And shrivel'd herbs on with'ring stems decay;
The wary ploughman on the mountain's brow,
Undams his wat'ry stores. Dryden's Georgicks.

UNDA'GED. adj. Not made worse; not impaired.
Plants will frequent changes try,
Undamg'd, and their marriageable arms
Conjoin with others. Philips.

UNDA'UNTED. adj. Unfrighted by fear; not depressed.
Bring forth men children only;
For thy undaunted metal should compose Nothing but males. Shaksp. Macbeth.
With him went
Harman, who did the twice fir'd Harry save,
And in his burning ship undaunted fought. Dryden.
Mirror of ancient faith in early youth!
Undaunted worth, inviolable truth!
No foe unpunish'd in the fighting field,
Shall dare thee. Dryden.

UNDAUNTEDNESS. n. f. Boldness; bravery; intrepidity.
Luther took up a bricker air of assurance, and shewed a particular undauntedness in the cause of truth, when it had so mighty an opposer. Atterbury.
The art of war, which they admired in him, and his un- dauntedness under dangers, were such virtues as these islanders were not used to. Pope.

UNDAUNTEDLY. adv. Boldly; intrepidly; without fear.
It shall bid his soul go out of his body undauntedly, and lift up its head with confidence, before saints and angels. South.

UNDAZZLED. adj. Not dimmed, or confuted by splendour.
Here matter new to gaze the devil met Undazzled. Milton's Par. Lost. b. iii. l. 614.
As undazzled and untroubled eyes, as eagles can be supposed to cast on glow-worms, when they have been newly gazing on the sun. Boyle.

To UNDEAF. v. a. To free from deafness.
Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,
My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear. Shaksp.

UNDEBA'UCHED. adj. Not corrupted by debauchery.
When the world was buckfome, fresh and young,
Her sons were undebauch'd, and therefore strong. Dryden.

UND

UNDE'CAGON. n. f. [from undecim, Lat. and γωνία, Gr.] A figure of eleven angles or sides.

UNDECA'YING. adj. Not suffering diminution or declension.
The fragrant myrtle, and the juicy vine,
Their parents undecaying strength declare,
Which with fresh labour, and unwearied care,
Supplies new plants. Blackmore on the Creation.

UNDECA'YED. adj. Not liable to be diminished, or impaired.
How fierce in fight, with courage undecay'd!
Judge if such warriors want immortal aid. Dryden.
If in the melancholy shades below,
The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
Yet mine shall sacred last; mine undecay'd
Burn on through life, and animate my shade. Pope.

To UNDECE'IVE. v. a. To set free from the influence of a fallacy.
All men will try, and hope to write as well,
And, not without much pains, be undeciev'd. Roscommon.
My muse enraged, from her urn,
Like ghosts of murder'd bodies does return
To accuse the murderers, to right the stage,
And undecieve the long-abused age. Denham.
So far as truth gets ground in the world, so far sin loses it.
Christ saves the world by undecieving it. South.
Our coming judgments do in part undecieve us, and rectify the grosser errors. Glanville.

UNDECEIVABLE. adj. Not liable to deceive.
It serves for more certain computation, by how much it is a larger and more comprehensive period, and under a more undecivable calculation. Holder on Time.

UNDECEIVED. adj. Not cheated; not imposed on.
All of a tenour was their after life;
No day discolour'd with domestick strife;
No jealousy, but mutual truth believ'd;
Secure repose, and kindness undeciev'd. Dryden.

UNDECI'DED. adj. Not determined; not sett'ed.
For one thing, which we have left to the order of the church, they had twenty which were undecided by the express word of God. Hooker.
To whose muse we owe that fort of verse,
Is undecided by the men of skill. Roscommon.
Aristotle has left undecided the duration of the action. Dryd.
When two adverse winds engage with horrid shock,
Levying their equal force with utmost rage,
Long undecided lasts the airy strife. Philips.

To UNDECK. v. a. To deprive of ornaments.
I find myself a traitor;
For I have given here my soul's consent,
To undeck the pompous body of a king. Shaksp. Hamlet.

UNDECKED. adj. Not adorned; not embellished.
Eve was undeck'd, save with herself. Milton's Par. Lost.

UNDECI'SIVE. adj. Not decisive; not conclusive.
Two nations differing about the antiquity of their language, made appeal to an undecisive experiment, when they agreed upon the trial of a child brought up among the wild inhabitants of the desert. Glanville.

UNDECLIN'ED. adj.
1. Not grammatically varied by termination.
2. Not deviating; not turned from the right way.
In his track my wary feet have slept;
His undclin'd ways precisely kept. Sandy's Paraphrase.

UNDEDICATED. adj.
1. Not consecrated; not devoted.
2. Not inscribed to a patron.
I should let this book come forth undedicated, were it not that I look upon this dedication as a duty. Boyle.

UNDEE'DED. adj. Not signalized by action.
My sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded. Shaksp. Macbeth.

UNDEFA'CED. adj. Not deprived of its form; not disfigured.
Those arms, which for nine centuries had brav'd
The wrath of time on antick stone engrav'd;
Now torn by mortars, stand yet undefac'd,
On nobler trophies by thy valour rais'd. Glanville.

UNDEFEASIBLE. adj. Not defeasible; not to be vacated or annulled.
UNDEFIL'ED. adj. Not polluted; not vitiated; not corrupted.
Virtue weareth a crown for ever, having gotten the victory, striving for undefiled rewards. Wisd. iv. 3.
Whole bed is undefil'd, and chaste, pronounce d. Milton.
Her Arethufian stream remains uncoil'd;
Unmix'd with foreign filth, and undefil'd;
Her wit was more than man, her innocence a child. Dryden.

UNDEFIN'ED. adj. Not circumfcribed, or explained by a definition.
There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round with legions of obscure, doubtful,
undefin'd words. Locke.

UNDEFINABLE. adj. Not to be marked out, or circumfcribed by a definition.

UND

That which is indefinite, though it hath bounds, as not being infinite, yet those bounds to us are undefinable. Grew.
 Why simple ideas are undefinable is, that the several terms of a definition, signifying several ideas, they can all, by no means, represent an idea, which has no composition at all. Locke.
UNDERORMED. adj. Not deformed; not disfigured.
 The fight of so many gallant fellows, with all the pomp and glare of war, yet underorm'd by battles, may possibly invite your curiosity. Pope.
UNDEFIED. adj. Not set at defiance; not challenged.
 False traitor, thou broken haif
 The law of arms, to strike for undefied;
 But thou thy treason's fruit, I hope, shalt taste Right four, and feel the law, the which thou hast defac'd. Fairy Queen, b. II. c. viii. fl. 31.
 Tarifa
 Changed a blunt cane for a steel-pointed dart,
 And meeting Ozmy next,
 Who wanting time for treason to provide,
 He basely threw it at him, undefy'd. Dryden.
UNDELIBERATED. adj. Not carefully considered.
 The prince's undeliberated throwing himself into that engagement, transported him with passion. Clarendon.
UNDELIGHTED. adj. Not pleased; not touched with pleasure.
 The fiend
 Saw undelight'd all delight; all kind
 Of living creatures, new to fight. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNDELIGHTFUL. adj. Not giving pleasure.
 He could not think of involving himself in the same unde- lightful condition of life. Clarendon.
UNDEMONSTRABLE. adj. Not taxed; not thrown down.
 She undemonstrable flood, and ev'n 'till now
 Perhaps had stood. Philips.
 They stood by, and suffered Dunkirk to lie unde- monstrable. Swift.
UNDEMONSTRABLE. adj. Not capable of fuller evidence.
 Out of the precepts of the law of nature, as of certain, common, and undemonstrable principles, man's reason doth necessarily proceed unto certain more particular determinations: which particular determinations being found out according unto the reason of man, they have the names of human laws. Hooker.
UNDENIABLE. adj. Such as cannot be gainfaid.
 That age which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity.
 Of those of the second class, we have a plain and unde- niable certainty. Woodward's Natural History.
UNDENIABLY. adv. So plainly, as to admit no contradiction.
 This account was differently related by the antients; that is, undeniably rejected by the moderns. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 I grant that nature all poets ought to study; but then this also undeniably follows, that those things which delight all ages, must have been an imitation of nature. Dryden.
UNDEPLORED. adj. Not lamented.
 Rife, wretched widow! rife; nor undeplo'd
 Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford;
 But rife prepar'd to mourn thy peris'd lord. Dryden.
UNDEPRAVED. adj. Not corrupted.
 Knowledge dwelt in our undeplored nature, as light in the sun; it is now hidden in us like sparks in a flint. Glanville.
UNDEPRIVED. adj. Not divested by authority; not stripped of any possession.
 He, undepri'd, his benefice forsook. Dryden.
UNDER. preposition. [under, Gothick; unbey, Saxon; under, Dutch.]
 1. In a state of subjection to.
 When good Saturn, banish'd from above,
 Was driven to hell, the world was under Jove. Dryden.
 Every man is put under a necessity, by his constitution, as an intelligent being, to be determined by his own judgment, what is best for him to do; else he would be under the determination of some other than himself, which is want of liberty. Locke.
 2. In the state of pupillage to.
 To those that live
 Under thy care, good rules and patterns give. Denham.
 The princes respected Helim, and made such improvements under him, that they were instructed in learning. Guardian.
 3. Beneath; so as to be covered, or hidden.
 Fruit put in bottles, and the bottles let down into wells under water, will keep long.
 If it stood always under this form, it would have been under fire, if it had not been under water. Burnet.
 Thy bees lodge under covert of the wind. Dryden.
 Many a good poetick vein is buried under a trade, and never produces any thing for want of improvement. Locke.

4. Below in place; not above. This is the sense of under fall;
 that is, having the sails spread aloft.
 As they went under fall by him, they held up their hands and made their prayers. Sidney.
 By that fire that burn'd the Carthage queen,
 When the false Trojan under fall was seen. Shakespeare.
 Missetoe hath been found to put forth under the boughs, and not only above the boughs; so it cannot be any thing that falleth upon the bough. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Be gather'd now, ye waters, under heav'n. Milton.
 5. In a less degree than.
 Medicines take effect sometimes under, and sometimes above, the natural proportion of their virtue. Hooker.
 If you write in your strength, you stand revealed at first;
 and should you write under it, you cannot avoid some peculiar graces. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
 6. For less than.
 We are thrifty enough not to part with any thing serviceable to our bodies, under a good consideration; but make little account of what is most beneficial to our souls. Ray.
 7. Less than; below.
 Man, once fallen, was nothing but a total pollution, and not to be reformed by any thing under a new creation. South.
 These men of forehead love to insure a cause, and seldom talk under certainty and demonstration. Collier on Casilimus.
 There are several hundred parishes in England under ten twenty pounds a year, and many under ten. Swift.
 8. By the show of.
 That which spites me more than all the wants,
 He does it under name of perfect love. Shakespeare.
 'Tis hard to bind any syllogism so close upon the mind,
 as not to be evaded under some plausible distinction. Baker.
 9. With less than.
 Several young men could never leave the pulpit under half a dozen conceits. Swift.
 10. In the state of inferiority to; noting rank or order of precedence.
 It was too great an honour for any man under a duke. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 122.
 11. In a state of being loaded with.
 He shall but bear them, as the ass bears gold,
 To groan and sweat under the business. Shakespeare.
 He holds the people
 Of no more foul, nor fitness for the world,
 Than camels in their war; who have their provender
 Only for bearing burthens, and fore blows
 For sinking under them. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
 12. In a state of oppression by, or subjection to.
 After all, they have not been able to give any considerable comfort to the mind, under any of the great profusions of this life. Fellon's Sermons.
 At any rate we desire to be rid of the present evil, which we are apt to think nothing absent can equal; because, under the present pain, we find not ourselves capable of any, the least degree of happiness. Locke.
 Women and children did not show the least signs of complaint, under the extremity of torture. Collier.
 Illustrious parent! now some token give,
 That I may Clymene's proud boast believe,
 Nor longer under false reproaches grieve. Addison.
 13. In a state in which one is seized or overborn.
 The prince and princess must be under no less amazement. Pope's Letters.
 14. In a state of being liable to, or limited by.
 That which we move for our better instruction's sake, turneth unto choler in them; they answer flamingly. Yet in this their mood, they cast forth somewhat, wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must rest contented. Hooker.
 The great part of mankind is flow of apprehension; and therefore, in many cases, under a necessity of seeing with other men's eyes. South's Sermons.
 A generation sprung up amongst us, that flattered princes that they have a divine right to absolute power, let the laws and conditions under which they enter upon their authority, be what they will. Locke.
 It is not strange to find a country half unpeopled, where so great a proportion of both sexes is tied under such vows of chastity. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
 Things of another world are under the disadvantage of being distant, and therefore operate but faintly. Atterbury.
 15. In a state of depression, or dejection by.
 There is none but he,
 Whose being I do fear; and, under him,
 My genius is rebuk'd, as Antony's was by Caesar. Shakespeare.
 16. In the state of bearing, or being known by.
 This faction, under the name of Puritan, became very turbulent, during the reign of Elizabeth. Swift.

 20. In a state of protection.
 Under favour, there are other materials for a commonwealth, besides stark love and kindness. Collier.
 21. With respect to.
 Mr. Duke may be mentioned under the double capacity of a poet and a divine. Felton on the Classics.
 22. Attested by.
 Cato major, who had with great reputation borne all the great offices of the commonwealth, has left us an evidence, under his own hand, how much he was versed in country affairs. Locke on Education.
 23. Subjected to; being the subject of.
 To describe the revolutions of nature, will require a steady eye; especially so to connect the parts, and present them all under one view. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 Memory is the storehouse of our ideas. For the narrow mind of man, not being capable of having many ideas under view at once, it was necessary to have a repository to lay them up. Locke.
 The thing under proof is not capable of demonstration, and must be submitted to the trial of probabilities. Locke.
 Diffinct conceptions, that answer their verbal distinctions, serve to clear any thing in the subject under consideration. Locke.
 I rather suspect my own judgment, than believe a fault to be in that poem, which lay so long under Virgil's correction, and had his last hand put to it. Addison.

What addition and change I have made, I have here underwritten. Sanderfon.
UNDERWRITER, n. f. [from underwrite.] An insurer; so called from writing his name under the conditions.
UNDESCRIBED, adj. Not described.
They urge, that God left nothing in his word undescribed, whether it concerned the worship of God, or outward polity. Hooker.
This is such a singular practice, that I had rather leave it undescribed, than give it its proper character. Collier on Pride.
UNDESCRIBED, adj. Not seen; unseen; undiscovered.
UNDESERVED, adj. Not merited; not obtained by merit.
1. Not merited; not obtained by merit.
This victory, obtained with great, and truly not undeserved, honour to the two princes, the whole estates, with one consent, gave the crown to Muldorus. Sidney, b. ii.
2. Not incurred by fault.
The same virtue which gave him a disregard of fame, made him impatient of an undeserved reproach. Addison.
UNDESERVEDLY, adv. [from undeserved.] Without desert, whether of good or ill.
Our desire is to yield them a just reason, even of the least things, wherein undeservedly they have but as much as dreamed that we do amiss. Hooker, b. v. §. 7.
He which speaketh no more than edifieth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker, b. v. §. 32.
These oft as undeservedly intrial.
His outward freedom. Milton's Par. Lost.
Science distinguishes a man of honour from one of those athletick brutes, whom undeservedly we call heroes. Dryden.

UND

UNDESERVER, n. f. One of no merit.
You see how men of merit are sought after; the undeserver may sleep, when the man of action is called on. Shakspeare.
UNDESERVING, adj.
1. Not having merit; not having any worth.
It exerts itself promiscuously towards the deserving and the undeserving, if it relieves alike the idle and the indigent. Addison.
Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity, when an all-thankful and undeserving day his benefits on the un-
Who lose a length of undeserving days.
Would you usurp the lover's dear-bought praise? Pope.
2. Not meriting any particular advantage or hurt. With of.
I was carried to dislike, then to hate; lastly to destroy this son undeserving destruction. Sidney.
My felicity is in retaining the good opinion of honest men, who think me not quite undeserving of it. Pope.
UNDESIGNED, adj. Not intended; not purposed.
Great effects by inconsiderable means are sometimes brought about; and those who wholly undesigned by such as are the immediate actors. South.
Where you conduct find,
Use and convenience; will you not agree,
That such effects could not be undesigned,
Nor could proceed, but from a knowing mind? Blackmore.
UNDESIGNING, adj.
1. Not acting with any set purpose.
Could atoms, which, with undirected flight,
Roam'd through the void, and rang'd the realms of night,
In order march, and to their posts advance,
Led by no guides, but undesigned chance? Blackmore.
2. Having no artful or fraudulent schemes; sincere.
He looks upon friendship, gratitude, and sense of honour, as terms to impose upon weak, undesigned minds. South.
UNDESIRABLE, adj. Not to be wished; not pleasing.
To add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love,
And render me more equal; and perhaps,
A thing not undesirable, some time
Superior; for inferior, who is free? Milton's Par. Lost.
UNDESIRABLE, adj. Not wished; not solicited.
O greedy-mother, give me back to fate;
Your gift was undesirable, and came too late. Dryden.
UNDESIRING, adj. Negligent; not wishing.
The baits of gifts and money to despise,
And look on wealth with undesiring eyes.
When thou canst truly call these virtues thine,
Be wise, and free, by heav'n's consent and mine. Dryden.
UNDESTROYABLE, adj. Indestructible; not susceptible of destruction.
Common glass, once made, so far resists the violence of the fire, that most chymists think it a body more undestroyable than gold itself. Boyle.
UNDESTROYED, adj. Not destroyed.
The essences of those species are preserved whole and undestroyed, whatever changes happen to any, or all of the individuals. Locke.
UNDETERMINABLE, adj. Impossible to be decided.
On either side the fight was fierce, and surely undeterminable without the death of one of the chiefs.
Rather an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it doubtful and undeterminable who such heir is. Locke.
UNDETERMINATE, adj.
1. Not settled; not decided; contingent.
Surely the Son of God could not die by chance, nor the greatest thing that ever came to pass in nature, be left to an undeterminate event. South.
2. Not fixed.
Fluid, slippery, and undeterminate it is of itself. Merc.
UNDETERMINATENESS, n. f. [from undeterminate.]
UNDETERMINATION, n. f.
1. Uncertainty; indecision.
He is not left barely to the undetermination, uncertainty and unsteadiness of the operation of his faculties, without a certain, secret, predispotion of them to what is right. Hale.
2. The state of not being fixed, or invincibly directed.
The idea of a free agent is undeterminateness to one part, before he has made choice. Merc.'s Divine Dialogues.
UNDETERMINED, adj.
1. Unsettled; undecided.
He has left his succession as undetermined, as if he had said nothing about it. Locke.
Extended wide
In circuit, undetermined square or round. Milton.
2. Not limited; not regulated.
It is difficult to conceive that any such thing should be as matter, undetermined by something called form. Hale.
UNDEVOTED, adj. Not devoted.
The lords Say and Brooke, two popular men, and most undevoted to the church, positively refused to make any such protestation. Charendon, b. ii.

UND

UNDIA'PHANOUS, adj. Not pellucid; not transparent.
When the materials of glass melted, with calcined tin, have composed a mass undiaphanous and white, this white enamel is the basis of all concretes, that goldsmiths employ in enamelling. Boyle on Colours.
UNDID, the preterite of undo.
This to undid all I had done before;
I could attempt, and he endure no more. Rescommen.
UNDIGESTED, adj. Not concocted.
Ambition, the disease of virtue, bred
Like fursets from an undigested fulness,
Meets death in that which is the means of life. Denham.
The glaring sun breaks in at ev'ry chink;
Yet plung'd in sloth we lie, and more supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden.
Meat remaining in the stomach undigested, dejection of appetite, wind coming upwards, are signs of a phlegmatick constitution. Arbutnot on Diet.
UNDIGEST, preterite put off. It is questionable whether it have a present tense.
From her fair head her fillets she undigests,
And laid her stole aside. Fairy Queen.
UNDIMINISHED, adj. Not impressed by a blow.
I must rid all the sea of pirates; this greed upon,
To part with unhack'd edges, and beat back
Our barge undiminished. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
UNDIMINISHED, adj. Not impaired; not lessened.
I still accounted myself undiminished of my largest conceptions.
Think not, revolted spirit! thy shape the same,
Or undiminished brightness, to be known
As when thou stood'st in heav'n, upright and pure. Milton.
Sergius, who a bad cause bravely try'd,
All of a piece, and undiminished, dy'd. Dryden.
The deathless muse, with undiminished rays,
Through distant times the lovely dame conveys. Addison.
When sacrilegious hands had rased the church, even to the foundation, these charities they suffered to stand undiminished, untouched. Atterbury.
UNDIPPED, [un and dip.] Not dipped; not plunged.
I think thee
Impenetrably good; but, like Achilles,
Thou had'st a lost Egyptian heel undipped.
And that has made thee mortal. Dryden's Cleomenes.
UNDIRECTED, adj. Not directed.
The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging furies, unruled and undirected of any; for they to whom she was committed, fainter or forsook their charge. Spenser.
Could atoms, which, with undirected flight,
Roam'd through the void, and rang'd the realms of night,
Of reason destitute, without intent,
In order march. Blackmore on the Creation.
UNDISCE'RNIBLE, adj. Not to be discerned; invisible.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness,
To think I should be undiscernible,
When I perceive your grace. Shakspeare.
The apostle knowing that the distinction of these characters was undiscernible by men in this life, admonishes those, who had the most comfortable assurances of God's favour, to be nevertheless apprehensive. Rogers's Sermons.
UNDISCE'RNABLE, adj. Invisibly; imperceptibly.
Many secret indispositions will undiscernibly heal upon the soul, and it will require time and close application to recover it to the spiritualities of religion. South's Sermons.
UNDISCE'RNED, adj. Not observed; not discovered; not discerned.
Our profession, though it leadeth us into many truths undiscerned by others, yet doth disturb their communications. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Broken they break, and rallying they renew,
In other forms, the military shew:
At last in order undiscern'd they join,
And march together in a friendly line. Dryden.
UNDISCE'RNEDLY, adv. So as to be undiscovered.
Some associated particles of salt-petre, by lurking undiscernedly in the fixed nitre, had escaped the analysing violence of the fire. Boyle.
UNDISCE'RNING, adj. Injudicious; incapable of making due distinction.
Undiscerning muse, which heart, which eyes,
In this new couple dost thou prize? Donne.
His long experience informed him well of the state of England; but of foreign transactions, he was entirely undiscerning and ignorant.
Thus her blind sister, sickle fortune, reigns,
And undiscerning scatters crowns and chains. Pope.
UNDISCORDING, adj. Not disagreeing; not jarring in music.
We on earth, with *undiscord*ing voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, 'till disproportion'd sin
Jarr'd against nature's chime. Milton.

UND

UNDISCIPLINED, adj.
1. Not subdued to regularity and order.
To be dispensed withal is an argument of natural infirmity, if it be necessary; but if it be not, it signifies an undisciplined and unmortified spirit. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
Divided from those climes where art prevails;
Undisciplin'd by precepts of the wife;
Our inborn passions will not brook controul;
We follow nature. Philips.
2. Untaught; uninstructed.
A gallant man had rather fight to great disadvantages in the field, in an orderly way, than skuffle with an undisciplin'd rabble. K. Charles.
Dry is a man of a clear head, but few words; and gains the same advantage over Puzzle, that a small body of regular troops would gain over a numberless, undisciplin'd militia. Spenser, N. 477.
UNDISCOVERABLE, adj. Not to be found out.
He was to make up his accounts, and by an easy, undiscoverable cheat, he could provide against the impending distress. Rogers.
UNDISCOVERED, adj. Not seen; not descried; not found out.
Coming into the falling of a way, which led us into a place, of each side whereof men might easily keep themselves undiscovered, I was encompassed suddenly by a great troop of enemies.
When the griefs of Job were exceeding great, his words accordingly to open them were many: howbeit, still unto his seeming they were undiscovered. Hooker.
Time glides, with undiscover'd haste;
The future but a length behind the past. Dryden.
By your counsels we are brought to view
A rich and undiscover'd world in you. Dryden.
In such passages I discover'd some beauty yet undiscover'd. Dryden.
UNDISCREET, adj. Not wise; imprudent.
If thou be among the undiscreet, observe the time. Ecclesi. xxvii.
UNDISGUISED, adj. Open; artless; plain; exposed to view.
If thou art Venus,
Disguis'd in habit, undisguis'd in shape;
O help us, captives, from our chains t'escape. Dryden.
If once they can dare to appear openly and undisguis'd, when they can turn the ridicule upon ferociousness and piety, the contagion spreads like a pestilence. Rogers's Sermons.
UNDISHONOUR'D, adj. Not dishonoured.
Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed:
I live disdain'd, thou undishonour'd. Shakspeare.
UNDISMA'YED, adj. Not discouraged; not depressed with fear.
He in the midst thus undismay'd began. Milton's P. Lost.
He aim'd a blow against his undismay'd adversary. Arbutnot.
Though oft repuls'd, again
They rally undismay'd. Philips.
UNDISOB'LI'GING, adj. Inoffensive.
All this he would have expiated upon, with connexions of the discourtesies, and the most easy, undisobliging transitions. Broom's Notes on the Illiad.
UNDISPERSED, adj. Not scattered.
We have all the redolence of the perfumes we burn upon his altars; the smoke doth vanish ere it can reach the sky; and whilst it is undispersed, it but clouds it. Boyle.
UNDISPOSED, adj. Not bestowed.
The employments were left undisposed of, to keep alive the hopes of impatient candidates. Swift.
UNDISPUTED, adj. Incontrovertible; evident.
You, by an undisputed title, are the king of poets. Dryden.
That virtue and vice tend to make these men happy, or miserable, who severally practise them, is a proposition of undoubted, and by me undisputed, truth. Atterbury.
UNDISSE'MBLED, adj.
1. Openly declared.
2. Honest, not feigned.
Ye are the sons of a clergy, whose undissembled and unlimited veneration for the holy scriptures, hath not hindered them from paying an inferior, but profound regard to the best interpreters of it, the primitive writers. Atterbury.
UNDISSIPATED, adj. Not scattered; not dispersed.
Such little primary mafies as our proposition mentions, may remain undissipated. Boyle.
UNDISSOLVING, adj. Never melting.
Not cold Scythia's undissolving snows,
Nor the parch'd Libyan sands thy husband bore,
But mild Parthenope. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
UNDISTEMPERED, adj.
1. Free from disease.
2. Free from perturbation.
Some such laws may be considered, in some parliament that shall be at leisure, from the urgency of more pressing affairs, and shall be cool and undistemper'd. Temple.

UND

UNDISTINGUISHABLE, adj.

1. Not to be distinctly seen.
These things seem small and undistinguishable.
Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shakespeare.

The quaint mazes in the wanton green,
For lack of tread, are undistinguishable.
Its lineaments are destroy'd, and the materials mixt in an undistinguishable confusion. Shakespeare.

2. Not to be known by any peculiar property.
No idea can be undistinguishable from another, from which it ought to be different. Rogers.

UNDISTINGUISHED, adj.
1. Not marked out by objects or intervals.
'Tis longer since the creation of angels than of the world, by seven hundred years: whereby we would mark out to much of that undistinguished duration, as we suppose would have admitted seven hundred annual revolutions of the sun. Locke.

2. Not seen, or not to be seen otherwise than confusedly; not separately and plainly discerned.
'Tis like the milky way, all over bright;
But frown so thick with stars, 'tis undistinguished light. Dryden.

3. Admitting nothing between; having no intervening space.
Oh undistinguished space of woman's will! Shakespeare.

4. Not marked by any particular property.
Sleep to those empty lids
Is grown a stranger; and day and night,
As undistinguished by my sleep, as light. Denham.

5. Not treated with any particular respect.
Sad chance of war! now destitute of aid,
Falls undistinguished by the victor's spade. Pope.

UNDISTINGUISHING, adj. Making no difference.
The promiscuous and undistinguishing distribution of good and evil, which was necessary for carrying on the designs of providence in this life, will be rectified in another. Addison.

UNDISTRACTED, adj. Not perplexed by contrariety of thoughts or desires.
When Enoch had walked with God, he was so far from being tired with that lasting assiduity, that he admitted him to a more immediate, and more undistracted communion with himself. Boyle.

UNDISTRACTEDLY, adv. Without disturbance from contrariety of sentiments.
St. Paul tells us, that there is difference betwixt married and single persons; the affections of the latter being at liberty to devote themselves more undistractedly to God. Boyle.

UNDISTRACTEDNESS, n. f. Freedom from interruption by different thoughts.
The strange confusions of this nation disturb that calmness of mind, and undistraction of thoughts. Boyle.

UNDISTURBED, adj.
1. Free from perturbation; calm; tranquil.
To our high-raised phantasy present
That undisturbed song of pure content. Milton.

2. Not interrupted by any hindrance or molestation.
Nature flints our appetite,
And craves no more than undisturbed delight;
Which minds, unmix'd with cares and fears, obtain;
A soul serene, a body void of pain. Dryden.

3. Not agitated.
A good conscience is a port which is land-locked on every side, where no winds can possibly invade. There a man may not only see his own image, but that of his maker, clearly reflected from the undisturbed and silent waters. Dryden.

UNDISTURBEDLY, adv. Calmly; peacefully.
Our minds are so weak, that they have need of all the assurances can be procured, to lay before them undisturbedly
the thread and coherence of any discourse. Locke.

UNDIVIDABLE, adj. Not separable; not susceptible of division.
The best actors in the world for tragedy, pastoral, scene
undividable, or poem unlimited. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

UNDIVIDED, adj. Unbroken; whole; not parted.
Love is not divided between God and God's enemy: we must love God with all our heart; that is, give him a whole and undivided affection. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.

UNDIVIDEDLY, adv. Secretly; not promulgated.
Let the great gods
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivided crimes, to me Unwhipp'd of justice. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

UNDIVIDEDLY, adv. Indubitably; without question; without doubt.
Some fault undoubtedly there is in the very resemblance of idolaters. Hooker.

UNE

The same uneasiness which every thing Gives to our nature, life must also bring. Denham.
We may be said to live like those who have their hope in another life, if we bear the uneasiness that befall us here with constancy.

Men are dissatisfied with their station, and create to themselves all the uneasiness of want. They fancy themselves poor, and under this persuasion feel all the disquiet of real poverty.

His Majesty will maintain his just authority over them; and whatever uneasiness they may give themselves, they can create none in him.

The libels against his grandfather, that fly about his very court, give him uneasiness.

UNEASINESS, adj.
1. Painful; giving disturbance.

The wisest of the Gentiles forbade any libations to be made for dead infants, as believing they passed into happiness through the way of mortality, and for a few months wore an uneasy garment.

On a towering pinnacle the standing is uneasy, and the fall deadly.

His present thoughts are uneasy, because his present state does not please him.

UNEASINESS, adj.
1. Painful; giving disturbance.

Still watch'd and importun'd, but worse for thee. Dryden.

2. Disturbed; not at ease.

Happy low I lie down;
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown. Shakespeare.

Uneasy justice upward flew,
And both the sisters to the stars withdrew. Dryden.

The passion and ill language proceeded from a gall'd and uneasy mind.

It is such a pleasure as makes a man restless and uneasy, exciting fresh desires.

One would wonder how any person should desire to be king of a country, in which the established religion is directly opposite to that he professes. Were it possible for such a one to accomplish his designs, his own reason might tell him, there could not be a more uneasy prince, nor a more unhappy people.

If we imagine ourselves intitled to any thing we have not, we shall be uneasy in the want of it; and that uneasiness will expose us to all the evil persuasions of poverty.

The foul, uneasy and confin'd from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come. Pope.

3. Confining; cramped.

Some few like uneasy titators
Prescribe at first such strict, uneasy rules,
As they must ever slavishly observe. Rescuer.

4. Not unconstrained; not disengaged.

In conversation, a solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, will be constrained, uneasy, and ungraceful.

5. Reevith; difficult to please.

A four, untractable nature, makes him uneasy to those who approach him.

6. Difficult. Out of use.

We will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd: from his simplicity, I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither.

This swift business
I must uneasy make; left too light winning
Make the prize light. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Divers things, knowable by the bare light of nature, are yet so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood, that, let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will appear obscure.

UNEASINESS, adj. Not devoted.

Though they had but two horses left uneaten, they had never suffered a summons to be sent to them.

UNEATH, adv. [from earth, east, Saxon; easy.]

1. Not easily. Out of use.

Uneath may she endure the flinty street,
To tread them with her tender feeling feet. Shakespeare.

2. It seems in Spenser to signify the same as beneath. Under; below.

A roaring, hideous sound,
That all the air with terror filled wide,
And seem'd uneath to shake the steadfast ground. Fairy Queen.

UNEDEIFYING, adj. Not improving in good life.

Our practical divinity is as found and affecting, as that of our popish neighbours is flat and unedifying.

UNELECTED, adj. Not chosen.

Putting him to rage,
You should have taken th' advantage of his choler.

UNEQUAL, adj. Not worthy to be chosen.

Both extremes, above or below the proportion of our characters, are dangerous; and 'tis hard to determine which is most unequal.

UNEQUALITY, n. f.

1. Not equal; inferior.

Among unequals, what society? Milton.

To bliss unknown my lofty soul aspires;
My lot unequal to my vast desires. Arbutnot.

3. Partial; not bestowing on both the same advantages.

When to conditions of unequal peace,
He shall submit, then may he not possess
Kingdom nor life. Denham.

4. [Inequal, Fr.] Disproportionate; ill matched.

Against unequal arms to fight in pain. Milton.

From his strong arm I saw his rival run;
And in a crowd th' unequal combat shun. Dryden.

5. Not regular; not uniform.

Nor fear'd the chief th' unequal fight to try. Pope.

So strong, yet so unequal pulses beat. Dryden.

So strong, yet so unequal pulses beat. Dryden.

So strong, yet so unequal pulses beat. Dryden.

So strong, yet so unequal pulses beat. Dryden.

So strong, yet so unequal pulses beat. Dryden.

So strong, yet so unequal pulses beat. Dryden.

UNE

UNEMPLOYED, adj.

1. Not busy; at leisure; idle.

Other creatures, all day long Rove idle, unemployed, and less need rest. Milton's Par. Lost.

Wilt thou then serve Philistines with that gift,
Which was expressly given thee to annoy them?
Better at home lie bedrid, not only idle,
Inglorious, unemployed, with age out-worn. Milton.

Our wife creator has annexed to several objects, and to the ideas we receive of them, as also, to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure, that those faculties which we are endowed with, might not remain idle and unemployed.

2. Not engaged in any particular work.

Fales unemploy'd, Ceres unemploy'd,
Were all forgot. Dryden.

Men, foured with poverty, and unemploy'd, easily give into any prospect of change.

UNEMPLOYABLE, adj. Not to be emptied; inexhaustible.

Whatever men or angels know, it is as a drop of that unemployable fountain of wisdom, which hath diversely imparted her treasures.

UNEMPLOYED, adj. Not invested; not graced.

A man rather unadorned with any parts of quickness, and unadorned with any notable virtues, than notorious for any defect of understanding.

Aspiring, factious, fierce and loud,
With grace and learning unadorn'd. Swift.

UNENGAGED, adj. Not engaged; not appropriated.

When we have sunk the only unengaged revenues left, our incumbrances must remain perpetual.

UNENJOYED, adj. Not obtained; not possessed.

Each day's a mistress, unenjoy'd before;
Like travellers, we're pleas'd with seeing more. Dryden.

UNENJOYING, adj. Not using; having no fruition.

The more we have, the meaner is our store;
Th' unenjoying, craving wretch is poor. Craich.

UNENLIGHTENED, adj. Not illuminated.

Moral virtue natural reason, unenlightened by revelation, prescribes.

UNENLARGED, adj. Not enlarged; narrow, contracted.

Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered concerning the shape of little animals, which equal not a pepper-corn.

UNENSLAVED, adj. Free; not entrall'd.

By thee
She sits a sov'reign, unenslaved and free. Addison.

UNENTERTAINING, adj. Giving no delight; giving no entertainment.

It was not unentertaining to observe by what degrees I ceased to be a witty writer.

UNENVIED, adj. Exempt from envy.

The fortune, which no body fees, makes a man happy and unenvied.

This loss
Thus far at least recover'd, hath much more Establish'd in a safe, unenvied throne, Yielded with full consent. Milton's Par. Lost.

These unenvied stand;
Since what they act, transcends what they command. Denham.

What health promotes, and gives unenvy'd peace,
Is all expenceless, and procur'd with ease. Blackmore.

Beneath our humble cottage let us haste,
And here, unenvoy'd, rural dainties taste. Pope's Odyssey.

UNENVOYED, adj. Unburied; uninterred.

Think't thou unentomb'd to cross the floods? Dryden.

UNEQUALABLE, adj. Different from itself; diverse.

March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most unsettled and unequalable of seasons.

UNEQUAL, adj. [Inequalis, Lat.]

1. Not even.

There fits deformity to mock my body;
To shape my legs of an unequal size. Shakespeare.

You have here more than one example of Chaucer's unequal numbers.

2. Not equal; inferior.

Among unequals, what society? Milton.

To bliss unknown my lofty soul aspires;
My lot unequal to my vast desires. Arbutnot.

3. Partial; not bestowing on both the same advantages.

When to conditions of unequal peace,
He shall submit, then may he not possess
Kingdom nor life. Denham.

4. [Inequal, Fr.] Disproportionate; ill matched.

Against unequal arms to fight in pain. Milton.

From his strong arm I saw his rival run;
And in a crowd th' unequal combat shun. Dryden.

5. Not regular; not uniform.

Nor fear'd the chief th' unequal fight to try. Pope.

UNE

UNEQUALABLE, adj. Not to be equalled; not to be paralleled.

Christ's love to God is filial and unequalable. Boyle.

UNEQUALLED, adj. Unparalleled; unrivalled in excellence.

By those unequalled and invaluable blessings, he manifested how much he hated sin, and how much he loved finners. Boyle.

Dorinda came, divested of the scorn,
Which the unequal'd maid so long had worn. Rescuer.

UNEQUALITY, adv. In different degrees; in disproportion one to the other.

When we view some well-proportion'd dome,
No single parts unequally surprize;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.

UNEQUALNESS, n. f. Inequality; state of being unequal.

UNEQUITABLE, adj. Not impartial; not just.

We force him to stand to those measures which we think too unequitable to press upon a murderer. Decay of Piety.

UNEQUITVOCAL, adj. Not equivocal.

This conceit is erroneous, making putrefactive generations correspondent unto seminal productions, and conceiving unequivocal effects, and univocal conformity unto the efficient.

UNEQUALNESS, n. f. Incapacity of error.

How much more than possible that has been, the many innovations of that church witness; and consequently the danger of presuming upon the unequalness of a guide.

UNEERRING, adj. [Inerrans, Lat.]

1. Committing no mistake.

The irrefragable infirmities of our nature, make a perfect and unerring obedience impossible. Rogers's Sermons.

Faith in chains constrain the various God;
Who bound obedient to superior force,
Unerring will prescribe your destin'd course. Pope.

His javelin threw,
Hissing in air th' unerring weapon flew. Dryden.

2. Incapable of failure; certain.

The king a mortal shaft lets fly
From his unerring hand. Denham.

Is this th' unerring power? the ghost reply'd;
Nor Phoebus flatter'd; nor his answers ly'd. Dryden.

Lovers of truth, for truth's sake; there is this one unerring mark, the not entertaining any proposition, with greater assurance than the proofs it is built upon will warrant. Locke.

UNEERRINGLY, adv. Without mistake.

What those figures are, that should be mechanically adapted, to fall so unerringly into regular compositions, is beyond our faculties to conceive.

UNESCAPABLE, adj. Inevitable; unavoidable; not to be escaped.

He gave the mayor sufficient warning to shift for safety, if an unescapeable destiny had not halted him. Carew.

UNEXPECTED, adj. Not seen; undiscovered; undescried.

Treachery, guile, and deceit, are things which may for a while, but do not long go unexpected.

From living eyes her open shame to hide,
And live in rocks and caves long unexpected. Fairy Queen.

Nearer to view his prey, and unexpected
To mark what of their state he more might learn. Milton.

The second shaft came swift and unexpected;
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side. Dryden.

UNESSENTIAL, adj.

1. Not being of the last importance; not constituting essence.

Tillicon was moved rather with pity, than indignation, towards the persons of those who differed from him in the unesessential parts of Christianity.

2. Void of real being.

The void profound
Of unesessential night receives him next. Milton.

UNESTABLISHED, adj. Not established.

From plain principles, doubt may be fairly solved, and not clapp'd upon from petitory foundations unestablished. Brown.

UNEVEN, adj.

1. Not even; not level.

These high wild hills, and rough, uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome. Shakespeare.

Some said it was best to fight with the Turks in that uneven, mountain country, where the Turks chief strength consisted in the multitude of his horsemen, should stand him in small stead.

They made the ground uneven about their nest, inasmuch that the state did not lie flat.

2. Not suiting each other; not equal.

The Hebrew verse consists of uneven feet. Peacock.

UNEVENNESS, n. f.

1. Surface not level; inequality of surface.

This looseness of the foot, which yields to the ruggedness and unevenness of the roads, renders the feet less capable of being worn, than if they were more solid. Ray on the Creation.

That motion which can continue long in one and the same part of the body, can be propagated a long way from one part to another, supposing the body homogeneous; so that the motion may not be reflected, refracted, interrupted or disordered by any unevenness of the body. Newton.

2. Turbulence; changeable state.

Edward II. though an unfortunate prince, and by reason of the troubles and unevenness of his reign, the very law itself had many interruptions; yet it held its current in that state his father had left it in. Hale.

3. Not smoothness.

Notwithstanding any such unevenness or indistinctness in the style of those places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

UNEVITABLE, adj. [Inevitabilis, Lat. inevitable, Fr.] Inevitable; not to be escaped.

So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the unevitable Philoclea, but that her unwild presence gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning.

UNEVITABLE, adj. Not exacted; not taken by force.

All was common, and the fruitful earth
Was free, to give her unevitable birth. Dryden.

UNEVITABLY, adv. Not enquired; not tried; not discussed.

Yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd Untainted, unevitably, free at liberty. Shakespeare.

They utter all they think, with a violence and indisposition, unevitably, without relation to person, place, or stiness. B. Johnson.

The most pompous seeming knowledge, that is built on the unevitable prejudices of sense, stands not. Glanville.

Charles returned with unevitable love from Algiers. Raleigh.

O unevitable love!

Love no where to be found less than divine. Milton.

God vouchsaf'd Enoch an unevitable exemption from death. Boyle.

Your twice-conquer'd vassals, unevitable and Fidly, by your courage, then your clemency, to

Here humbly vow to sacrifice their lives, and

The gift of this your unevitable mercy,

To your command. Denham's Sophy.</

UNE

O unexpected stroke! worse than death!
Must I thus leave thee, paradise? Milton's Par. Lost.
Them unexpected joy surpriz'd,
When the great enigm of Messiah blaz'd. Milton.
Their unexpected loss and plaints out-breath'd. Milton.
Some amazement;
But such as sprung from wonder, not from fear,
To the pale foes they suddenly draw near,
And summon them to unexpected fight. Dryden.
Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow,
And turn'd him to his unexpected foe. Dryden.
When Barcelona was taken by a most unexpected accident of a bomb lighting on the magazine, then the Catalonians revolted. Swift.
UNEXPE'CTEDLY. adv. Suddenly; at a time unthought of.
Oft he seems to hide his face,
But unexpectedly returns. Milton's Agonistes.
A most bountiful present, when I was most in want of it, came most favourably and unexpectedly to my relief. Dryden.
If the comment be poured in unexpectedly upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.
You have fairer warning than others, who are unexpectedly
cut off. Wake.
My heart was filled with a deep melancholy, to see several dropping unexpectedly in the midst of mirth. Addison.
Though you went away to unexpectedly, yet we have informed ourselves of every thing that hath happened to you. Gay.
UNEXPE'CTEDNESS. n. f. Suddenness; unthought of time or manner.
He describes the unexpectedness of his appearance. Watts.
UNEXPE'RIENCED. adj. Not versed; not acquainted by trial or practice.
The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modestly, Irresolute, unhardy, unadventurous. Milton.
Long use may strengthen men against many such inconveniences, which, to unexperienc'd persons, may prove very hazardous. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
The pow'rs of Troy;
Not a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But a firm body of embattl'd men. Dryden.
These reproaches are the extravagant speeches of those un- experienc'd in the things they speak against. Tillotson.
Unexperienc'd young men, if unwarn'd, take one thing for another.
The smallest accident intervening, often produces such changes, that a wise man is just as much in doubt of events, as the most ignorant and unexperienc'd. Swift.
UNEXPE'DIENT. adj. Inconvenient; not fit.
The like would not be unexpedient after meat, to assist and cherish nature in her first concoction, and send their minds back to study in good tune. Milton on Education.
UNEXPE'RT. adj. [inexpertus, Lat.] Wanting skill or knowledge.
Receive the partner of my inmost soul:
Him you will find in letters, and in laws
Not unexpert. Prior.
UNEXPLORED. adj.
1. Not searched out.
Oh! say what stranger cause, yet unexplo'r'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope.
2. Not tried; not known.
Under thy friendly conduct will I fly,
To regions unexplo'r'd. Dryden.
UNEXPLORED. adj. Not laid open to censure.
They will endeavour to diminish the honour of the best traitor, rather than suffer the little mistakes of the author to pass unexplo'd. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
UNEXPRES'SIBLE. adj. Ineffable; not to be uttered.
What unexpressible comfort does overflow the pious soul, from a confidence of its own innocence. Tillotson.
UNEXPRES'SIVE. adj.
1. Not having the power of uttering or expressing. This is the natural and analogical signification.
2. Inexpressible; unutterable; ineffable; not to be expressed.
Improper, and out of use.
Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree
The fair, the chaste, and inexpressive the. Shakespeare.
With nectar pure his ouzy locks he laves,
And hears the inexpressive, nuptial song,
In the blest kingdoms, meek, of joy and love. Milton.
The helmeted cherubim,
And forward seraphim,
Are seen in glittering ranks, with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With inexpressive notes to heaven's new-born heir. Milton.
UNEXTENDED. adj. Occupying no assignable space; having no dimensions.
How inconceivable is it, that a spiritual, i. e. an unextended substance, should represent to the mind an extended one, as a triangle? Locke.

UNF

UNEXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [inextinguibile, Fr.] Unquenchable; not to be put out.
Pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us, without hope of end. Milton.
What native, unextinguishable beauty must be impressed through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth? Bentley.
UNEXTINGUISHED. adj. [inextinctus, Lat.]
1. Not quenched; not put out.
The souls, whom that unhappy flame invades,
Make endless moans, and, pining with desire,
Lament too late their unextinguish'd fire. Dryden.
Even o'er your cold, your ever-facred urn,
His constant flame, shall unextinguish'd burn. Lytton.
2. Not extinguishable.
An ardent thirst of honour; a soul unsatisfied with all it has done, and an unextinguish'd desire of doing more. Dryden.
UNFA'DED. adj. Not withered.
A lovely flow'r.
Unfaded yet, but yet unfed below,
No more to mother earth, or the green stem shall owe. Dryden.
UNFA'DING. adj. Not liable to wither.
For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms,
And wings of seraphs shed divine perfumes. Pope.
UNFA'ILING. adj. Certain; not missing.
Nothing the united voice of all history proclaims so loud, as the certain, unfailing curse, that has pursued and overtook sacrilege. South's Sermons.
Thou, secure of my unfailing word,
Compose thy swelling soul, and sheath the sword. Dryden.
UNFA'IR. adj. Disingenuous; fabulous; not honest.
You come, like an unfair merchant, to charge me with being in your debt. Swift.
UNFA'ITHFUL. adj.
1. Perfidious; treacherous.
If you break one jot of your promise, I will think you the most atheistical break-promise, and the most unworthy, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the un- faithful. Shakespeare.
My feet, through wine, unfaithful to their weight,
Betray'd me tumbling from a tow'ry height. Pope.
2. Impious; infidel.
Thence shall come
To judge th' unfaithful dead; but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNFA'ITHFULLY. adv. Treacherously; perfidiously.
There is danger of being unfaithfully counsel'd; and more for the good of them that counsel, than for him that is counselled. Bacon.
UNFA'ITHFULNESS. n. f. Treachery; perfidiousness.
As the obscurity of what some writers deliver, makes it very difficult to be understood; so the unfaithfulness of too many others, makes it unfit to be relied on. Boyle.
UNFA'LOWED. adj. Not followed.
Th' unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores
Of golden wheat. Phillips.
UNFAMILIAR. adj. Unaccustomed; such as is not common.
The matters which we handle, seem, by reason of newness, dark, intricate, unfamiliar. Hobbes, b. i.
Chaucer's uncouth, or rather unfamiliar, language, deters many readers. Warton's Spenser.
UNFA'SHIONABLE. adj. Not modish; not according to the reigning custom.
A man writes good sense, but he has not a happy manner of expression. Perhaps he uses obsolete and unfashionable language. Watts's Logic.
UNFA'SHIONABLENESS. n. f. Deviation from the mode.
Natural unfashionableness is much better than apish, affected postures. Locke.
UNFA'SHIONED. adj.
1. Not modified by art.
Mark but how terribly his eyes appear;
And yet there is something roughly noble there;
Which, in unfashion'd nature, looks divine,
And, like a gem, does in the quarry shine. Dryden.
2. Having no regular form.
A lifeless lump, unfashion'd and unfram'd,
Of jarring seeds, and justly chaos nam'd. Dryden.
UNFA'SHIONABLY. adv. [from unfashionable.]
1. Not according to the fashion.
2. Unartfully.
Deform'd, unfashion'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up;
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
To UNFA'STEN. v. a. To loose; to unfix.
He had no sooner unfastened his hold, but that a wave forcibly spoiled his weaker hand of hold. Sidney, b. ii.

UNF

His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend. Shakespeare.
Then in the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
Of mally iron, or solid rock, with ease Unfastens. Milton's Par. Lost. b. ii. l. 876.
UNFA'THERED. adj. Fatherless; having no father.
They do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakespeare.
UNFA'ITHOMABLE. n. f.
1. Not to be founded by a line.
In the midst of the plain a beautiful lake, which the inhabitants thereabouts pretend is unfathomable. Addison.
Beneath unfathomable depths they faint,
And secret in their gloomy caverns pant. Addison's Ovid.
2. That of which the end or extent cannot be found.
A thousand parts of our bodies may be diversified in all the dimensions of solid bodies; which overwhelms the fancy in a new abyss of unfathomable number. Bentley's Sermons.
UNFA'ITHOMABLY. adv. So as not to be founded.
Cover'd pits, unfathomably deep. Thomson.
UNFA'ITHOMED. adj. Not to be founded.
The Titan race
He fing'd with lightnings, rowl within the unfathom'd space. Dryden.
UNFATIGUED. adj. Unwearied; untired.
Over dank, and dry,
They journey toilsome, unfatigued with length
Of march. Phillips.
UNFA'VOURABLY. adv.
1. Unkindly; unpropitiously.
2. So as not to countenance, or support.
Bacon speaks not unfavourably of this. Glanville.
UNFEARED. adj.
1. Not frightened; intrepid; not terrified.
Just men
Though heaven should speak with all his wrath at once,
That with his breath the hinges of the world
Did crack, we should stand upright and unfear'd. B. Johnson.
UNFEASIBLE. adj. Impracticable.
UNFEATHERED. adj. Implumous; naked of feathers.
The mother nightingale laments alone;
Whose nest some prying churl had found, and thence
By stealth convey'd th' unfeather'd innocence. Dryden.
UNFEATUR'D. adj. Deformed; wanting regularity of features.
Vilage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.
UNFE'D. adj. Not supplied with food.
Each bone might through his body well be read,
And every finew leen through his long fast;
For nought he car'd, his carcals long unfed. Fairy Queen.
A grilly foaming wolf unfed. Rowe's Comm.
UNFEED. adj. Unpaid.
It is like the breath of an unfed lawyer; you gave me nothing for it. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
UNFEELING. adj. Insensible; void of mental sensibility.
Dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance,
Is made my goaler to attend on me. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
Unlucky Welford! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his fist the faster. Pope.
UNFEIGNED. adj. Not counterfeited; not hypocritical; real;
sincere.
Here I take the like unfeigned oath,
Never to marry her. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
Thousand deencies that daily flow
From all her words and actions, mix'd with love,
And sweet compliance, which declare unfeigned
Union of mind. Milton's Par. Lost.
Sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.
UNFEIGNEDLY. adv. Really; sincerely; without hypocrisy.
He pardoneth all them that truly repent, and unfeignedly believe his holy gospel. Common Prayer.
How should they be unfeignedly just, whom religion doth not cause to be such; or they religious, which are not found such by the proof of their just actions?
Prince dauphin, can you love this lady? —
I love her most unfeignedly. Shakespeare's K. John.
Thou hast brought me and my people unfeignedly to repent of the sins we have committed. K. Charles.
UNFE'LT. adj. Not felt; not perceived.
All my treasury
Is but yet unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompence. Shakespeare.
Her looks, from that time infused Sweetness into my heart, unfelt before. Milton's Par. Lost.
'Tis pleasant, safely to behold from shore
The rowling ships, and hear the tempest rear;

UNF

Not that another's pain is our delight,
But pains unfelt produce the pleasing light. Dryden.
UNFENC'D. adj.
1. Naked of fortification.
I'd play incessantly upon these jades;
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air. Shakespeare.
2. Not surrounded by any inclosure.
UNFERMENTED. adj. Not fermented.
All such vegetables must be unfermented; for fermentation changes their nature. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
UNFE'RTILE. adj. Not fruitful; not prolific.
Peace is not such a dry tree, such a sapless, unfertile thing, but that it might fructify and increase. Deacy of Piety.
To UNFE'TTER. v. a. To unchain; to free from shackles.
Unfetter me with speed.
I see you troubled that I bleed.
This most useful principle may be unfetter'd, and restored to its native freedom of exercise. Addison's Spectator.
The soul in these instances is not entirely loose and un- fetter'd from the body. Addison's Spectator.
Th' unfetter'd mind by thee sublim'd. Thomson.
UNFIGURED. adj. Representing no animal form.
In unfigured paintings the noblest is the imitation of marbles, and of architecture, as arches, freezes. Walton.
UNFILLED. adj. Not filled; not supplied.
Come not to table, but when thy need invites thee; and if thou beest in healthy, leave something of thy appetite un- filled. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
The air did not precisely fill up the vacuities of the vessel, since it left so many unfilled. Boyle.
The throne of my forefathers
Still stands unfill'd. Addison's Cato.
UNFIRM. adj.
1. Weak; feeble.
Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm
Than women's are. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
So is the unfirm king
In three divided; and his coffers found
With hollow poverty and emptiness. Shakespeare.
2. Not stable.
Take the time, while stagger'ing yet they stand,
With feet unfirm, and prepossess the strand. Dryden.
UNFIRMAL. adj. Unfuitable to a son.
You offer him a wrong,
Something unfirmal.
Teach the people, that to hope for heaven is a mercenary,
legal, and therefore unfirmal, affection. Boyle.
UNFIRMISHED. adj. Incomplete; not brought to an end; not brought to perfection; imperfect; wanting the last hand.
It is for that such outward ornament
Was lavish'd on their sex, that inward gifts
Were left for haite unfirmish'd. Milton.
I dedicate to you a very unfirmish'd piece. Dryden.
His hasty hand left his pictures unfirmish'd, that the beauty in the picture faded sooner than in the person after whom it was drawn. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 83.
This collection contains not only such pieces as come under our review, but many others, even unfirmish'd. Swift.
UNFIT. adj.
1. Improper; unsuitable.
They easily perceive how unfit that were for the present, which was for the first age convenient enough. Hobbes.
Neither can I think you would impose upon me an unfit and over-ponderous argument. Milton on Education.
2. Unqualified.
Unfit he was for any worldly thing,
And eke unable once to stir or go.
Old as I am, for ladies love unfit.
The pow'r of beauty I remember yet. Dryden.
A genius that can hardly take in the connection of three propositions, is utterly unfit for speculative studies. Watts.
To UNFI'T. v. a. To disqualify.
Those excellencies, as they qualified him for dominion, so they unfitted him for a satisfaction or acquiescence in his vassals. Government of the Tongue.
UNFITTING. adj. Not proper.
Although monosyllables, so rise in our tongue, are unfitting for verses, yet are they the most fit for expressing briefly the first conceits of the mind. Camden.
UNFITLY. adv. Not properly; not suitably.
Others, reading to the church those books which the apostles wrote, are neither untruly nor unfitly said to preach. Hobbes.
The kingdom of France may be not unfitly compared to a body that hath all its blood drawn up into the arms, breast and back. Howell.
UNFITNESS. n. f.
1. Want of qualifications.
In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant minister. Hobbes.

UNG

To UNGUARD. v. a. To loose any thing bound with a girdle.
The man ungirded his camels, and gave them straw and provender. Gen. xxiv. 32.

The blest parent
Ungirt her spacious bosom, and discharg'd
The pond'rous birth. Prior.

Ungirt. adj. Loosely dressed.
One tender foot was bare, the other shod;
Her robe ungirt. Waller.

Mulciber assigns the proper place
For Carians, and th' ungirt Numidian race. Dryden.

UNGLO'RI'FIED. adj. Not honoured; not exalted with praise and adoration.

Left God should be any way unglorified, the greatest part of our daily service consisteth, according to the blessed apostle's own precise rule, in much variety of palms and hymns; that out of so plentiful a treasure, there might be for every man's heart to chuse out for his own sacrifice. Hooker.

UNGLO'VED. adj. Having the hand naked.
When we were come near to his chair, he stood up, holding forth his hand ungloved, and in posture of blessing. Bacon.

UNGIVING. adj. Not bringing gifts.
In vain at shrines th' ungiving suppliant stands:
This 'tis to make a vow with empty hands. Dryden.

To UNGIVE. v. a. To loose any thing cemented.
Small rains relax and ungive the earth, to give vent to inflamed atoms. Harvey on the Plague.

She stretches, gapes, ungives her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.

To UNGOD. v. a. To divest of divinity.
T' ungod this child again, it could not be
I should love her, who loves not me. Denne.

Thus men ungodded may to places rise,
And sects may be prefer'd without disguise. Dryden.

UNGODDILY. adv. Impiously; wickedly.
'Tis but an ill essay of that godly fear, to use that very gospel so irreverently and ungodly. Government of the Tongue.

UNGODLINESS. n. f. Impiety; wickedness; neglect of God.
How grossly do many of us contradict the plain precepts of the gospel by our ungodliness and worldly lusts? Tillotson.

UNGODLY. adj.
1. Wicked; negligent of God and his laws.
His just, avenging ire,
Had driven out th' ungodly from his sight,
And the habitations of the just. Milton's Par. Lost.

The finner here intended is the ungodly finner: he who forgets or defies his God. Rogers.

2. Polluted by wickedness.
Let not the hours of this ungodly day
Wear out in peace. Shakespeare.

UNGODRED. adj. Unwounded; unhurt.
I stand aloof, and will no reconciliation;
'Till by some elder masters of known honour,
I have a voice and precedent of peace,
To keep my name ungodred. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

UNGODGED. adj. Not filled; not fated.
The hell-hounds, as ungodged with flesh and blood, Pursue their prey. Dryden.

Oh ungodred appetite! Oh ravenous thirst
Of a son's blood. Smith's Phœdra and Hippolytus.

UNGOVERNABLE. adj.
1. Not to be ruled; not to be refrained.
They'll judge every thing by models of their own; and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority, and ungovernable by other laws, but those of the sword. Glanville.

2. Licentious; wild; unbridled.
So wild and ungovernable a poet, cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.

He was free from any rough, ungovernable passions, which hurry men on to say and do very offensive things. Atterbury.

UNGOVERNED. adj.
1. Being without government.
The estate is yet ungovern'd. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

It pleases God above,
And all good men of this ungovern'd ile. Shakespeare.

2. Not regulated; unbridled; licentious.
Seek for him,
Left his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
That wants the means to lead it. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Themselves they villify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite. Milton's Par. Lost.

Nor what to bid, or what forbid, he knows;
Th' ungovern'd tempest to such fury grows. Dryden.

From her own back the burthen would remove,
And lays the load on his ungovern'd love. Dryden.

UNGO'RT. adj.
1. Not gained; not acquired.
He is as free from touch or soil with her,
As she from one ungot. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

2. Not begotten.

UNG

His loins yet full of ungot princes; all His glory in the bud. Waller.

UNGRA'CEFUL. adj. Wanting elegance; wanting beauty.
Raphael answer'd heav'n,
Nor are thy lips ungraceful, fire of men. Milton.

A solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, it will be contrained, uneasy, and ungraceful. Locke.

He enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense, and the most exquisite taste of politeness. Without the first learning is but an incumbrance; and without the last is ungraceful. Addison.

UNGRA'CEFULNESS. n. f. Inelegance; awkwardness.
To attempt the putting another genius upon him, will be labour in vain; and what is to be plaitered on, will have always hanging to it the ungracefulness of constraint. Locke.

UNGRA'CIOUS. adj.
1. Wicked; odious; hateful.
He, catching hold of her ungracious tongue,
Thereon an iron lock did fasten firm and strong. Spenser.

I'll in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the fight
Of the death-practis'd duke. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Shew me the steep and thorny way to heav'n;
Whilt he, a put and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own rede. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

To the gods alone
Our future offspring, and our wives are known;
Th' audacious trumpet, and ungacious son. Dryden.

2. Offensive; unpleasing.
Show me no parts which are ungacious to the fight, as all pre-shortenings usually are. Dryden.

3. Unacceptable; not favoured.
They did not except against the persons of any, though several were most ungacious to them. Clarendon.

Any thing of grace towards the Irish rebels, was as ungacious at Oxford, as at London. Clarendon.

Neither is it rare to observe among excellent and learned divines, a certain ungacious manner, or an unhappy tone of voice, which they never have been able to shake off. Swift.

UNGRA'NTED. adj. Not given; not yielded; not bestowed.
This only from your goodness let me gain,
And this ungranted, all rewards are vain. Dryden.

UNGRA'TEFUL. adj.
1. Making no returns, or making ill returns for kindness.
No person is remarkably ungrateful, who was not also insufferably proud. South.

2. Making no returns for culture.
Most when driv'n by winds, the flaming form
Of the long files destroys the beauteous form;
Nor will the wither'd stock be green again;
But the wild olive shoots, and shades th' ungrateful plain. Dryden.

3. Unpleasing; unacceptable.
It cannot be ungrateful, or without some pleasure to posterity, to see the exact relation of an action to full of danger. Clarendon.

What is in itself harsh and ungrateful, must make harsh and ungrateful impressions upon us. Atterbury.

UNGRA'TEFULLY. adv.
1. With ingratitude.
When call'd to distant war,
His vanquish'd heart remain'd a victim here:
Oriana's eyes that glorious conquest made;
Nor was his love ungratefully repaid. Glanville.

We often receive the benefit of our prayers, when yet we ungratefully charge heaven with denying our petitions. Wake.

2. Unacceptably; unpleasing.
UNGRA'TEFULNESS. n. f.

1. Ingratitude; ill return for good.
Can I, without the detestable stain of ungratefulness, abstain from loving him, who, far exceeding the beauty of his shape with the beauty of his mind, is content to to abuse himself as to become Dametas's servant for my sake. South.

2. Unacceptableness; unpleasing quality.
UNGRA'VELY. adv. Without seriousness.

His present portance Gibingly, and ungravelly, he did fashion. Shakespeare.

UNGROU'NDED. adj. Having no foundation.
Ignorance, with an indifference for truth, is nearer to it than opinion with ungrounded inclination, which is the great source of error. Locke.

This is a confidence the most ungrounded and irrational. For upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity? South.

UNGROU'NGLY. adv. Without ill will; willingly; heartily; cheerfully.
If, when all his art and time is spent,
He say 'twill ne'er be found, yet be content;
Receive from him the doom ungroundingly,
Because he is the mouth of destiny. Denne.

UNGUARDED. adj.

UNH

UNGUARDED. adj.
1. Undefended.
Proud art thou met? Thy hope was to have reach'd
The throne of God unguarded, and his side Abandon'd. Milton's Par. Lost. b. vi. l. 133.

All through th' unguarded gates with joy resort,
To see the slighted camp, the vacant port. Denham.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryden.

2. Careless; negligent.
All the evils that proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Taylor.

The spy, which does this treasure keep,
Does she ne'er say her pray'rs, nor sleep?
Or have not gold and datt'ry pow'r,
To purchase one unguarded hour? Prior.

With an unguarded look she now devour'd
My nearer face; and now recall'd her eye,
And heav'd, and strove to hide a sudden sigh. Prior.

It was intended only to divert a few young ladies, of good sense and good humour enough to laugh not only at their sex's little unguarded follies, but at their own. Pope.

Are we not encompassed by multitudes, who watch every careless word, every unguarded action of our lives? Rogers.

UNGUARDED. adj. Not directed; not regulated.
The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
In forms imaginary, th' unguarded days,
And rotten times that you shall look upon,
When I am sleeping with my ancestors. Shakespeare.

Can unguarded matter keep itself to such exact conformities, as not in the least spot to vary from the species? Glanville.

They resolve all into the accidental, unguarded motions of blind matter. Locke.

Nature, void of choice,
Does by unguarded motion things produce,
Regardless of their order. Blackmore on the Creation.

UNGUENT. n. f. [unquantum, Lat.] Ointment.
Pre-occupation of mind ever requirerh preface of speech, like a fomentation to make the unguent enter. Bacon.

There is an intercourse between the magnetick unguent and the vulnerated body. Glanville.

With unguent smooth, the lucid marble stone. Pope.

UNGUERSED. adj. Not attained by conjecture.
He me sent, for cause to me unguers'd. Fairy Queen.

UNHABITABLE. adj. [inhabitable, Fr. inhabitable, Lat.] Not capable to support inhabitants; uninhabitable.
The night and day was always a natural day of twenty-four hours, in all places remote from the unhabitable poles of the world, and winter and summer always measured a year. Haller.

Though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropicks, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams, unhabitable, or extremely hot. Roy.

UNHACKED. adj. Not cut; not hewn; not notched with cuts.
With a blessed, and unwe' d retire,
With unhack'd fowls, and helmets all unbruis'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shakespeare.

Part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our targe undinted. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

To UNHALLOW. v. a. To deprive of holiness; to profane; to desecrate.
Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, forestaff'd fruit;
Profan'd first by the serpent; by him first Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milton.

The vanity unhallow'd the virtue. L'Estrange.

This one use left such an indelible sacredness upon them, that the impiety of the design could be no sufficient reason to unhallow and degrade them to common use. South.

UNHALLOWED. adj. Unholy; profane.
Thy curill spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who hang'd for human slaughter:
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell foul fleet;
And while thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam Infus'd itself in thee. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

I had not unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that this juggler
Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules, prack'd in reason's garb. Milton.

Nor shall presume to violate these bands,
Or touch thy person with unhallow'd hands. Dryden.

Here cease thy flight, nor with unhallow'd lays Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days. Pope.

To UNHAND. v. a. To loose from the hand.
Still am I call'd. Unhand me, gentlemen. Shakespeare.

UNHANDLED. adj. Not handled; not touched.
A race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

Cardinal Campeius
Hath left the cause o' th' king unbandled. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.

UNHANDSOME. n. f.
1. Ungraceful; not beautiful.
I was glad I had done so good a deed for a gentlewoman not unhandsome, whom before I had in like sort helped. Sidney.

She that so far the rest out-shin'd;
Silvia the fair, while she was kind,
Seems only not unhandsome now. Waller.

As I cannot admit that there is any thing unhandsome or irregular; so much less can I grant that there is any thing incommensurable in the globe. Woodward.

2. Illiberal; disingenuous.
UNHANDSOMELY. adv. [from unhandsome.]

1. Inelegantly; ungracefully.
The ruined churches are so unhandsomely patched and thatched, that men do even than the places for the uncomeliness thereof. Spenser.

2. Disingenuously; illiberally.
He raves, Sir, and to cover my disdain,
Unhandsomely would his denial feign. Dryden.

UNHANDSOMENESS. n. f. [from unhandsome.]

1. Want of beauty.
The sweetness of her countenance did give such a grace to what she did, that it did make handsome the unhandsomeness of it; and make the eye force the mind to believe, that there was a praise in that unskillfulness. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Want of elegance.
Be not troublesome to thyself, or to others, by unhandsomeness or uncleanness. Taylor.

3. Illiberality; disingenuity.
UNHANDY. adj. Awkward; not dexterous.

UNHANGED. adj. Not put to death by the gallows.
There live not three good men unhang'd in England. Shakespeare.

UNHAPP. n. f. Misluck; ill fortune.
She visited that place, where first she was so happy as to see the cause of her unhap. Sidney.

UNHAPPY. adj. [This word seems a participle from unhappy, which yet is never used as a verb.] Made unhappy.
You have milled a prince,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineament,
By you unhappy, and disfigur'd clean. Shakespeare.

UNHAPPILY. adv. [from unhappy.] Miserably; unfortunately; wretchedly; calamitously.
You hold a fair assembly: you do well, lord:
You are a churchman, or I'll tell you, cardinal,
I should judge now most unhappily. Shakespeare.

He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry. Clarendon.

I unwitting have offended,
Unhappily deceiv'd! Milton's Par. Lost.

There is a day a coming, when all these witty fools shall be unhappily undeceived. Tillotson's Sermons.

UNHAPPINESS. n. f.

1. Misery; infelicity.
If ever he have child, abortive be it;
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,
And that be heir to his unhappiness. Shakespeare.

The real foundation of our unhappiness would be laid in our reason, and we should be more miserable than the beasts, by how much we have a quicker apprehension. Tillotson.

It is our great unhappiness, when any calamities fall upon us, that we are uneasy, and dissatisfied. Wake.

2. Calamity; distress.
She hath often dream'd of unhappiness, and waked herself with laughing. Shakespeare. Much Ado about Nothing.

3. Misfortune; ill luck.
St. Austin hath laid down a rule to this purpose, though he had the unhappiness not to follow it always himself. Burner.

UNHAPPY. adj. Wretched; miserable; unfortunate; calamitous; distressed.
Desire of wand'ring this unhappy morn.
You know not, while you here attend,
Th' unworthy fate of your unhappy friend:
Breathless he lies, and his unbury'd ghost
Depriv'd of funeral rites. Dryden.

To UNHARBOUR. v. a. To drive from shelter.
UNHARBURED. adj. Affording no shelter.
'Tis chastity:
She that has that is clad in complete steel;
And, like a quiver'd nymph, with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests, and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and Andy perilous wilds. Milton.

UNHARDENED. adj. Not confirmed; not made hard.
Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth. Shakespeare.

UNHARDY. adj. Feeble; tender; timorous.
'Tis the wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever Tim'rous and loth, with novice modestly;
Irresolute, unhardy, undaunt'rous. Milton.

U N H

UNHARMED. adj. Unhurt; not injured.
 In strong proof of chastity well armed,
 From love's weak, childish bow the lives unharmed. Shakesp.
 Though great light be insufferable to our eyes; yet the highest degree of darkness does not diseafe them, for causing no disorderly motion, it leaves that curious organ unharmed. Locke.
 The Syrens once deluded, vainly charm'd;
 Ty'd to the mast, Ulysses sail'd unharmed. Graville.
UNHARMFUL. adj. Innoxious; innocent.
 Themselves unharmed, let them live unharmed;
 Their jaws disabled, and their claws disarm'd. Dryden.
UNHARMONIOUS. adj.
 1. Not symmetrical; disproportioned.
 Those pure, immortal elements, that know
 No gross, no unharmonious mixture foul,
 Eject him, tainted now, and purge him off. Milton.
 2. Unmusical; ill-sounding.
 His thoughts are improper to his subject, his expressions unworthy of his thoughts, or the turn of both is unharmonious. Dryden.
 That barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of verses, has formed harsh, unharmonious sounds. Swift.
TO UNHARMLESS. v. a.
 1. To loose from the traces.
 The sweating steers unharmed from the yoke,
 Bring back the crooked plough. Dryden.
 The mules unharmed range beside the main.
 If there were fix hories, the postillion always unhar-mous. Swift.
 2. To disarm; to divest of armour.
UNHARMED. adj. Not adventured; not put in danger.
 Here I shou'd still enjoy thee day and night
 Whole to myself, unharmed abroad,
 Fearless at home. Milton's Agonistes, l. 807.
UNHARMED. adj.
 1. Not disclosed from the eggs.
 2. Not brought to light.
 Some unharmed practice
 Hath puddled his clear spirit. Shakespeare.
UNHEALTHFUL. adj. Morbid; unwholesome.
 The diseases which make years unhealthful, are spotted fevers; and the unhealthful season is the autumn. Graville.
 At every sentence let his life at stake,
 Though the discourse were of no weightier things,
 Than sultry summers, or unhealthful springs. Dryden.
UNHEALTHY. adj. Sickly; wanting health.
 No body would have a child cream'd at breakfast, who would not have him dull and unhealthy. Locke on Education.
 He, intent on somewhat that may ease
 Unhealthy mortals, and with curious search Examines all the properties of herbs. Philips.
TO UNHEART. v. a. To discourage; to deprecate.
 To bite his lip,
 And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me. Shakesp.
UNHEARD. adj.
 1. Not perceived by the ear.
 For the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
 Their childrens cries unheard. Milton's Par. Lost.
 2. Not vouchsafed an audience.
 What pangs I feel, unpitied and unheard!
 3. Unknown in celebration.
 Nor was his name unheard, or unador'd. Milton.
UNHEARD OF. adj. Obscure; not known by fame.
 Free from hopes or fears, in humble ease,
 Unheard of may I live and die in peace. Graville.
 5. Unheard of. Unprecedented.
 There is a foundation laid for the most unheard of confusion that ever was introduced into a nation. Swift.
UNHEATED. adj. Not made hot.
 Neither salts, nor the distilled spirits of them can penetrate the narrow pores of unheated glass. Boyle.
UNHEED. adj. Disregarded; not thought worthy of notice.
 True experiments may, by reason of the easy mistake of some unheeded circumstance, be unsuccessfully tried. Boyle.
 He of his fatal guile gave proof unheeded. Milton.
 Her hair
 In a simple knot was ty'd above;
 Sweet negligence! unheeded bait of love. Dryden.
 The triumph ceas'd—tears gush'd from ev'ry eye,
 The world's great victor pass'd unheeded by. Pope.
UNHEEDING. adj. Negligent; careless.
 I have not often seen him; if I did,
 He pass'd unmark'd by my unheeding eyes. Dryden.
UNHEEDY. adj. Precipitate; sudden.
 Learning his ship from those white rocks to save,
 Which all along the southern sea-coast lay,
 Threat'ning unheedy wrecks, and rash decay,
 He nam'd Albion. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 1.

U N H

Nor hath love's mind of any judgment taste;
 Wings and no eyes, figure unheedy haite. Shakesp.
 So have I seen some tender slip,
 Sav'd with care from winter's nip;
 The pride of her carnation train
 Pluck'd up by some unheedy swain. Milton.
TO UNHEED. v. a. To uncover; to expose to view.
UNHEED. adj. Unafflicted; having no auxiliary; unsupported.
 Unhe'd I am, who pity'd the distress'd,
 And none oppressing, am by all oppress'd. Dryden.
UNHELPFUL. adj. Giving no assistance.
 I bewail good Gloster's case
 With sad, unhelpful tears. Shakesp. Hen. VII.
UNHEWN. part. adj. Not hewn.
 In occasions of meritment, this rough-cast, unheewn poetry, was instead of stage plays. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
UNHINDERED. adj. Lax of maw; capacious.
 Though plenteous, all too little seems
 To stuff this maw, this vast, unhinder'd corps. Milton.
TO UNHINGE. v. a.
 1. To throw from the hinges.
 2. To displace by violence.
 For want of cement, ribs of rock disjoin'd
 Without an earthquake, from their base would start,
 And hills unbing'd, from their deep roots depart. Blackmore.
 3. To disorder; to confuse.
 Rather than not accomplish my revenge,
 Just or unjust, I would the world unbinge. Waller.
 If God's providence did not order it, cheats would not only justle private men out of their rights, but unbinge states, and run all into confusion. Ray on the Creation.
UNHOLINESS. n. f. Impiety; profaneness; wickedness.
 Too foul and manifest was the unholiness of obtruding upon men remission of sins for money. Raleigh.
UNHOLY. adj.
 1. Profane; not hallowed.
 Doth it follow that all things now in the church are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.
 2. Impious; wicked.
 We think not ourselves the holier, because we use it; so neither should they with whom no such thing is in use, think us therefore unholy, because we submit ourselves unto that, which, in a matter so indifferent, the wisdom of authority and law have thought comely. Hooker.
 From the paradise of God,
 Without remorse, drive out the sinful pair,
 Fern hallow'd ground th' unholy. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Far other dreams my erring foul employ;
 Far other raptures of unholy joy. Pope.
UNHONOURED. adj.
 1. Not regarded with veneration; not celebrated.
 Unhonour'd though I am, at least, said fine,
 Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.
 Pales unhonour'd, Ceres unemploy'd,
 Were all forgot. Dryden.
 2. Not treated with respect.
 Grieved that a visitant so long shou'd wait,
 Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate. Pope.
TO UNHOPE. v. a. To divert of hopes.
 Unhope the fair sex, and cure this fashionable tympany got among them. Addison's Spectator, No. 127.
UNHOPEFUL. adj. Not expected; greater than hope had UNHOPEFUL for } promised.
 With unhop'd success
 Th' embassadors return with promiss'd peace. Dryden.
 Heav'n has inspir'd with a sudden thought,
 Whence your unhop'd-for safety may be wrought. Dryden.
UNHOPESFUL. adj. Such as leaves no room to hope.
 Benedic't is not the unhop'esfullest husband that I know; thus far I can praise him; he is of approved valour. Shakesp.
 I thought the routing style I wrote in, might prove no un-hopeful way to procure somewhat considerable from those great masters of chymical arcana. Boyle.
TO UNHORS. v. a. To beat from an horse; to throw from the saddle.
 He would unhorse the lustiest challenger. Shakespeare.
 The emperor rescued a noble gentleman, whom unhors'd and sore wounded, the enemy was ready to have slain. Kneller.
 On a fourth he flies, and him unhorses too. Daniel.
 They are forc'd
 To quit their boats, and fare like men unhors'd. Waller.
 The knights unhors'd may rise from off the plain.
 And fight on foot, their honour to regain. Dryden.
UNHOSPITABLE. adj. Unhospitable; Lat.] Affording no kindness or entertainment to strangers; cruel; barbarous.
 The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
 Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast. Dryden.
UNHOSPITABLE. adj. Not belonging to an enemy.
 The high-prancing steeds
 Spurn their dismounted riders; they expire Indignant, by unhospitable wounds destroy'd. Philips.

U N I

TO UNHOUSE. v. a. To drive from the habitation.
 Seek true religion: O where? Mirreus!
 Thinking her unhouse'd here, and fled from us,
 Seek her at Rome. Donne.
 Death unawares with his cold, kind embrace,
 Unhouse'd thy virgin soul from her fair biding place. Milton.
UNHOUSE. adj.
 1. Homeless; wanting a house.
 Call the creatures,
 Whose naked natures live in all the sight
 Of wreckful heav'n; whose bare, unhouse'd trunks,
 To the conflicting elements expos'd,
 Answer meer nature. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
 2. Having no settled habitation.
 But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
 I would not my unhouse'd, free condition
 Put into circumscription and confine. Shakespeare. Othello.
 Hear this,
 You unhouse'd, lawless, rambling libertines. Southern.
UNHOUSELESS. adj. Having not the sacrament.
 Thus was I deeping, by a brother's hand,
 Of life, of crown, of queen at once dispatch'd;
 Cut off even in the blossoms of my fire,
 Unhouse'd, unanointed, unanell'd. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
UNHOUSELESS. adj. Not humbled; not touched with shame or confusion.
 Should I of these the liberty regard,
 Who, freed as to their ancient patrimony,
 Unhumbled, unrepented, unreformed,
 Headlong would follow. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
UNHURT. adj. Free from harm.
 Of fifteen hundred, eight hundred were slain in the field;
 and of the remaining seven hundred, two men only came off unhurt. Bacon's War with Spain.
 I tread more lightly on the ground;
 My nimble feet from unhurt flow'r's rebound;
 I walk in air. Dryden's State of Innocence.
 Supported by thy care,
 Through burning climes I pass'd unhurt;
 And breath'd in tainted air. Addison's Spectator.
 The stars shall fade away;
 But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
 Unhurt, amidst the war of elements.
 The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addison.
UNHURTFUL. adj. Innoxious; harmless; doing no harm.
 You hope the duke will return no more, or
 You imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. Shakespeare.
 Flames unhurtful, hovering, dance in air. Blackmore.
UNHURTFULLY. adv. Without harm; innocently.
 We laugh at others as innocently and as unhurtfully, as at ourselves. Pope to Swift.
UNICORN. n. f. [unicornis, unus and cornu, Lat.]
 1. A beast, whether real or fabulous, that has only one horn.
 Wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
 Unicorn may be betray'd with treachery. Shakespeare.
 Bears with glasse, men with flatterers.
 Nature in coniferous animals hath placed the horns inverted upwards, as in the rhinoceros, Indian ass, and unicorn beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 It is not of consequence, that because Dioscorides hath made no mention of unicorn horn, there is therefore no such thing in nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Some unicorns we will allow even among insects, as those malicious beetles described by Muffetus. Brown.
 Will the fierce unicorn thy voice obey,
 Stand at the crib, and feed upon the hay? Sandys.
 2. A bird.
 Of the unicorn bird, the principal marks are these; headed and footed like the doughty cock, tailed like a goose, horned on his forehead, with some likeness, as the unicorn is pictured;
 spur'd on his wings, bigger than a swan. Grew.
UNIFORM. adj. [unus and forma.]
 1. Keeping its tenour; similar to itself.
 Though when constantly mingled, as in this stratum, it may put on a face never so uniform and alike, yet it is in reality very different.
 2. Conforming to one rule; acting in the same manner; agreeing with each other.
 The only doubt is about the manner of their unity, how far churches are bound to be uniform in their ceremonies, and what way they ought to take for that purpose. Hooker.
 Creatures of what condition soever, though each in different manner, yet all with uniform consent, admire her, as the mother of their peace and joy. Hooker.
 Numbers, being neither uniform in their designs, nor direct in their views, neither could manage nor maintain the power they got. Swift.
UNIFORMITY. n. f. [uniformitas, Fr.]
 1. Resemblance to itself; even tenour.
 There is no uniformity in the design of Spenser; he aims at the accomplishment of no one action. Dryden.

U N I

Queen Elizabeth was remarkable for that steadiness and uniformity which ran through all her actions. Addison.
 2. Conformity to one pattern; resemblance of one to another.
 The unity of that visible body and church of Christ, con-sisteth in that uniformity, which all the several persons there-unto belonging have, by reason of that one Lord, whose servants they all profess themselves; that one faith which they all acknowledge; that one baptism wherewith they are all initiated. Hooker, b. iii.
UNIFORMLY. adv. [from uniform.]
 1. Without variation; in an even tenour.
 That faith received from the apostles, the church, though dispersed throughout the world, doth notwithstanding keep as safe, as if it dwelt within the walls of some one house, and as uniformly hold, as if it had but one only heart and soul. Hooker, b. v.
 The capillamenta of the nerves are each of them solid and uniform; and the vibrating motion of the æthereal medium may be propagated along them from one end to the other uniformly, and without interruption. Newton's Opticks.
 2. Without diversity of one from another.
UNIMAGINABLE. adj. Not to be imagined by the fancy;
 not to be conceived.
 Things to their thought are unimagined and So unimaginable, as hate in heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The skilful organist plies his grave-fancied defecant in lofty fugues, or the whole symphony, with artful and unimaginable touches, adorns and graces the well-studied chords of some choice compoter. Milton on Education.
 An infinite succession of the generations of men, without any permanent foundation, is utterly unimaginable. Tilleyson.
UNIMAGINABLY. adv. To a degree not to be imagined.
 Little commissures, where they adhere, may not be porous enough to be pervious to the unimaginably subtle corpules, that make up the beams of light. Boyle.
UNIMITABLE. adj. [inimitable, Fr. inimitabilis, Lat.] Not to be imitated.
 Both these are unimitable. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
UNIMORTAL. adj. Not immortal; mortal.
 They betook them several ways,
 Both to destroy, or unimortal make. Milton.
UNIMPAIRABLE. adv. Not liable to waste or diminution.
 If the superior be unimpairable, it is a strong presumption, that the inferiors are likewise unimpaired. Hooker, b. iv.
UNIMPAIRED. adj. Not diminished; not worn out.
 Yet unimpaired with labours, or with time,
 Your age but seems to a new youth to climb. Dryden.
 If our silver and gold diminishes, our publick credit continues unimpaired. Addison on the State of the War.
UNIMPROVED. adj. Not solicited.
 If answerable stile I can obtain
 Of my celestial patroness, who deigns
 Her nightly visitation unimprov'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNIMPROVABLE. adj. Assuming no airs of dignity.
 A free, unimportant, natural, easy manner; diverting others just as we diverted ourselves. Pope to Swift.
UNIMPROVABLENESS. n. f. [from unimprovable.] Quality of not being improvable.
 This must be imputed to their ignorance and unimprovableness in knowledge, being generally without literature. Ham.
UNIMPROVED. adj.
 1. Not made more knowing.
 Not a mark went unimprov'd away. Pope.
 2. Not taught; not meliorated by instruction.
 Young Fortinbras,
 Of unimproved mettle hot and full. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
 Shallow, unimproved intellects, are confident pretenders to certainty. Glanville.
UNINCREASABLE. adj. Admitting no increase.
 That love, which ought to be appropriated to God, results chiefly from an altogether, or almost unincreasable elevation and vastness of affection. Boyle.
UNINDIFFERENT. adj. Partial; leaning to a side.
 His opinion touching the catholic church was as unindifferent, as touching our church, the opinion of them that favour this pretended reformation is. Hooker, b. iv.
UNINDUSTRIOUS. adj. Not diligent; not laborious.
 Pride we cannot think to sluggish or unindustrious an agent, as not to find out expedients for its purpose. Deacy of City.
UNINFLAMMABLE. adj. Not capable of being set on fire.
 The uninflamnable spirit of such concretes, may be pretended to be but a mixture of phlegm and salt. Boyle.
UNINFLAMMED. adj. Not set on fire.
 When weak bodies come to be inflamed, they gather a much greater heat than others have uninflamed. Bacon.

UNI

UNINFORMED, adj.

1. Untaught; uninstructed.

Not uninstructed.
Of nuptial sanctity, and marriage rites. Milton's P. Lost.
No uninstructed minds can represent virtue so noble to us, that we necessarily add splendour to her. Pope.

2. Unanimous; not enlivened.

UNINGUOUS, adj. Illiberal; disingenuous.
Did men know how to distinguish between reports and certainties, this stratagem would be as unskillful, as it is un- ingenuous. Decay of Piety.

UNINHABITABLE, adj. Unfit to be inhabited.
If there be any place upon earth of that nature that paradise had, the same must be found within that supposed un- inhabitable burnt zone, or within the tropics. Raleigh.

Had not the deep been form'd, that might contain
All the collected treasures of the main;
The earth had fill'd o'erwhelm'd with water flood,
To man an uninhabitable flood. Blackmore.

UNINHABITABLENESS, n. f. Incapacity of being inhabited.
Divers radicant opinions, such as that of the uninhabitable- ness of the torrid zone, of the solidity of the celestial part of the world, are generally grown out of request. Boyle.

UNINHABITED, adj. Having no dwellers.
The whole island is now uninhabited. Sandys.

Uninhabited, unskill'd, unlearn'd.
It lies, and breeds the bleating goat alone. Pope.

I cast anchor on the lee-side of the island, which seem'd to be uninhabited. Gulliver's Travels.

UNINJURED, adj. Unhurt; suffering no harm.
You may as well spread out the unfin'd heaps
Of misers treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe; as bid me hope
Danger will let a helpless maiden pass,
Uninjur'd in this wild, furrounding waste. Milton.

Then in full age, and hoary holiness
Retire, great teacher! to thy promis'd bliss:
Untouch'd thy tomb, uninjur'd be thy dust,
As thy own fame among the future just. Prior.

UNINSCRIBED, adj. Having no inscription.
Make sacred Charles's tomb for ever known;
Obscure the place, and uninscrib'd the stone. Pope.

Oh fact accurs!
UNINSPIRED, adj. Not having received any supernatural instruction or illumination.

Thus all the truths that men, uninspired, are enlightened with, came into their minds. Locke.

My pastoral muse her humble tribute brings,
And yet not wholly uninspir'd the fings. Dryden.

And uninstructed how to stem the tide,
That fool intrudes, raw in this great affairs. Dryden.

It will be a prejudice to none but widows and orphans, and others uninstructed in the arts and management of more skillful men. Locke.

It is an unspeakable blessing to be born in those parts where wisdom flourishes; though there are even in these parts, several poor, uninstructed persons. Addison.

Though we find few amongst us, who profess themselves Anthropomorphites, yet we may find, amongst the ignorant and uninstructed christians, many of that opinion. Locke.

UNINSTRUCTIVE, adj. Not conferring any improvement.
Were not men of abilities thus communicative, their wisdom would be in a great measure useless, and their experience uninstructive. Addison.

UNINTELLIGENT, adj. Not knowing; not skillful; not having any consciousness.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses may be unintelligent of our insinuation. Shakspeare, Winter Tale.

The visible creation is far otherwise apprehended by the philosophical enquirer, than the unintelligent vulgar. Glanville.

This conclusion, if men allow'd of, they would not destroy ill-formed productions. Ay, but these monsters. Let them be so; what will your drivelling, unintelligent, untractable changeling be? Locke.

Why then to works of nature is assign'd
An author unintelligent and blind;
When ours proceed from choice? Blackmore.

The obvious products of unintelligent nature. Bentl.

UNINTELLIGIBILITY, n. f. Quality of not being intelligible.
Credit the unintelligibility of this union and motion. Glanville.

If we have truly proved the unintelligibility of it in all other ways, this argumentation is undeniable. Barnet.

UNINTELLIGIBLE, adj. [unintelligibilis, Fr.] Not such as can be understood.

The Latin, three hundred years before Tully, was as un- intelligible in his time, as the English and French of the same period are now. Swift.

Did Thersi
These arms thus labour'd for her son prepare;
For that dull soul to stare with stupid eyes,
On the learn'd unintelligible prize! Dryden.

UNI

This notion must be desisted as harmless, unintelligible enthusiasm.

UNINTELLIGIBLY, adv. In a manner, not to be understood.

Sound is not unintelligibly explained by a vibrating motion communicated to the medium.

To talk of specific differences in nature, without reference to general ideas, is to talk unintelligibly. Locke.

UNINTENTIONAL, adj. Not designed; happening without design.

Besides the unintentional deficiencies of my style, I have purposely transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods over-long. Boyle.

UNINTERESTED, adj. Not having interest.

The greatest part of an audience is always uninterested, though seldom knowing.

UNINTERMITTED, adj. Continued; not interrupted.

This motion of the heavenly bodies seems to be partly continued and uninterrupted, as that motion of the first moveable partly interpolated and interrupted. Hale's Origin.

UNINTERMIXED, adj. Not mingled. Swift's Sermon.

Unintermix'd with fictitious fantasies,
I verify the truth, not poetize. Daniel's Civil War.

UNINTERRUPTED, adj. Not broken; not interrupted.

Thy constant quiet fills my peaceful breast
With unmixt joy, uninterrupted rest. Roscommon.

Governments so divided amongst themselves in matters of religion, maintain uninterrupted union and correspondence; that no one of them is for invading the rights of another. Addi- son.

The hills rise infinitely, and leave the eye a vast, uninter- rupted prospect.

The uninterrupted stitch in superficial wounds, is rejected. Sharp's Surgery.

UNINTERRUPTEDLY, adv. Without interruption.

The will thus determined, never lets the understanding lay by the object; but all the thoughts of the mind, and powers of the body are uninterruptedly employ'd. Locke.

UNINTRENCHED, adj. Not entrenched.

It had been cowardice in the Trojans, not to have attempted any thing against an army that lay unfortified and un- intrenched. Pope.

UNINVESTIGABLE, adj. Not to be searched out.

The number of the works of this visible world being un- investigable by us, afford us a demonstrative proof of the unlimited extent of the creator's skill. Kap.

UNINVITED, adj. Not asked.

His honest friends, at thirty hour of dusk,
Come uninvited. Philips.

UNJOINED, adj.

1. Disjoined; separated.

I hear the found of words; their sense the air
Disolves unjoined ere it reach my ear. Milton's Agonists.

2. Having no articulation.

They are all three immovable or unjoined, of the thickness of a little pin. Great's Adversum.

UNION, n. f. [unio, Lat.]

1. The act of joining two or more, so as to make them one.

Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,
And gladly of our union hear thee speak,
One heart, one soul in both! Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.

The experience of those profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an union with God. Taylor's Rule of Living Hef.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall he throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

4. [In law.] Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union; but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both, and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37 Hen.
VIII. chap. 21. that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other. Union in this signification is permanent, and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, whatsoever is incumbent. Cavel.

UNIPAROUS, adj. [unus and pario, Lat.] Bringing one at a birth.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days; whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNI

UNISON, adj. [unus and sonus, Lat.] Sounding alone.

Sounds intermix'd with voice
Choral, or unison. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.

UNISON, n. f. [unus and sonus, Lat.]

1. A string that has the same sound with another.

When moved matter meets with any thing like that, from which it received its primary impres, it will in like manner move it, as in musical strings tuned unisons. Glanville.

2. A single unvaried note.

Loft was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While a long, solemn unison went round. Dunciad, b. iv.

UNIT, n. f. [unus, unitus, Lat.] One; the least number;
or the root of numbers.

If any atom should be moved mechanically, without attraction, 'tis above a hundred million millions odds to an unit, that it would not strike upon any other atom, but glide through an empty interval without contact. Bentley's Sermon.

Units are the integral parts of any large number. Watts.

TO UNITE, v. a. [unio, Lat.]

1. To join two or more into one.

The force which went in two to be dispersed,
In one alone right hand he now unites. Fairy Queen.

Whatever truths
Redeem'd from error, or from ignorance,
Thin in their authors, like rich veins of ore,
Your works unite, and still discover more. Dryden.

A proposition for uniting both kingdoms was begun. Swift.

2. To make to agree.

The king propos'd nothing more than to unite his kingdom in one form of worship. Clarendon.

3. To make to adhere.

The peritonaeum, which is a dry body, may be united with the muculous flesh. Wifeman's Surgery.

4. To join.

In the lawful name of marrying,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakspeare.

Let the ground of the picture be well united with colours of a friendly nature. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

5. To join in interest.

Unto their assembly, mine honour be not thou united. Gensfi.

TO UNITE, v. n.

1. To join in an act; to concur; to act in concert.

If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal Cannot stand under them. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

2. To coalesce; to be cemented; to be consolidated.

3. To grow into one.

UNITEDLY, adv. With union; so as to join.

The eyes, which are of a watry nature, ought to be much painted, and unitedly on their lower parts; but boldly

UNITER, n. f. The person or thing that unites.

Suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both. Glanville's Sept.

UNITION, n. f. [unio, Fr. from unite.] The act or power of uniting; conjunction; coalition. A word proper, but little used.

As long as any different substance keeps off the union, hope not to cure a wound.

UNITIVE, adj. [from unite.] Having the power of uniting.

That can be nothing else but the unitive way of religion, which consists of the contemplation and love of God. Norris.

UNITY, n. f. [unitas, Lat.]

1. The state of being one.

Those heretics introduced a plurality of Gods; and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolum, that should discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammond.

The production of one being the destruction of another, although they generate, they increase not; and must not be said to multiply, who do not transcend an unity. Brown.

Man is to beget
Like of his like; his image multiply'd:
In unity defective; which requires Collateral love, and dearest amity. Milton's Par. Lost.

Whatever we can consider as one thing, suggests to the understanding the idea of unity. Locke.

2. Concord; conjunction.

That which you hear, you'll swear
You see, there is such unity in the proofs. Shakspeare.

We, of all christians, ought to promote unity among ourselves and others. Sprat's Sermons.

3. Agreement; uniformity.

To the avoiding of dissention, it availeth much, that there be amongst them an unity, as well in ceremonies as in doctrine. Hooker, b. iv.

4. Principle of dramatick writing, by which the tenour of the story, and propriety of representation is preserved.

The unities of time, place, and action, are exactly observed. Dryden's Pref. to All for Love.

UNI

Although in poetry it be absolutely necessary that the unities of time, place, and action should be thoroughly understood, there is still something more essential, that elevates and altogether the fancy. Addison.

5. [In law.]

Unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles. For example, I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent; afterwards I buy the fee-simple. This is an unity of possession, whereby the lease is extinguished; by reason that I, who had before the occupation only for my rent, am become lord of the same, and am to pay my rent to none. Cowel.

UNJUST, adj. Not judicially determined.

Cauls unjust disgrace the loaded file,
And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile. Prior.

UNIVERSAL, adj. [universalis, Lat.]

1. General; extending to all.

All forrow'd: if all the world could have seen't, the woe had been universal. Shakspeare, Winter Tale.

Appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly fecund with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up itself. Shakspeare, Troilus and Cressida.

This excellent epistle, though, in the front of it, it bears a particular inscription, yet in the drift of it is universal, as designing to convince all mankind of the necessity of seeking for happiness in the gospel. South.

2. Total; whole.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This universal frame began. Dryden.

3. Not particular; comprising all particulars.

From things particular
She doth abstract the universal kinds. Davies.

An universal was the object of imagination, and there was no such thing in reality. Arbutnot and Pope.

UNIVERSAL, n. f. The whole; the general system of the universe. Not in use.

To what end had the angel been set to keep the entrance into paradise after Adam's expulsion, if the universal had been paradise. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Plato call'd God the cause and original, the nature and reason of the universal. Raleigh.

UNIVERSALITY, n. f. [universality, school Lat.] Not particularity; generality; extension to the whole.

This catalogue of sin, is but of sin under a limitation; an universality of sin under a certain kind; that is, of all sins of direct and personal commission. South's Sermons.

The universality of the deluge I insist upon: and that marine bodies are found in all parts of the world. Woodward.

A special conclusion cannot be inferred from a moral uni- versality, nor always from a physical one; though it may be always inferred from an universality that is metaphysical. Watts.

UNIVERSALLY, adv. [from universal.] Throughout the whole;
without exception.

Those offences which are breaches of supernatural laws, violate in general that principle of reason which willeth uni- versally to fly from evil. Hooker.

There best beheld, where universally admir'd. Milton.

What he borrows from the antients, he repays with utility of his own, in coin as good, and as universally valuable. Dryden.

This institution of charity-schools universally prevailed. Addi- son.

UNIVERSE, n. f. [universus, Fr. universum, Lat.] The general system of things.

Creeping murmur, and the poring dark,
Fills the wide vessel of the universe. Shakspeare.

God here fums up all into man; the whole into a part;
the universe into an individual. South's Sermons.

Father of heav'n!
Whose word call'd out this universe to birth. Prior.

UNIVERSITY, n. f. [universitas, Lat.] A school, where all the arts and faculties are taught and studied.

While I play the good husband at home, my son and servants spend all at the university. Shakspeare, Taming of the Shrew.

The universities, especially Aberdeen, flourished under many excellent scholars, and very learned men. Clarendon.

UNIVOCAL, adj. [univocus, Lat.]

1. Having one meaning.

Univocal words are such as signify but one idea, or but one sort of thing; equivocal words are such as signify two or more different ideas, or different sorts of objects. Watts.

2. Certain; regular; persisting always one tenour.

This conceit makes putrefactive generations correspondent unto seminal productions; and conceives inequivocal effects, and univocal conformity unto the efficient. Brown.

UNIVOCALLY, adv. [from univocal.]

1. In one term; in one sense.

How is sin univocally distinguished into venial and mortal, if the venial be not sin? Holl.

It were too great presumption to think, that there is any thing in any created nature, that can bear any perfect resemblance of the incomprehensible perfection of the divine nature;

UNK

ture: very being itself does not predicate univocally touching God, and any created beings; and intellect, and will, as we attribute them to him. Hale.

2. In one tenour.

All creatures are generated univocally by parents of their own kind; there is no such thing as spontaneous generation. Ray.

UNJO'YOUS. adj. Not gay; not cheerful.

Morn late rising o'er the drooping world,
Lifts her pale eye unjoyous. Thomson's Winter.

UNJO'US. adj. [injuste, Fr. injustus, Lat.] Iniquitous; contrary to equity; contrary to justice. It is used both of persons and things.

I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal, Destroying them for wealth. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The Piercies,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shakespeare.

He that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much. Luke xvi.

Succeeding kings just recovery of their right, from unjust usurpations and extortions, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. K. Charles.

Th' unjust the just hath slain.
He who was so unjust as to do his brother an injury, will scarce be so just to condemn himself for it. Locke.

UNJUSTIFIABLE. adj. Not to be defended; not to be justified.

If these reproaches, which aim only at ostentation of wit, be so unjustifiable, what shall we say to those that are drawn, that are founded in malice? Government of the Tongue.

In a just and honourable war we engaged; not out of ambition, or any other unjustifiable motive, but for the defence of all that was dear to us. Atterbury.

If we could look into effects, we might pronounce boldly; but for a man to give his opinion of what he sees but in part, is an unjustifiable piece of rashness. Addison.

UNJUSTIFIABLENESS. n. f. The quality of not being justifiable.

He wished them to consider of the illegality of all those commissions, and of the unjustifiableness of all the proceedings which had been by virtue of them. Clarendon.

UNJUSTIFIABLY. adv. In a manner not to be defended.

UNJUSTLY. adv. In a manner contrary to right.

If aught against my life
Thy country fought of thee, it fought unjustly. Milton.

Whom, but for voting peace, the Greeks pursue,
Accus'd unjustly, then unjustly flew. Denham.

Your choler does unjustly rile.
To see your friends pursue your enemies.
Moderation the one side very justly disowns, and the other as unjustly pretends to. Swift.

UNKE'PT. adj. Not combed. Obsolete.

Thenot, to that I chose thou dost me tempt;
But ah! too well I wot my humble vaine,
And how my rhimes been rugged and unkept. Spenser.

To UNKE'NNEL. v. a.

Search, seek, find out. I warrant we'll unkenmel the fox.
Let me stop this way first. So, now uncape. Shakespeare.

I warrant you, colonel, we'll unkenmel him. Dryden.

2. To rouse from its secrecy, or retreat.

If his occult guile
Do not itself unkenmel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Shakespeare.

UNKE'NT. adj. [an and ken, to know.] Unknown. Obsolete.

Go, little book, thyself present,
As child whose parent is unke'nt,
To him, that is the president
Of nobleness and chivalrie. Spenser.

UNKE'PT. adj.

1. Not kept; not retained.

2. Unobserved; unbefield.

Many things kept generally heretofore, are now in like sort generally unkept, and abolished, every where. Hooker.

UNKIND. adj. Not favourable; not benevolent.

In nature there's no blemish but the mind;
None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind. Shakespeare.

To the noble mind
Rich gifts wax poor, when givers prove unkind. Shakespeare.

To Nimrod our author seems a little unkind; and says, that he, against right, enlarged his empire. Locke.

A real joy I never knew,
Till I believ'd thy passion true;
A real grief I ne'er can find,
Till thou prov'st perjur'd or unkind. Prior.

UNKINDLY. adj. [sen and kind.]

1. Unnatural; contrary to nature.

They, with their filchiness,
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their baseness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Fairy Queen.

UNK

All works of nature,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd. Milton.

2. Malignant; unfavourable.

The goddess, that in rural shrine,
Dwell'd here with Pan, or Sylvan, by blest song
Forbidding every bleak, unkindly fog,
To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood. Milton.

UNKINDLY. adv. Without kindness; without affection.

The herd, unkindly wife,
Or chaces him from thence, or from him flies. Denham.

If we unkindly part,

UNKINDNESS. n. f. [from unkind.] Malignity; ill-will; want of affection.

Take no unkindness of his hasty words. Shakespeare.

His unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quench'd her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

After their return, the duke executed the same authority in conferring all favours, and in revenging himself upon those who had manifested any unkindness towards him. Clarendon.

Eve—As one who loves, and some unkindness meets,
With sweet, austere composure, thus reply'd. Milton.

Christ, who was the only person to have rejected this unkindness, finds an extenuation of it. South's Sermons.

She sigh'd, she wept, she low'd; 'twas all she cou'd;
And with unkindness seem'd to tax the God. Dryden.

To UNKIND. v. a. To deprive of royalty.

God save king Henry, unkind Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days. Shakespeare.

It takes the force of law: how then, my lord!
If as they would unkind my father now,
To make you wiser. Southey.

UNKIND. adj. Not kind.

Foul words are but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkind. Shakespeare, As You Like It.

UNKINDLY. adj. Unbecoming a knight.

With six hours hard riding through wild places, I overgot them a little before night, near an old ill-favoured castle, the place where I perceived they meant to perform their unkindly errand. Steevens & Co.

To UNKIND. v. a.

1. To unweave; to separate.

Would he had continued to his country
As he began, and not unkind himself
The noble knot he made. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

2. To open.

Unkind that threat'ning, unkind brow,
And dart not scornful glances from those eyes. Shakespeare.

UNKIND. v. a. [uncle, French.] The brother of a father or mother. See UNCLE.

The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,
His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff. Shakespeare.

Give me good fame, ye pow'r's! and make me just:
Thus much the rogue to public ears will trust:
In private then—when wilt thou, mighty Jove!
My wealthy uncle from this world remove? Dryden.

To UNKNOW. v. a. To cease to know.

It's already known;
Oh! can you keep it from yourselves, unknow it? Smith.

UNKNOWABLE. adj. Not to be known.

Distinguish well between knowables and unknowables. Watts.

UNKNOWING. adj.

1. Ignorant; not knowing.

Let me speak to th' yet unknowing world,
How these things came about. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Though unknowing persons may accuse others, yet can they never the more absolve themselves. Decay of Piety.

Unknowing I prepar'd thy bridal bed;
With empty hopes of happy issue fed.
Unknowing he requires it; and when known,
He thinks it his; and values it, 'tis gone. Dryden.

His hounds, unknowing of his change, pursue
The chase, and their mistaken master flew. Dryden.

Proteus, mounting from the hoary deep,
Surveys his charge, unknowing of deceit. Pope.

2. Not practised; not qualified.

So Libyan huntmen, on some sandy plain,
From shady coverts rous'd, the lion chase:
The kingly beast roars out with loud disdain,
And slowly moves, unknowing to give place. Dryden.

There were they; whose souls the furies steel'd,
And curs'd, with hearts unknowing how to yield. Pope.

UNKNOWINGLY. adv. Ignorantly; without knowledge.

The beauty I behold has struck me dead;
Unknowingly he strikes, and kills by chance. Dryden.

They are like the Syrians, who were first smitten with blindness, and unknowingly led out of their way, into the capital of their enemy's country. Addison's Fables.

UNKNO'WN. adj.

1. Not known.

'Tis not unknown to you,
How much I have disabled my estate. Shakespeare.

Many are the trees of God, that grow
In paradise, and various, yet unknown
To us. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass. Reform.

If any chance has hither brought the name
Of Palamedes, not unknown to fame,
Accus'd and sentenc'd for pretended crimes. Dryden.

Though incost is indeed a deadly crime,
You are not guilty, since unknown 'twas done,
And known, had been abhor'd. Dryden's Den Segastian.

At fear of death, that faddens all
With terrors round, can reason hold her throne?
Despite the known, not tremble at th' unknown. Pope.

2. Greater than is imagined.

The planting of hemp and flax would be an unknown advantage to the kingdom. Bacon.

3. Not having cohabitation.

I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn. Shakespeare.

4. Without communication.

We stopped at a little inn, where the man of the house, formerly a servant in the knight's family, to do honour to his old master, had, unknown to Sir Roger, put him up in a sign-post. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 122.

UNLAWFUL. adj.

1. Not produced by labour.

Unlawful harvests shall the fields adorn,
And cluster'd grapes shall blush on ev'ry thorn. Dryden.

2. Not cultivated by labour.

Not eastern monarchs on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine to gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlawful field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

3. Spontaneous; voluntary.

Their charms, if charms they have, the truth supplies,
And from the theme unlawful beauties rise. Tickell.

To UNLAW. v. a.

1. To loose any thing fastened with strings.

He could not endure so cruel case,
But thought his arms to leave, and helmet to unlaw. Spenser.

A little river roll'd,
By which there sat a knight with helm unlaw'd, Himself refreshing with the liquid cold. Fairy Queen, b. i.

The helmet from my brow unlaw'd. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To loose a lady's dress.

Can I forget, when they in prison placing her,
With swelling heart, in spite, and due disdainfulness,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unlawing her. Sidney.

Unlaw yourself, for that harmonious chime
Tells me from you that now it is bed-time. Donne.

3. To make loose; to put in danger of being lost. Not in use.

You unlaw your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name of a night-brawler. Shakespeare's Othello.

To UNLAW. v. a.

1. To remove from the vessel which carries.

He's a foolish seaman,
That, when his ship is sinking, will not Unlaw his hopes into another bottom. Denham.

2. To exonerate that which carries.

The vent'rous merchant, who design'd for far,
And touches on our hospitable shore,
Charm'd with the splendour of this northern star,
Shall here unlaw him, and depart no more. Dryden.

3. To put out. Used of a vessel.

We landed at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlaw her burden. Act xxi. 3.

UNLAW. adj.

1. Not placed; not fixed.

Whatever we do behold now in this present world, it was wrapped within the bowels of divine mercy, written in the book of eternal wisdom, and held in the hands of omnipotent power, the first foundations of the world being as yet unlaw'd. Hooker, b. v.

2. Not pacified; not filled.

No evil thing that walks by night,
Blue, meagre hag, or stubborn unlaw'd ghost,
Hath hurtful pow'r o'er true virginity. Milton.

UNLAW'NED. adj. Not deplored.

After six years spent in outward opulency, and inward murmur that it was not greater, he died unlamented by any.

Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The pride of fools, and pageant of a day. Pope.

UNL

To UNLATCH. v. a. To open by lifting up the latch.

My worthy wife
The door unlatch'd; and, with repeated calls,
Invites her former lord within my walls. Dryden.

UNLAWFUL. adj. Contrary to law; not permitted by the law.

Before I be convict by court of law,
To threaten me with death is most unlawful. Shakespeare.

It is an unlawful thing for a Jew to come unto one of another nation. Acts x. 28.

Shew me when it is our duty, and when unlawful to take these courses, by some general rule of a perpetual, never-failing truth. South.

The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps, unlawful to reveal. Dryden.

UNLAWFULLY. adv.

1. In a manner contrary to law or right.

He that gains all that he can lawfully this year, next year will be tempted to gain something unlawfully. Taylor.

2. Illegitimately; not by marriage.

I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. Shakespeare.

Give me your opinion, what part I, being unlawfully born, may claim of the man's affection who begot me. Addison.

UNLAWFULNESS. n. f. Contrariety to law; state of being not permitted.

If those alleged testimonies of scripture did indeed concern the matter to such effect as was pretended, that which they should infer were unlawfulness. Hooker.

The original reason of the unlawfulness of lying is, that it carries with it an act of injustice, and a violation of the right of him, to whom we were obliged to signify our minds. South's Sermons.

To UNLEARN. v. a. To forget, or diffuse what has been learned.

Antisthenes, being asked of one, what learning was most necessary for man's life? answered, to unlearn that which is naught. Bacon.

This were to imply, that all books in being should be destroyed; and that all the age should take new pains to unlearn those habits which have cost them so much labour. Hooker.

The government of the tongue is a piece of morality which sober nature dictates, which yet our greatest scholars have unlearn'd. Decay of Piety.

Some cyders have by art, or age, unlearn'd
Their genuine relish, and of fundry wines Assum'd the flavour. Philips.

What they thus learned from him in one way, they did not unlearn again in another. Atterbury.

A wicked man is not only obliged to learn to do well, but unlearn his former life. Rogers's Sermons.

UNLEARNED. adj.

1. Ignorant; not informed; not instructed.

This selected piece, which you translate,
Foretells your studies may communicate,
From darker dialect of a strange land,
Wisdom that here th' unlearn'd shall understand. D'Avenant.

And by succession of unlearned times,
As bards began, to monks rung on the chimes. Roscommon.

Some at the bar, with facility defend
The cause of an unlearned, noble friend. Dryden.

Though unlearned men well enough understood the words white and black, yet there were philosophers found, who had subtilty enough to prove that white was black. Locke.

2. Not gained by study; not known.

Mere words, or such things chiefly as were better unlearned. Milton on Education.

3. Not suitable to a learned man.

I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither favouring of poetry, wit, or invention. Shakespeare.

UNLEARNEDLY. adv. Ignorantly; grossly.

He, in his epistle, plainly affirmeth they think unlearnedly, who are of another belief. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

UNLEARNED. adj. Not fermented; not mixed with fermenting matter.

They baked unleavened cakes of the dough, for it was not leavened. Exod. ii. 39.

Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. 1 Cor. v. 7.

UNLEARNEDNESS. n. f. Business; want of time; want of leisure. Not in use.

My essay touching the scripture having been written partly in England, partly in another kingdom, it were strange if there did not appear much unevenness, and if it did not betray the unleavenedness of the wandering author. Boyle.

UNLESS. conjunct. Except; if not; supposing that not.

Let us not say, we keep the commandments of the one, when we break the commandments of the other: for, unless we observe both, we obey neither. Hooker.

Unless I look on Sylvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon. Shakespeare.

What

UNL

- What hidden strength,
Unless the strength of heav'n, if you mean that. Milton.
 For sure I am, unless I win in arms,
 To stand excluded from Emilia's charms;
 Nor can my strength avail, unless by thee,
 Endu'd with force, I gain the victory. Dryden.
 The commendation of adversaries is the greatest triumph of a writer, because it never comes unless extorted. Dryden.
 No poet ever sweetly sung,
Unless he were, like Phœbus, young;
 Nor ever nymph inspir'd to rhyme,
Unless, like Venus, in her prime. Swift.
UNLESSONED, adj. Not taught.
 The full sum of me
 Is an unlesson'd girl, unchool'd, unpraçis'd;
 Happy in this, she is not yet so old
 But the may learn. Shakespeare.
UNLETTERED, adj. Unclear; untaught.
 When the apostles of our Lord were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, St. Paul excepted, the rest were unchool'd and unlettered men. Hooker, b. iv.
 Such as the jocund flute, or gamefome pipe
 Stirs up among the loofe, unletter'd hinds,
 Who thank the gods amifs. Milton.
 Th' unletter'd chriſtian, who believes in grofs, Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a lofs. Dryden.
UNLVELLED, adj. Not cut even.
 All unvelld the gay garden lies. Tickell.
UNLIBIDINOUS, adj. Not luſtful.
 In thoſe hearts
 Love unlibidinous reign'd; nor jealousy
 Was understood, the injur'd lover's hell. Milton.
UNLICENS'D, adj. Having no regular permission.
 Ask what boldneſs brought him hither
Unlicenſ'd. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. iv.
 Warn the thoughtleſs, ſelf-confiding train,
 No more, unlicenſ'd, thus to brave the main. Pope.
UNLICK'D, adj. Shapeleſs; not formed: from the opinion that the bear licks her young to ſhape.
 Shape my legs of an unequal ſize,
 To diſproportion me in every part,
 Like to a chaos, or unlick'd bear-whelp. Shakespeare, Dom.
 Thoſe unlick'd bear-whelps.
Unlick'd to form, in groans her hate expreſt. Dryden.
UNLIGHTED, adj. Not kindled; not ſet on fire.
 There lay a log unlighted on the earth:
 For th' unborn chief the fatal ſifters came,
 And rais'd it up, and toſt it on the flame. Dryden.
 The ſacred wood, which on the altar lay, Untouch'd, unlighted glows. Prior,
UNLIGHTSOM, adj. Dark; gloomy; wanting light.
 Firſt the fun
 A mighty ſphere! he fram'd, unlightsome firſt, Tho' of æthereal mould. Milton's Par. Loſt.
UNLIKE, adj.
 1. Diſſimilar; having no reſemblance.
 Where caſes are ſo unlike as theirs and ours, I ſee not how that which they did, ſhould induce, much leſs inforce us to the ſame practice. Hooker, b. v.
 So the twins humours, in our Terence, are Unlike; this harſh and rude, that ſmooth and fair. Denham.
Unlike the niceneſs of our modern dames;
 Affected nymphs, with new affected names. Dryden.
 Our ideas, whiſt we are awake, ſucceed one another, not much unlike the images in the infide of a lanthorn. Locke.
 Some the diſgrac'd, and ſome with honours crown'd;
Unlike ſuccelles equal merits found. Pope.
 2. Improbable; unlikely; not likely.
 Make not impoſſible that which but ſeems unlike. Shakeſp.
 What beſt the empire of Almaigne were not unlike to beſal to Spain, if it ſhould break. Bacon.
UNLIKELINESS, { [from unlikely.] Improbability.
 The work was carried on, amidſt all the unlikelihoſs and diſcouraging circumſtances imaginable; the builders holding the ſword in one hand, to defend the trowel working with the other. South's Sermons.
 There are degrees herein, from the very neighbourhood of demonſtration, quite down to improbability and unlikelihoſs, even to the confines of impoſſibility. Locke.
UNLIKELY, adj.
 1. Improbable; not ſuch as can be reaſonably expected.
 Suſpicion Mopia; for a very unlikely envy the hath ſtam-pled upon. Sidney.
 2. Not promiſing any particular event.
 My advice and actions both have met Succels in things unlikely. Denham's Saply.
 This collection we thought not only unlikely to reach the future, but unworthy of the preſent age. Swift.
 Effects are miraculous and ſtrange, when they grow by unlikely means. Hooker.

UNL

- UNLIKELY*, adv. Improbably.
 The pleaſures we are to enjoy in that converſation, not unlikely may proceed from the diſcoveries each ſhall communicate to another, of God and nature. Pope.
UNLIKENESS, n. ſ. Diſſimilitude; want of reſemblance.
 Imitation pleaſes, becauſe it affords matter for enquiring into the truth or falſhood of imitation, by comparing its likeneſs, or *unlike*neſs with the original. Dryden.
UNLIMITABLE, adj. Admitting no bounds.
 He tells us 'tis unlimited and unlimited. Locke.
UNLIMITED, adj.
 1. Having no bounds; having no limits.
 So unlimited is our impotence to recompence or repay
 God's diſcretion, that it fetters our very wiſhes. Boyle.
 It is ſome pleaſure to a finite underſtanding, to view unlimited excellencies, which have no bounds, though it cannot comprehend them. Tillotſon.
 2. Undefined; not bounded by proper exceptions.
 With groſs and popular capacities, nothing doth more prevail than unlimited generalities, becauſe of their plainneſs at the firſt ſight; nothing leſs, with men of exact judgment, becauſe ſuch rules are not ſafe to be truſted over far. Hooker.
 3. Unconfined; not reſtrained.
 All the evils that can proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenneſs. Taylor.
 Aſcribe not unto God ſuch an unlimited exerciſe of mercy, as may deſtroy his juſtice. Rogers's Sermon.
 Huſbands are counſelled not to truſt too much to their wives owning the doctrine of unlimited conjugal fidelity. Abb.
UNLIMITEDLY, adv. Boundleſsly; without bounds.
 Many aſcribe too unlimitedly to the force of a good meaning, to think that it is able to bear the ſtreſs of whatever commiſſions they ſhall lay upon it. Decay of Piety.
UNLINEAL, adj. Not coming in the order of ſucceſſion.
 They put a barren ſcepter in my gipe,
 Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
 No ſon of mine ſucceeding. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
 To UNLINE, v. a. To untwix; to open.
 About his neck
 A green and gilded ſnake had wreath'd it ſelf;
 Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
 The opening of his mouth; but ſuddenly
 Seeing Orlando, it unlin'd it ſelf. Shakespeare.
UNLIQUIFIED, adj. Unmelted; undiſſolved.
 Theſe huge, unwieldy lumps remained in the melted matter, rigid and unliquified, floating in it like cakes of ice in a river. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.
 To UNLOAD, v. a.
 1. To diſburden; to exonerate.
 Like an aſs, whole back with ingots bows,
 Thou beaſt thy heavy riches but a journey,
 And death unloads thee. Shakeſp. Meaſ. for Meaſure.
 Vain man forbear, of cares unload thy mind;
 Forget thy hopes, and give thy fears to wind. Creech.
 Some to unload the fertile branches run. Pope.
 2. To put off any thing burdensome.
 To you duke Humphry muſt unload his grief. Shakeſp.
 Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burthen, Shak.
 To UNLOCK, v. a.
 1. To open what is ſhut with a lock.
 I have ſeen her unlock her cloſet, take forth paper. Shakeſp.
 She ſprings a light,
Unlocks the door, and ent'ring out of breath,
 The dying ſaw, and inſtruments of death. Dryden.
 2. To open in general.
 My purſe, my perſon, my extremſt means,
 Lie all unlocked to your occaſions. Shakeſp. Mer. of Venice.
 I had not thought to have unlocked my lips
 In this unſhallow'd air, but that this jugler
 Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
 Obtruding falſe rules, pranc'd in reaſon's garb. Milton.
 I yielded, and unlocked her all my heart,
 Who with a grain of manhood well reſolv'd,
 Might eaſily have ſhook off all her ſnares. Milton.
 Sand is an advantage to cold clays, in that it warms them, and unlocks their binding qualities. Mortimer's Huſbandry.
 A lixivium of quick-lime unlocks the ſalts that are entangled in the viſcid juices of ſome courbutick perſons. Arbutnot.
 Thy foreſts, Windſor! and thy green retreats Invite my lays. Be preſent, ſylvan maids!
Unlock your ſprings, and open all your ſhades. Pope.
UNLOCKED, adj. Not fattened with a lock.
UNLOOKED, { adj. Unexpected; not foreſeen.
UNLOOKED FOR, {
 Yet perhaps had their number prevail'd, if the king of Pontus had not come unlook'd for to their ſuccour. Sidney.
 How much unlook'd for is this expedition! Shakespeare.
 God, I pray him
 That none of you may live your natural age,
 But by ſome unlook'd accident cut off. Shakespeare.
 Whatſoever

UNL

- Whatſoever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends ſome, and ſares others. Bacon.
 From that high hope, to what relapſe
Unlook'd for are we fall'n. Paradiſe Regain'd.
 Your affairs I have recommended to the king, but with un-look'd ſuccels. Denham.
 Nor ſame I ſlight, nor for her favours call;
 She comes unlook'd for, if ſhe comes at all. Pope.
UNLOOKABLE, adj. [A word rarely uſed.] Not to be looked at. Whatever may be ſaid of the unlookable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compoſe bodies, that need no other cement to unite them, than the juxta-poſition, and reſting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might diſſipate them, are excluded. Boyle.
 To UNLOOSE, v. a. To looſe. A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation;
 ſo that to unloose, is properly to bind.
 York, unloose your long imprisond thoughts,
 And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shakespeare.
 The weak, wanton Cupid,
 Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
 And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
 Be ſhook to air. Shakeſp. Troilus and Creſſida.
 Turn him to any cauſe of policy;
 The gordian knot of it he will unloose, Familiar as his garter. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
 It reſted in you,
 To unloose this tied-up juſtice, when you pleaſ'd. Shakeſp.
 The latchet of his ſhoes I am not worthy to ſtoop down and unloose. Mark i. 7.
 He that ſhould ſpend all his time in tying inextricable knots, only to baſtle the indutry of thoſe that ſhould attempt to unloose them, would be thought not much to have ſerved his generation. Decay of Piety.
 To UNLOOSE, v. n. To fall in pieces; to loſe all union and connexion.
 Without this virtue, the publick union muſt unloose; the ſtrength decays; and the pleaſure grow faint. Collier.
UNLOVED, adj. Not loved.
 As love does not always reflect itſelf, Zelmane, though reaſon there was to love Palladius, yet could not ever perſwade her heart to yield with that pain to Palladius, as they feel, that feel unloved love. Sidney, b. ii.
 What though I be not fortunate;
 But miſerable moſt to love unlovd!
 He was generally unloved, as a proud and ſupercilious perſon. Clarendon, b. viii.
UNLOVELINESS, n. ſ. Unamiableneſs; inability to create love.
 The old man, growing only in age and affection, followed his ſuit with all means of unhoneſt ſervants, large promiſes, and each thing elſe that might help to countervail his own unlovelineſs. Sidney, b. ii.
UNLOVELY, adj. That cannot excite love. There ſeems by this word generally more intended than barely negation. See UNLOVELINESS.
UNLOVING, adj. Unkind; not fond.
 Thou, bleſt with a goodly ſon,
 Didſt yield content to diſinherit him;
 Which argu'd thee a moſt unloving father. Shakespeare.
UNLUCKILY, adv. Un fortunately; by ill luck.
 Things have fallen out to unluckily,
 That we have had no time to move our daughter. Shakeſp.
 An ant dropt unluckily into the water. L'Eſtrange.
 A fox unluckily croſſing the road, drew off a conſiderable detachment. Addiſon's Freeholder, N° 3.
UNLUCKY, adj.
 1. Unfortunate; producing unhappineſs. This word is generally uſed of accidents ſlightly vexatious.
 You may make an experiment often, without meeting with any of thoſe unlucky accidents which make ſuch experiments miſerary. Boyle.
 2. Unhappy; miſerable; ſubject to frequent miſfortunes.
 Then ſhall I you recount a rueful caſe,
 Said he; the which with this unlucky eye
 I late beheld. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 3. Slightly miſchievous; miſchievously waggiſh.
 His frienſhip is counterfeit, ſeldome to truſt;
 His doings unlucky, and ever unjuſt. Tuſſer.
 Why, cries an unlucky way, a leiſ bag might have ſerved. L'Eſtrange.
 4. Ill-omen'd; inauſpicious.
 A lad, th' unlucky of his crew,
 Was ſtill contriving ſomething bad, but new. Kings.
 When I appear, ſee you avoid the place,
 And haunt me not with that unlucky face. Dryden.
UNLUSTRIOUS, adj. Wanting ſplendour; wanting luſtre.
 Should I join gripes with hands
 Made hard with hourly falſhood, as with labour;
 Then glad myſelf with peeping in an eye,
 Bate and unluſtrous as the ſmoaky light
 That's fed with ſtinking tallow. Shakespeare.

UNM

- To UNLU'VE, v. a. To ſeparate veſſels cloſed with chymical cement.
 Our antimony thus handled, affordeth us an ounce of fulphur, of ſo ſulphureous a ſmell, that upon the unluſting the veſſels, it infected the room with a ſcarce ſupportable ſtink. Boyle.
UNMA'DE, adj.
 1. Not yet formed; not created.
 Thou waſt begot in Demogorgon's hall,
 And ſaw'ſt the ſecrets of the world unmade. Fairy Queen.
 Then might'ſt thou tear thy hair,
 And fall upon the ground as I do now,
 Taking the meaſure of an unmade grave. Shakespeare.
 2. Deprived of form or qualities.
 The firſt earth was perfectly unmade again, taken all to pieces, and framed a-new. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.
 3. Omitted to be made.
 You may the world of more defects upbraid,
 That other works by nature are unmade;
 That ſhe did never at her own expence
 A palace rear. Blackmore.
UNMA'IMED, adj. Not deprived of any eſſential part.
 An interpreter ſhould give his author entire and unmaim'd;
 the diſtion and the verification only are his proper province. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

 ments. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 Empire! thou poor and deſpicable thing,
 When ſuch as theſe make, or unmake a king. Dryden.
 Bring this guide of the light within to the trial. God, when he makes the prophecy, does not unmake the man. Locke.
 To UNMA'N, v. a.
 1. To deprive of the conſtituent qualities of a human being, as reaſon.
 What, quite unmann'd in folly? Shakespeare. Macbeth.
 Groſs errors unman, and ſtrip them of the very principles of reaſon, and ſober diſcourſe. South's Sermons.
 2. To emaculate.
 3. To break into irrefolution; to deſect.
 Her clamours pierce the Trojans ears,
Unman their courages, and augment their fears. Dryden.
 Ulyſſes veil'd his pensive head;
 Again unmann'd, a ſhower of ſorrows fled. Pope.
UNMANAGEABLE, adj.
 1. Not manageable; not eaſily governed.
 They'll judge every thing by models of their own, and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority but that of abſolute dominion. Glanville.
 None can be concluded unmanageable by the milder methods of government, till they have been thoroughly tried upon him; and if they will not prevail, we make no excuſes for the obſtinate. Locke.
 2. Not eaſily wielded.
UNMANAGED, adj.
 1. Not broken by horſemanſhip.
 Like colts, or unmanaged horſes, we ſtart at dead bones and lifeleſs blocks. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 2. Not tutored; not educated.
 Savage princes haſt out ſometimes into an irregular greatneſs of thought, and betray, in their actions, an unguided force, and unmanaged virtue. Pelton on the Clafficks.
UNMANLIKE, { adj.
UNMANLY, {
 1. Unbecoming a human being.
 It is ſtrange to ſee the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their maſterhood nothing, without doing injury to them. Sidney.
 Where the act is unmanly, or the expectation contradictory to the attributes of God, our hopes we ought never to entertain. Collier againſt Deſpair.
 2. Unſuitable to a man; effeminate.
 By the greatneſs of the cry, it was the voice of man;
 though it were a very unmanlike voice, ſo to cry. Sidney.
 New cuſtoms,
 Though never ſo ridiculous,
 Nays, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd. Shakespeare.
 This is in thee a nature but affected;
 A poor unmanly melancholy ſprung
 From change of fortune. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
 My virtue, ignoble;
Unmanly, ignominious, infamous. Milton's Agoniſtes.

O I am yet to learn a statesman's art;
My kindness, and my hate unmask'd I wear, Dryden.
UNMA'STERABLE. adj. Unconquerable; not to be subdued.
The factor is unmasterable by the natural heat of man; not to be dulcified by conciliation, beyond unfavourable condition.
UNMA'STERED. adj.
1. Not subdued.
2. Not conquerable.
Weigh what loss your honour may sustain, if you
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
He cannot his unmaster'd grief sustain,
But yields to rage, to madness and disdain. Dryden.
UNMA'TCHABLE. adj. Unparalleled; unequalled.
The soul of Christ, that saw in this life the face of God, was, through so visible presence of Deity, filled with all manner of graces and virtues in that unmatchable degree of perfection; for which, of him we read it written, that God with the oil of gladness anointed him. Hooker, b. v.
Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty, tell me,
if this be lady of the house. Shakespeare.
England breeds very valiant creatures; their matins are of unmatchable courage. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
UNMA'TCHED. adj. Matchless; having no match, or equal.
That glorious day, which two such navies saw,

providence has found out a way. L'Estrange.
The pleasant lustre of flame delights children at first; but when experience has convinced them, by the exquisite pain it has put them to, how cruel and unmerciful it is, they are afraid to touch it. Locke.
Whatever doctrine represents God as unjust and unmerci- ful, cannot be from God, because it subverts the very foundation of religion. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Unconscionable; exorbitant.
Not only the peace of the honest, unwriting subject was daily molested, but unmerciful demands were made of his applause. Pope.
UNME'RCIFULLY. adv. Without mercy; without tenderness.
A little warm fellow fell most unmercifully upon his Gallic majesty. Addison.

Into my grave unmention'd and unmourn'd. Southern.
TO UNMUZZLE. v. a. To loose from a muzzle.
Now unmuzzle your wisdom. Shakespeare.
Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzel'd thoughts
Thy tyrannous heart can think? Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
TO UNMUFFLE. v. a. To put off a covering from the face.
Unmuffle, ye faint stars! and thou, fair moon,
That won't it to love the traveller's benizon,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos, that reigns here
In double night, of darkness and of shades. Milton.
UNMUSICAL. adj. Not harmonious; not pleasing by sound.
Let argument bear no unmusical founds,
Nor jars interpose, sacred friendship to grieve. B. Johnson.
One man's ambition wants satisfaction, another's avarice, a third's spleen; and this discord makes up the very unmu- sical harmony of our murmurs. Deacy of Piety.
UNNA'MED. adj. Not mentioned.

Th' unnerv'd father falls.

UNNETH. adv. [This is from un and eth, Saxon, easy; and UNNETHES.] ought therefore to be written uneth. Scarcely; hardly; not without difficulty. Obsolete.

Diggon, I am so stiff and flanke,

That uneth I may stand any more;

And how the western wind bloweth fore,

Beating the wither'd leaf from the tree.

A shepherd's boy,

When winter's woful spirit was almost spent,

Led forth his flocke, that had been long ypent;

So faint they waxe, and feeble in the fold.

That now uneth their feet could 'em uphold.

UNNOBLE. adj. Mean; ignominious; ignoble.

I have offended reputation;

A most unoble lvering,

A tight maid, ere he for wine can ask,

Guesses his meaning, and unoints the flask.

UNOPENING. adj. Not opening.

Benighted wanderers, the forest o'er,

Curse the law'd candle, and unopening door.

UNOPERATIVE. adj. Producing no effects.

The wilful of a thing is not properly the willing of it; but an imperfect volition, and imports no more than an idle, unoperative complacency in the end, with a direct abhorrence of the means.

UNOPPOSED. adj. Not encountered by any hostility or obstruction.

Proud, art thou met? thy hope was to have reach'd

The height of thy aspiring unoppos'd,

The throne of God unguarded.

To every nobler portion of the town,

The cutting billows roll their restless tide:

In parties now they struggle up and down,

As armies, unoppos'd, for prey divide.

The people, like a headlong torrent go,

And every dam they break or overflow:

But unoppos'd they either lose their force,

Or wind in volumes to their former course.

UNORDERLY. adj. Disordered; irregular.

Since some ceremonies must be used, every man would have his own fashion; whereof what other would be the silly, but infinite distraction, and unorderly confusion in the church.

UNORDINARY. adj. Uncommon; unusual.

I do not know how they can be excused from murder, who kill monstrous births, because of an unordinary shape, without knowing whether they have a rational soul or no.

UNORGANIZED. adj. Having no parts instrumental to the nourishment of the rest.

It is impossible for any organ to regulate itself: much less may we refer this regulation to the animal spirits, an unorganized fluid.

UNORIGINAL. adj. Having no birth; ungenerated.

UNORGANIZED. adj. Having no birth; ungenerated.

I toil'd out my uncouth passage, forc'd to ride

Th' untractable abyss, plung'd in the womb

Of unorgan'd night, and chaos wild.

In scripture, Jehovah signifies, that God is uncreated, unoriginated, and self-existent.

UNORTHODOX. adj. Not holding pure doctrine.

A fat benefice became a crime against its incumbent, and he was sure to be unorthodox, that was worth the plundering.

The unowned interest of proud, swelling state.

UNOWNED. adj.

1. Having no owner.

2. Not acknowledged.

Of night or loneliness it recks me not;

I fear the dread events that dog them both,

Least some ill-greeting touch attempt the person

Of our unowned sister.

Oh happy, unown'd youths! your limbs can bear

The scorching dog-flare, and the winter's air;

While the rich infant, nurs'd with care and pain,

Thrills with each heat, and coughs with every rain.

To UNPACK. v. a.

1. To disburden; to exonerate.

I, the son of a dear father murder'd,

Streets pav'd with heroes! Th' choak'd with gods! Pope.
UNPIERCED. adj. Wanting a pillow.
Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm,
Leans her unpillow'd head, fraught with sad fears. Milton.
TO UNPIERCE. v. a. To open what is shut, or fastened with a pin.
My love doth so approve him,
That even his stubbornness, his checks and frowns, (Prythee unpin me) have grace and favour in them. Shakespeare.
Unpin that spangled breast-plate which you wear,
That th' eyes of busy fools may be stop'd there. Dennis.
Who is the honest man?
He that doth still and strongly good pursue,
To God, his neighbour, and himself most true:
Whom neither force, nor fawning can Unpin, or wrench from giving all their due. Herbert.
UNPINNED. adj. Not marked with eyelet holes.
Gabriel's pumps were all unpinned i' th' heel. Shakespeare.
UNPITIED. adj. Not compassionate; not regarded with sympathetic sorrow.
Richard yet lives; but at hand, at hand
Infuses his piteous and unpitied end. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Rich in the world's opinion, and men's praise,
And full in all we cou'd desire, but days:
He that is warn'd of this, and shall forbear
To vent a sigh for him, or shed a tear
May he live long (corn'd, and unpitied fall). Bp. Corbet.
And want a mourner at his funeral. Bp. Corbet.
But he whose words and fortunes disagree,
Abundant, unpitied, grows a publick jest. Roscommon.
He that does not secure himself of a stock of reputation in his greatness, shall most certainly fall unpitied in his adversity. L'Estrange.
As the greatest curse that I can give,
Unpitied be depos'd, and after live. Dryden's Agamemnon.
Bite off your unpitied nails.

UNP

As some sad turtle his lost love deplores;
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourning
Allie unheard, unpitied, and forlorn. Pope.
Plant daggers in my heart, and aggravate
My other griefs. Addison's Cato.
UNPITIEDLY. adv. Unmercifully; without mercy.

To shame, to chains, or to a certain grave,
Lead on, unpitying guides, behold your slave. Granville.
UNPLACED. adj. Having no place of dependence.
Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain
Flat'ers and bigots, ev'n in Louis' reign;
And I not strip the gilding off a knave,
Unplace'd, unpaid'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope.
UNPLACED. adj. Not tormented.
Ladies, that have your feet
Unplace'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakespeare.
UNPLACED. adj. Not planted; spontaneous.
Figs there unplaced through the fields do grow,
Such as fierce Cato did the Romans show. Waller.
UNPLAUSIBLE. adj. Not plausible; not such as has a fair appearance.
There was a mention of granting five subsidies; and that meeting being, upon very unpopular, and unplausible reasons, immediately dissolved, those five subsidies were exacted, as if an act had passed to that purpose. Clarendon.
I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glowing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplausible,
Win me into the easy-hearted man,
And hug him into snares. Milton.
UNPLAUSIVELY. adv. Not approving.
'Tis like he'll question me,
Why such unplausively eyes are bent on him. Shakespeare.
UNPLEASANT. adj. Not delightful; troublesome; uneasy.
Their skilful ears perceive certain harsh and unpleasant discords in the sound of our common prayer, such as the rules of divine harmony, such as the laws of God cannot bear. Hosker.
O sweet Fortia!
Here are a few of the unpleasant words
That ever blotted paper. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.
Wisdom is very unpleasant to the unlearned. Ecclus. v. 20.
Upon Adam's disobedience, God chased him out of paradise, the most delicious part of the earth, into some other, the most barren and unpleasant. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
UNPLEASANTLY. adv. Not delightfully; uneasily.
We cannot boast of good-breeding, and the art of life; but yet we don't live unpleasantly in primitive simplicity and good humour. Pope.
UNPLEASANTNESS. n. f. Want of qualities to give delight.
As for unpleasantness of sound, if it doth happen the good of men's souls doth deceive our ears, that we note it not, or arm them with patience to endure it.
Many people cannot at all endure the air of London, not only for its unpleasantness, but for the suffocations which it causes. Grant's Bills of Mortality.
All men are willing to skulk out of such company; the sober for the hazards, and the jovial for the unpleasantness of it. Government of the Tongue.
UNPLEASANT. adj. Not pleased; not delighted.
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleasant eye feel your courtesy. Shakespeare.
Condemn'd to live with subjects ever mute,
A salvage prince, unpleasant, though absolute. Dryden.
UNPLEASING. adj. Offensive; disgusting; giving no delight.
Set to dress this garden:
How darest thy tongue found this unpleasing news? Shakespeare.
Hence the many mistakes, which have made learning so unpleasing and so unsuccessful. Milton.
If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it in their figures, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden's Duress.
Howe'er unpleasing be the news you bring,
I blame not you, but your imperious king. Dryden.
UNPLIANT. adj. Not easily bent; not conforming to the will.
The chisel hath more glory than the pencil; that being so hard an instrument, and working upon so unpliant stuff, can yet leave strokes of so gentle appearance. Watson.
UNPLOVED. adj. Not plowed.
Good sound land, that hath lain long unplowed. Mortimer.
TO UNPLOVE. v. a. To strip of plumes; to degrade.

UNPOLISHED. adj. Not such as becomes a poet.
Nor for an epithet that fails,
Bite off your unpolished nails.

UNP

Unjust! why you shou'd in such veins
Reward your fingers for your brains? Bp. Corbet.
UNPOLISHED. adj. Not brightened by attrition.
1. Not smoothed; not brightened by attrition.
Palladio, having noted in an old arch at Verona, some part of the materials cut in fine forms, and some unpolished, doth conclude, that the ancients did leave the outward face of their marbles, or free-stone, without any sculpture, till they were laid in the body of the building. Watson.
He affirms it to have been the ancient custom of all the Greeks, to set up unpolished stones instead of images, to the honour of the gods. Stillingfleet.
2. Not civilized; not refined.
Finding new words,
Such as of old wife bards employ'd to make Unpolish'd men their wild retreats forsake. Waller.
Those first unpolish'd matrons, big and bold,
Gave suck to infants of gigantic mould. Dryden.
UNPOLITE. adj. [impolitus, Fr. impolite, Lat.] Not elegant; not refined; not civil.
Discourses for the pulpit should be cast into a plain method, and the reasons ranged under the words, first, secondly, and thirdly; however they may be now fancied to found unpolite, or unfashionable. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.
UNPOLLUTED. adj. [impollutus, Lat.] Not corrupted; not defiled.
Lay her i' th' earth;
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring! Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Till oft converse with heav'nly habitants
Begin to cast a beam on th' outward shape,
The unpolluted temple of the mind,
And turns it by degrees to the foul's essence,
Till all be made immortal. Milton.
Though unpolluted yet with actual ill,
She halt commits, who sins but in her will. Dryden.
UNPOPULAR. adj. Not fitted to please the people.
The practices of these men, under the covert of feigned zeal, made the appearance of sincere devotion ridiculous and unpopular. Addison's Freeholder, No 37.
UNPORTABLE. adj. [un and portable.] Not to be carried.
Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather or countertide. Raleigh.
UNPOSSESS'D. adj. Not had; not obtained.
He claims the crown.
—Is the chair empty? is the sword unway'd?
Is the king dead? the empire unpossest? Shakespeare.
Such vast room in nature unpossest'd
By living soul, desert, and desolate,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light.
The cruel something unpossest'd,
Corrodes and leavens all the rest. Prior.
UNPOSSESSING. adj. Having no possession.
Thou unpossessing baftard, dost thou think,
That I would stand against thee? Shakespeare.
UNPRACTICABLE. adj. Not feasible.
I try'd such of the things that came into my thoughts, as were not in that place and time unpracticable. Boyle.
UNPRACTISED. adj. Not skillful by use and experience; raw; being in the state of a novice.
The full sum of me
Is an unleson'd girl, unchook'd, unpractis'd. Shakespeare.
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.
I am young, a novice in the trade;
The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade,
And want the soothing arts.
His tender eye, by too direct a ray,
Wounded, and flying from unpractis'd day, Prior.
UNPRAISED. adj. Not celebrated; not praised.
The land,
In antique times was salvage wilderness;
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Fairy Queen.
If all the world
Sould in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,
Th' all-giver would be unthank'd, wou'd be unprais'd. Mit.
If young African for fame
His wasted country freed from Punick rage,
The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least,
And loses, though but verbal, his reward. Milton.
Nor pass unprais'd the vest and veil divine,
Which wand'ring foliage, and rich flow'rs entwine. Dryden.
UNPRECARIOUS. adj. Not dependent on another.
The stars, which grace the high expansion bright,
By their own beams, and unprecious lights,
At a vast distance from each other lie. Blackmore.
UNPRECEDENTED. adj. Not justifiable by any example.
The secret of all this unprecedented proceeding in their matters, they must not impute to freedom. Swift.

UNP

To UNPREDICT. v. a. To retract prediction.
Means I must use, thou say'st prediction else
Will unpredic't, and fail me of the throne. Milton.
UNPREFERRED. adj. Not advanced.
To make a scholar, keep him under, while he is young, or unpreferred. Clifford on Pride.
UNPREGNANT. adj. Not prolific.
This deed unshapeth me quite, makes me unpregnant,
And dull to all proceedings. Shakespeare.
UNPREJUDICATE. adj. Not prepossessed by any settled notions.
A pure mind in a chaste body, is the mother of wisdom, sincere principles, and unprejudicate understanding. Taylor.
UNPREJUDICED. adj. Free from prejudice; free from pre-possession; not pre-occupied by opinion; void of preconceived notions.
The meaning of them may be so plain, as that any unprejudiced and reasonable man may certainly understand them. Tilleyson.
Several, when they had informed themselves of our Saviour's history, and examined, with unprejudiced minds, the doctrines and manners of his disciples, were so struck, that they professed themselves of that sect. Addison.
UNPRELATICAL. Unfuitable to a prelate.
The archbishop of York, by such unprelatical, ignominious arguments, in plain terms advised him to pass that act. Clarendon.
UNPREMEDITATED. adj. Not prepared in the mind beforehand.
Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpremeditated. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
He dictates to me lumb'ring; or inspires
Easy my unpremeditated verse.
The flow of speech make unpremeditated harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. Addison.
UNPREPARED. adj.
1. Not fitted by previous measures.
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.
To come unprepar'd before him, is an argument that we do not esteem God. Duppa's Rules for Devotion.
Fields are full of eyes, and woods have ears;
For this the wife are ever on their guard,
For, unforeseen, they say, is unprepar'd. Dryden.
2. Not made fit for the dreadful moment of departure.
I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No; heavens forefend. Shakespeare. Othello.
My unprepared, and unrepenting breath,
Was snatch'd away by the swift hand of death. Rowson.
UNPREPAREDNESS. n. f. State of being unprepared.
I believe my innocency and unpreparedness to assert my rights and honour, make me the most guilty in their esteem; who would not so easily have declared a war against me, if I had first assaulted them. K. Charles.
UNPREPOSSESSED. Not prepossessed; not pre-occupied by notions.
The unprepossessed on the one hand, and the well-disposed on the other, are affected with a due fear of these things. South.
It finds the mind naked and unprepossessed with any former notions, and so easily and insensibly gains upon the assent. South.
UNPREPRESSED. adj.
1. Not pressed.
Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome? Shakespeare.
In these soft shades, unpress'd by human feet,
Thy happy Phoenix keeps his balmy seat. Tickell.
2. Not informed.
They left not any error in government unmentioned, or unprepressed, with the sharpest and most pathetic expressions. Clarendon.
UNPRETENDING. adj. Not claiming any distinctions.
Bad writers are not ridiculed, because ridicule ought to be a pleasure; but to undecieve and vindicate the honest and unpretending part of mankind from imposition. Pope.
UNPREYALING. adj. Being of no force.
Throw to earth this unprevailing woe. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
UNPREVENTED. adj.
1. Not previously hindered.
A pack of sorrows, which wou'd press you down,
If unprevented, to your timeless grave. Shakespeare.
2. Not preceded by any thing.
Thy grace
Comes unprevented, unimplored, unfought. Milton.
UNPRINCIPALLY. adj. Unluitable to a prince.
I could not have given my enemies greater advantages, than by so unprincipally an infamy. K. Charles.
UNPRINTED. adj. Not printed.
Defer it till you have finished these that are yet unprinted. Pope.
UNPRINTED. adj. Not settled in tenets or opinions.
I do not think my title so to seek,
Or to unprincipally in virtue's book,
As that the single want of light and noise
Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts. Milton.
Others betake them to state affairs, with souls so unprin-ciple

UNP

pled in virtue, and true generous breeding, that flattery, and court shifts, and tyrannous abominations, appear to them the highest points of wisdom. Milton on Education.
UNPRISABLE. adj. Not valued; not of estimation.
A baubling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprisable. Shakespeare.
UNPROCLAIMED. adj. Not notified by a public declaration.
The Syrian king, who to surprise
One man, assassin-like, had levy'd war, War unproclaim'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
UNPROFITABLE. adj. Useless; serving no purpose.
The church being eat of unprofitable labours, needful offices may the better be attended. Hosier.
Should he reason with unprofitable talk? Joh. xv. 3.
My son Onesimus I have begotten in my bonds; which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and me. Philemon 11.
They receive alms sufficient, and yet no more than they can well digest; and withal sweat out the comfort and unprofitable juice. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
It is better to fall honourably, than to survive in an unprofitable and unglorious life. L'Estrange.
Then they who brothers better claim disown,
Defraud their clients, and to lucre fold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.
With shame and sorrow fill'd,
For plotting an unprofitable crime.
An ox that waits the coming blow,
Old and unprofitable to the plough.
With tears to tender,
As any heart, but only her's, could move;
Trembling before her bolted doors he stood,
And there pour'd out th' unprofitable flood. Dryden.
UNPUNISHED. adj. Set free from confinement.
Several desires led parts away,
Water declin'd with earth, the air did stay;
Fire rose, and each from other but unty'd,
Themselves unpunish'd were, and purify'd. Dante.
Not all the dukes of wat'rish Burgundy,
Can buy this unpunish'd, precious maid of me. Shakespeare.
UNPROFANED. adj. Not violated.
Unpoll'd shall be her arms, and unpunish'd
Her holy limbs with any human hand;
And in a marble tomb laid in her native land. Dryden.
UNPROFITABLENESS. n. f. Uselessness.
We are so persuaded of the unprofitableness of your science, that you can but leave us where you find us; but if you succeed, you increase the number of your party. Addison.
UNPROFITABLY. adv. Uselessly; without advantage.
I should not now unprofitably spend Myself in words, or catch at empty hope,
By airy ways, for fond certainties. B. Johnson.
Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our hands,
And bids us not dwell in Roman blood Unprofitably shed. Addison's Cato.
UNPROFITED. adj. Having no gain.
Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds,
Rather than make unprofitable return. Shakespeare.
UNPROFITICK. adj. Barren; not productive.
Great rains drown many insects, and render their eggs unprofitick, or destroy them. Hale.
UNPROMISING. adj. Giving no promise of excellence; having no appearance of value.
If he be naturally listless and dreaming, this unpromising disposition is none of the easiest to be dealt with. Lect.
An attempt as difficult and unpromising of success, as if he should make the essay, to produce some new kinds of animals out of such senseless materials. Bentley.
UNPROVINCED. adj. Not uttered; not spoken.
Mad fit imperfect words, with childish trips,
Half-pronounc'd, slide through my infant lips. Milton.
UNPROPER. adj. Not peculiar.
Millions nightly lie in those unproper beds,
Which they dare swear peculiar. Shakespeare. Othello.
UNPROPERLY. adv. Contrarily to propriety; improperly.
I kneel before thee, and unproperly Shew duty as mistaken all the while Between the child and parent. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
UNPROPRIOUS. adj. Not favourable; inauspicious.
'Twas when the dog-star's unpromising ray Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd ev'ry bay, Sick was the sun. Pope.
UNPROVISED. adj. Not suited to something else.
Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unprompted thought his act. Shakespeare.
UNPROVED. adj. Not supported; not upheld.
He lives at random, carelessly diffus'd,
With languish'd head unprompted,
As one past hope, abandon'd,
And by himself given over. Milton's Agonistes.

UNP

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves; the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprompted, falls headlong on the plain. Dryden.
UNPROPOSED. adj. Not proposed.
The means are unprompted. Dryden.
UNPROSPEROUS. adj. [unprosper, Lat.] Unfortunate; not prosperous.
The winter had been very unpromising and unsuccessful to the king. Clarendon.
Nought unpromising shall thy ways attend,
Born with good omens, and with heav'n thy friend. Pope.
UNPROSPEROUSLY. adv. Unsuccessfully.
When a prince fights justly, and yet unpromisingly, if he could see all those reasons for which God hath so ordered it, he would think it the most reasonable thing in the world. Taylor.
UNPROTECTED. adj. Not protected; not supported.
By woeful experience, thy both did learn, that to forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, endure. Hosier.
UNPROVED. adj. Not evinced by arguments.
The land,
In antique times was savage wilderness,
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unproved, unrais'd. Spenser.
There I found a fresh, unproved knight,
Whose many hands, imbued in guilty blood,
Had never been. Fairy Queen, b. i.
There is much of what should be demonstrated, left unproved by those chymical experiments. Boyle.
To UNPROVIDE. v. a. To divest of resolution or qualifications.
I'll not expostulate with her, lest
Her beauty unprompted my mind again. Shakespeare. Othello.
Prosperity inviting every sense,
With various arts to unprovide my mind;
What but a Spartan spirit can sustain
The shock of such temptations? Southey.
UNPROVISED. adj.
1. Not secured or qualified by previous measures.
Where shall I find one that can steal well? O, for a fine thief of two and twenty, or thereabout; I am heinously unprovided. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprompted body, hunc'd my arm. Shakespeare.
Tears, for a stroke foreseen, afford relief;
But unprompted for a sudden blow,
Like Niebe we marble grow,
And petrify with grief. Dryden.
2. Not furnished.
Those unprompted of tackling and victual, are forced to sea. K. Charles.
The seditious had neither weapons, order, nor counsel; but being in all things unprompted, were slain like beasts. Hayward.
Th' ambitious empress with her son is join'd,
And, in his brother's absence, has design'd
Th' unprompted town to take. Dryden.
True zeal is not a solitary, melancholy grace, as if only fit to dwell in mean minds; such as are utterly unprompted of all other natural, moral, or spiritual abilities. Sprat.
Courts are seldom unprompted of persons under this character, on whom most employments naturally fall. Swift.
UNPROVOKED. adj. Not provoked.
The teeming earth, yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprompted, did fruitful stores allow.
Let them forbear all open and secret methods of encouraging a rebellion so destructive, and so unprompted. Addison.
UNPUNED. adj. Not cut; not lopped.
The whole land is full of weeds;
Her fruit trees all unpun'd. Shakespeare.
UNPUNISHED. adj. [impunit, Lat.] Not punished; suffered to continue in impunity.
Bind not one sin upon another, for in one thou shalt not be unpunished. Eccles. viii. 8.
Divine justice will not let oppression go unpunished. L'Estr.
The vent'rous victor, march'd unpunished hence,
And seem'd to boast his fortunate offence. Dryden.
UNPURCHASED. adj. Unbought.
Unpurchased plenty our full tables loads,
And part of what they lent, return'd our gods. Denham.
UNPURGED. adj. Not purged.
Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness? Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
UNPURPOSED. adj. Not designed.
Do it
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unprompted. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
UNPUNISHED. adj. Private; not generally known.
Virgins must be retired and unprompted; for all freedom of society is a violence done to virginity, not in its natural, but in its moral capacity; that is, it loses part of its severity and strictness, by publishing that person, whose work is religious, whose thoughts must dwell in heaven. Taylor.

UNPUBLISHED. adj.
1. Secret; unknown.
All blest secrets;
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
2. Not given to the publick.
Apply your care wholly to those which are unpublish'd. Pope.
UNPURGED. adj. Not purged; unpurified.
In her visage round those spots, unpurg'd Vapours not yet into her substance turn'd. Milton.
UNPURIFIED. adj.
1. Not freed from recreation.
2. Not cleansed from sin.
Our sinful nation having been long in the furnace, is now come out, but unpurified. Decay of Piety.
UNPURSUED. adj. Not pursued.
All night the dreadful angel unpurs'd
Through heav'n's wide champain held his way. Milton.
UNPURTRIFIED. adj. Not corrupted by rottenness.
Meat and drink last longer unpurtrified, or unpurged, in winter than in summer. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
No animal unpurtrified, being burnt, yields any alkaline salt, but purtrified, yields a volatile alkali. Arbuthnot.
UNQUALIFIED. adj. Not fit.
Till he has denuded himself of all these incumbrances,
he is utterly unqualified for these agonies. Decay of Piety.
All the writers against christianity, since the revolution, have been of the lowest rank in regard to literature, wit, and sense; and upon that account wholly unqualified to propagate heresies, unless among a people already abandoned. Sw.
Tories are more hated by the zealous whigs, than the very papists, and as much unqualified for the smallest offices. Sw.
To UNQUALIFY. v. a. To disqualify; to divest of qualification.
Arbitrary power so diminishes the basis of the female figure, as to unqualify a woman for an evening walk. Addison.
Our private misfortunes may unqualify us for charity; but reflect, whether they may not have been inflicted by God, as a just punishment of our former unmercifulness. Atterbury.
Deafness unqualifies me for all company. Swift.
UNQUALIFIABLE. adj. Such as cannot be impugned.
There arise upon the examination such satisfactory and unqualifiable reasons, as may confirm the causes generally received. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To UNQUEEN. v. a. To divest of the dignity of queen.
Embalme me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shakespeare.
UNQUEENCHABLE. adj. Unextinguishable.
Were present wild fires burning in water and unquenchable. Bac.
The people on their holidays,
Impetuous, insolent, unquenchable. Milton's Agonistes.
The criminal's penitence may have number'd him among the faints, when our untractable uncharitableness may lend us to unquenchable flames. Government of the Tongue.
Our love of God, our unquenchable desires to promote our well-grounded hopes to enjoy his glory, should take the chief place in our zeal. Sprat's Sermons.
UNQUENCHED. adj.
1. Not extinguished.
We have heats of dungs, and of lime unquenched. Bacon.
2. Not extinguishable.
Sadness, or great joy, equally dissipate the spirits, and immoderate exercise in hot air, with unquenched thirst. Arbuth.
UNQUENCHABLENESS. n. f. Unextinguishableness.
I was amazed to see the unquenchableness of this fire. Haleswill.
UNQUESTIONABLE. adj.
1. Indubitable; not to be doubted.
The duke's carriage was surely noble throughout; of unquestionable courage in himself, and rather fearful of fame than danger. Wotton.
One reason that mathematical demonstrations are uncon-troverted, is because interest hath no place in those unquestionable verities. Glanville's Scept.
There is an unquestionable magnificence in every part of Paradise Lost. Addison.
2. Such as cannot bear to be questioned without impatience;
this seems to be the meaning here.
What were his marks? —
— A lean cheek, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not. Shakespeare.
UNQUESTIONABLY. adv. Indubitably; without doubt.
If the fathers were unquestionably of the household of faith, and all to do good to them; then certainly their children cannot be strangers in this household. Sprat.
St. Austin was unquestionably a man of parts, but interposing in a controversy where his talent did not lie, shewed his zeal against the antipodes to very ill purpose. Barnet.
UNQUESTIONED. adj.
1. Not doubted; passed without doubt.

UNR

- Other relations in good authors, though we do not positively deny, yet have they not been unquestioned by some. Brown.
2. Indisputable; not to be opposed.
It did not please the gods, who instruct the people;
And their unquestion'd pleasures must be serv'd. B. Johnson.
3. Not interrogated; not examined.
Mut'ring pray'rs as holy rites she meant,
Through the divided crowd unquestion'd went. Dryden.
- UNQUI'CK. adj. Motionless.
His senses droop, his steady eyes unquick;
And much he ails, and yet he is not sick. Daniel's Civ. War.
- UNQUI'CKENED. adj. Not animated; not ripened to vitality.
Every fetus bears a secret hoard,
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd;
Which num'rous, but unquicken'd progeny,
Clap'd, and enwrap'd, within each other lie. Blackmore.
- UNQUI'ET. adj. [inquiet, Fr. inquiet, Lat.]
Moved with perpetual agitation; not calm; not still.
From grammatic flats and shallows, they are on the sudden transported to be tossed and turmoil'd with their unballast'd wits, in fathomless and unquiet depths of controversy. Milton.
2. Disturbed; full of perturbation; not at peace.
Go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. Shaksp. Mer. of Venice.
3. Restless; unsatisfied.
Thy love hopeful to regain,
What thoughts in my unquiet breast are ris'n. Milton.
4. Unsettled; unsatisfied.
She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring;
A vain, unquiet, glitt'ring, wretched thing,
Mirth from company is but a fluttering, unquiet motion, that beats about the breast for a few moments, and after leaves it empty. Pope.
- UNQUIETLY. adv. Without rest.
Who's there besides foul weather? —
—One minded like the weather, most Unquietly. Shaksp. K. Lear.
- UNQUIETNESS. n. f.
1. Want of tranquillity.
Thou, like a violent noise, can't rustling in,
And mak'st them wake and start to new unquietness. Denham.
2. Want of peace.
It is most enemy to war, and most hateth unquietness. Spens.
3. Restlessness; turbulence.
What pleasure can there be in that estate,
Which your unquietness has made me hate? Dryden.
4. Perturbation; uneasiness.
Is my lord angry? —
—He went hence but now,
And certainly in strange unquietness. Shaksp. Othello.
- UNRA'CKED. adj. Not poured from the lees.
Rack the one vessel from the lees, and pour the lees of the racked vessel into the unracked vessel. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- UNRA'KED. adj. Not thrown together and covered. Used only of fires.
Cricket, to Windsor chimnies shalt thou leap;
Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unwep't,
There pinch the maids. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
- UNRA'SACKED. adj. Not pillaged.
He gave that rich city for a prey unto his soldiers, who left neither house, nor corner thereof unransacked. Kneller.
- UNRA'SOMED. adj. Not set free by payment for liberty.
Unransom'd here receive the spoils fair, Accept the hecatomb the Greeks prepare. Pope's Iliad.
- To UNRA'VE. v. a.
1. To disentangle; to extricate; to clear.
There unrave all
This dark design, this mystery of fate. Addison's Cato.
2. To disorder; to throw out of the present constitution.
How can any thing succeed well with people that are to be pleas'd with nothing, unless the ball of the universe may be unravell'd, and the laws of providence rever'd. L'Estrange.
3. To clear up the intrigue of a play.
The solution, or unravelling of the intrigue, commences, when the reader begins to see the doubts cleared up. Pope.
- UNRA'ZOR'D. adj. Unshaven.
As smooth as Hebe's their unrazor'd lips. Milton.

UNR

- UNRE'ACHED. adj. Not attained.
Labour with unequal force to climb
That lofty hill, unreach'd by former time. Dryden.
- UNRE'AD. adj.
1. Not read; not publicly pronounced.
These books are safer and better to be left publicly un-read. Harker, b. v.
2. Untaught; not learned in books.
His muse had starv'd, had not a piece unreach'd,
And by a player bought, supply'd her bread. Dryden.
- UNRE'ADINESS. n. f.
The clown unreach'd, or half-read gentleman. Dryden.
1. Want of readiness; want of promptness.
This imprecation and unreachings, when they find in us, then turn it to the soothing up of themselves in that accursed fancy. Harker, b. v.
2. Want of preparation.
Nothing is so great an enemy to tranquillity, and a contented spirit, as the amazement and confusions of unreachings and inconsideration. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
- UNRE'ADY. adj.
1. Not prepared; not fit.
The fairy knight
Departed thence, albe his wounds wide,
Not thoroughly heal'd, unready were to ride. Fairy Queen.
2. Not prompt; not quick.
How now, my lords? what all unready to? Shaksp. Hamlet.
3. Awkward; ungain.
From a temperate inactivity, we are unready to put in execution the suggestions of reason; or by a content in every species of truth, we embrace the shadow thereof. Brown.
- UNRE'AL. adj. Unsubstantial.
Hence, terrible shadow!
Unreal mock'ry, hence! Shaksp. Macbeth.
- UNRE'ASONABLE. adj.
1. Exorbitant; claiming, or insisting on more than is fit.
Since every language is so full of its own properties, that what is beautiful in one, is often barbarous in another, it would be unreasonable to limit a translator to the narrow compuls of his author's words. Dryden's Pref. to Ovid.
2. Not agreeable to reason.
No reason known to us; but that there is no reason thereof, I judge most unreasonable to imagine. Harker, b. i.
3. Greater than is fit; immoderate.
Those that place their hope in another world, have, in a great measure, conquer'd dread of death, and unreasonable love of life. Asterbury.
- UNRE'ASONABLENESS. n. f.
1. Exorbitance; excessive demand.
The unreasonableness of propositions is not more evident, than that they are not the joint desires of their major number. K. Char. ii.
2. Inconsistency with reason.
The unreasonableness and presumption of those that thus project, have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition. Hammond.
- UNRE'ASONABLY. adv.
1. In a manner contrary to reason.
I'll not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars. —
—Fye! you confine yourself most unreasonably. Shaksp. Hamlet.
2. More than enough.
Devis'd a web her woe to deceive;
In which the work that she all day did make,
The same at night she did unreasonably. Spenser.

UNR

- UNREBA'TED. adj. Not blunted.
A number of fencers try it out with unrebated swords. Hakew.
- UNREBU'KEABLE. adj. Obnoxious to no censure.
Keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of Christ. 1 Tim. vi. 14.
- UNRECE'IVED. adj. Not received.
Where the signs and sacraments of his grace are not, through contempt, unreceived, or received with contempt, they really give what they promise, and are what they signify. Harker.
- UNRECLA'IMED. adj.
1. Not tuned.
A lavagencies of unreclaimed blood,
Of general assault. Shaksp. Hamlet.
2. Not reformed.
This is the most favourable treatment a sinner can hope for, who continues unreclaimed by the goodness of God. Rogers.
- UNRECONCI'LEABLE. adj.
1. Not to be appeased; implacable.
He had many infirmities and sins, unreconcilable with perfect righteousness. Hammond's Praef. Catechism.
2. Not to be made consistent with.
Let me lament,
That our stars, unreconcilable, should have divided
Our equalness to this. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.
- UNRE'CONCILED. adj. Not reconciled.
If you bethink yourself of any crime
Unreconcil'd as yet to heav'n and grace, Solicit for it straight. Shaksp. Othello.
- UNRECO'RD'ED. adj. Not kept in remembrance by public monuments.
Unrecorded left through many an age,
Worthy have not remain'd so long unsung. Milton.
- UNRECO'UNTED. adj. Not told; not related.
The great Antileus! a name
Unrecorded in the rolls of fame. Pope's Odyssey.
- UNRECU'ITABLE. adj. Incapable of repairing the deficiencies of an army.
Empty and unrecruitable colonels of twenty men in a company. Milton on Education.
- UNRECU'RING. adj. Irremediable.
I found her straying in the park,
Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer,
That hath received some unrecuring wound. Shaksp. Othello.
- UNREDUC'ED. adj. Not reduced.
The earl divided all the rest of the Irish countries unreduced, into shires. Davies's Ireland.
- UNREFO'RMABLE. adj. Not to be put into a new form.
The rule of faith is alone unmovable and unreformable;
to wit, of believing in one only God omnipotent, creator of the world, and in his son Jesus Christ, born of the virgin Mary. Hammond's Fundamentals.
- UNREFO'RMED. adj.
1. Not amended; not corrected.
This general revolt, when overcome, produced a general reformation of the Irish, which ever before had been unre-formed. Davies's Ireland.
2. Not brought to newness of life.
We retain the Julian constitution of the year, unreformed, without consideration of the defective minutes. Holder.
- UNREFO'RMED. adj. Not reformed; not reformed.
If he may believe that Christ died for him, as now he is, an unreformed Christian, then what needs he reformation? Hammond.
- UNREFO'RMED. adj. Not reformed.
The sun's circular image is made by an unrefracted beam of light. Newton's Opticks.
- UNREFR'ESHED. adj. Not cheered; not relieved.
Its symptoms are a spontaneous lassitude, being unrefreshed
by sleep. Arbutnot.
- UNREGA'RD'ED. adj. Not heeded; not respected; neglected.
We, ever by his might,
Had thrown to ground the unregard'd right. Fairy Queen.
- UNREGA'RD'ED. adj. Not heeded; not respected; neglected.
Do't see, how unregard'd now
That piece of beauty passes?
There was a time when I did vow
To that alone;
But mark the fate of faces. Suckling.
- UNREGA'RD'ED. adj. Not heeded; not respected; neglected.
On the cold earth lies th' unregard'd king;
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing.
Me you have often counsell'd to remove
My vain pursuit of unregard'd love. Denham.
- UNREGA'RD'ED. adj. Not heeded; not respected; neglected.
Laws against immorality have not been executed, and proclamations to enforce them, are wholly unregard'd. Dryden.
- UNREGI'STERED. adj. Not recorded.
Hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
- UNREGI'STERED. adj. Not brought to a new life.
This is not to be understood promiscuously of all men,
unregenerate persons, as well as regenerate. Stephens.

UNR

- UNREIN'ED. adj. Not restrained by the bridle.
Left from thy flying steed unrein'd, as once Bellerophon, though from a lower clime Dismounted, on th' Aelian field I fall. Milton.
- UNREIN'TING. adj. Hard; cruel; feeling no pity.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
- UNREIN'TING. adj. Hard; cruel; feeling no pity.
Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortened.
Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?
These are the realms of unrelenting fate;
And awful Rhadamanthus rules the state.
False tears shall wet his unrelenting eyes,
And his glad heart with artful sighs shall heave. Smith.
- UNRELI'ABLE. adj. Admitting no succour.
As no degree of distress is unrelievable by his power, so no extremity of it is inconsistent with his compassion. Boyle.
- UNREL'EVED. adj.
1. Not succoured.
The goddess griev'd,
Her favour'd host shou'd perish unreliev'd. Dryden.
2. Not eased.
The uncares of unreliev'd thirst is not lessened by continuance, but grows the more unportable. Boyle.
- UNREMA'RKABLE. adj.
1. Not capable of being observed.
Our understanding, to make a complete notion, must add something else to this fleeting and unremarkable superficies, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby.
2. Not worthy of notice.
UNREMEM'BERABLE. adj. Admitting no remedy.
He so handled it, that it rather seem'd he had more come into a defence of an unremediable mischief already committed, than that they had done it at first by his consent. Sidney.
- UNREMEM'BERING. adj. Having no memory.
That unremem'ring of its former pain,
The soul may suffer mortal ills again. Dryden.
- UNREMEM'BERED. adj. Not retained in the mind; not recollected.
I cannot pass unremembered, their manner of disguising the shafts of chimnies in various fashions, whereof the noblest is the pyramidal. Watson's Architecture.
- UNREMEMBRANCE. n. f. Forgetfulness; want of remembrance.
Some words are negative in their original language, but seem positive, because the negation is unknown; as amenity, an unremembrance, or general pardon. Watson's Logic.
- UNREMOVABLE. adj. Not to be taken away.
Never was there any woman, that with more unremovable determination gave herself to love, after she had once set before her mind the worthiness of Amphialus. Sidney, b. ii.
- UNREMOVABLE. adj. Not to be taken away.
You know the fiery quality of the duke,
How unremovable and fixt he is In his own course. Shaksp. Othello.
- UNREMOV'ED. adj.
1. Not taken away.
It is impossible, where this opinion is imbibed and unremoved, to found any convincing argument. Hammond.
2. Not capable of being removed.
We could have had no certain prospect of his happiness, while the last obstacle was unremoved. Dryden's Virgil.
- UNREMOV'ED. adj. Not taken away.
Like Teneriff or Atlas unremoved. Milton.
- UNREMOV'ED. adv. In a manner that admits no removal.
His discontents are unremovably coupled to his nature. Sta.
- UNREPA'ID. adj. Not recompensed; not compensated.
Hadst thou full pow'r
To measure out his torments by thy will;
Yet what could'st thou, tormentor, hope to gain?
Thy lois continues, unrepaid by pain. Dryden.
- UNREPE'AL'D. adj. Not revoked; not abrogated.
When you are pinched with any unrepented act of parla-ment, you declare you will not be obliged by it. Dryden.
- UNREPE'AL'D. adj. Not revoked; not abrogated.
Nature's law, and unrepal'd command,
That gives to lighter things the greatest height. Blackmore.
- UNREPE'NT'ED. adj. Not regarded with penitential sorrow.
They are no fit supplicants to seek his mercy in the behalf of others, whose own unrepented sins provoked his just indignation. Hooker, b. v.
- UNREPE'NT'ED. adj. Not regarded with penitential sorrow.
If I, vent'ring to displease
God for the fear of man, and man prefers,
Set God behind: which in his jealousy Shall never, unrepented, find forgiveness. Milton's Agonist.
- UNREPE'NT'ED. adj. Not regarded with penitential sorrow.
As in unrepented sin the dy'd, Down'd to the same bad place, is punish'd for her pride. Dryd.
- UNREPE'NT'ED. adj. Not regarded with penitential sorrow.
With what confusion will he hear all his unrepented sins produced before men and angels? Rogers's Sermons.
- UNREPE'NTING. adj. Not repenting; not penitent; not repentant.
Terrorful for sin. Should

UNRU

Should I of these the liberty regard, Milton's Par. Regain'd.
Who freed, as to their antient patrimony, Unhumb'd, unrepentant, unreform'd.
Headlong would follow. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
My unrepair'd, and unrepenting breath,
Was snatch'd away by the swift hand of death. Rescomm.
All his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.
Not tyrants fierce, that unrepenting die,
E'er felt such rage as thou. Pope's Rape of the Lock.
UNREPINING. adj. Not peevishly complaining.
Barefoot as the trod the flinty pavement,
Her footsteps all along were mark'd with blood;
Yet silent on the pass'd, and unrepining. Rowe.
UNREPLENISHED. adj. Not filled.
Some air retreated thither, kept the mercury out of the unreplenish'd space. Boyle.
UNREPRIVABLE. adj. Not to be repited from penal death.
Is, as a fiend, confin'd, to tyrannize
In unreprieveable condemned blood. Shaksp. K. John.
UNREPROACH'D. adj. Not upbraided; not censured.
Sir John Hotham, unrepach'd, uncured by any imprecation of mine, pays his head. K. Charles.
UNREPROVABLE. adj. Not liable to blame.
You hath he reconciled, to present you holy, unblameable, and unreprieveable in his fight. Col. i. 22.
UNREPROVED. adj.
1. Not censured.
Christians have their churches, and unreprieved exercise of religion. Sandys's Journey.
2. Not liable to censure.
The antique world, in his first flow'ring youth,
With gladtime thanks, and unreprieved truth,
The gifts of sov'reign bounty did embrace. Fairy Queen.
If I give thee honour due,
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her, and live with thee,
In unreprieved pleasures free. Milton.
UNREPU'NT. adj. Not opposite.
When scripture doth yield to natural laws, what particular order is thereunto most agreeable; when positive, which way to make laws unrepugnant unto them. Hobbes, b. iii.
UNREPUTABLE. adj. Not creditable.
When we see wife men examples of duty, we are convinced that piety is no unreputable qualification, and that we are not to be ashamed of our virtue. Rogers.
UNREQU'ED. adj. Not asked.
With what security can our ambassadors go, unrequited of the Turkish emperor, without his safe conduct? Kneller.
UNREQUITABLE. adj. Not to be retaliated.
Some will have it that all mediocrity of folly is foolish, and because an unrequitable evil may ensue, an indifferent convenience must be omitted. Bacon's Vulg. Errors.
So unrequitable is God's love, and so insolvent art we, that that love vastly improves the benefit, by which alone we might have pretended to some ability of retribution. Boyle.
UNRESENTED. adj. Not regarded with anger.
The failings of these holy persons, passed not unresented by God; and the same scripture which informs us of the sin, records the punishment. Rogers.
UNRESE'VED. adj.
1. Not limited by any private convenience.
The piety our heavenly father will accept, must consist in an entire, unreserved obedience to his commands; since whoever offends in one precept, is guilty of the whole law. Rogers.
2. Open; frank; concealing nothing.
UNRESERVEDNESS. n. f. Unlimitedness; frankness; largeness.
The tenderness and unreservedness of his love, made him think those his friends or enemies, that were so to God. Boyle.
UNRESE'VEDLY. adv.
1. Without limitations.
I am not to embrace absolutely and unreservedly the opinion of Aristotle. Boyle.
2. Without concealment; openly.
I know your friendship to me is extensive; and it is what I owe to that friendship, to open my mind unreservedly to you. Pope.
UNRESE'VEDNESS. n. f. Openness; frankness.
I write with more unreservedness than ever man wrote. Pope.
UNRESIST'D. adj.
1. Not opposed.
The ætherial spaces are perfectly fluid; they neither assist, nor retard, the planets, which roll through as free and unresisted, as if they moved in a vacuum. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Resistless; such as cannot be opposed.
Those gods I whose unresisted might Have sent me to these regions void of light. Dryden.
What wonder then, thy hairs should feel
The conqu'ring force of unresisted steel? Pope.

UNRU

UNRESIST'ING. adj. Not opposing; not making resistance.
What noise? that spirit's possess'd with haste,
That wounds th' unresisting pattern with these strokes. Shaksp.
The sheep was sacrific'd on no pretence,
But meek and unresisting innocence: to God and A patient, useful creature. Dryden.
Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heav'ns, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones, occur, they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impress'd. Bentley's Sermons.
UNRESOLVABLE. adj. Not to be solved; insoluble.
For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face; still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin infatuates before it destroys. Sandys's Sermons.
UNRESOLV'D. adj. Not determined; having made no resolution.
On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends.
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shaksp.
Turnus, unresolv'd of flight,
Moves tardy back, and just recedes from fight. Dryden.
2. Not solved; not cleared.
I do not so magnify this method, to think it will perfectly clear every hard place, and leave no doubt unresolv'd. Lacks.
UNRESOLVING. adj. Not resolving.
She her arms about her unresolving husband threw. Dryden.
UNRESPE'CTIVE. adj. Inattentive; taking little notice.
I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys; none are for me
That look into me with confid'rate eyes. Shaksp.
UNRE'ST. n. f. Disquiet; want of tranquillity; uneasiness.
Wife behest, those creeping flames by reason to subdue,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest. Fairy Queen.
Repote, sweet gold, for their unrest,
That have their aims out of the empires' chest. Shaksp.
Dismay'd confusion all possess'd;
Th' afflicted troop, hearing their plot decry'd;
Then runs amaz'd distress, with sad unrest.
To this, to that; to fly, to stand, to hide. Daniel.
Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrows best;
For deepest wounds, can least their feelings tell;
Yet, let me borrow from mine own unrest,
But time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewell. Wotton.
Up they rose,
As from unrest; and each the other viewings,
Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds
How darken'd! Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
UNRESTO'RD. adj.
1. Not restored.
2. Not cleared from an attainder.
The son of an unrestored traitor has no pretences to the quality of his ancestors. Collier on Duelling.
UNRESTRAINED. adj.
1. Not confined; not hindered.
My tender age, in luxury was train'd,
With idle ease, and pageants entertain'd,
My hours my own, my pleasures unstrain'd. Dryden.
2. Licentious; loose.
The tavern he daily doth frequent,
With unstrain'd, loose companions. Shaksp.
3. Not limited.
Were there in this aphorism an unstrain'd truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution, a non-usage, or abolition. Bacon's Vulg. Errors.
UNRETRAC'D. adj. Not revoked; not recalled.
The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the faints, when our untrac'd uncharitableness
may lend us to unquenchable flames. Govern. of the Tongue.
Nothing but plain malevolence can justify diunion. Malevolence shewn in a single, outward act, untrac'd, or in habitual ill-nature. Collier on Friendship.
UNREVE'LED. adj. Not told; not discovered.
Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,
And unrevoked pleasures,
Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing. Shaksp.
Dear, fatal name! rest ever unrevoked;
Nor pass these lips, in holy silence seal'd. Pope.
UNREVEN'D. adj. Not revenged.
So might we die, not envying them that live;
So would we die, not unreveng'd all.
Unhonour'd though I am,
Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.
Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,
And Scipio's ghost walks unreveng'd amongst us. Shaksp.
UNREVEREND. adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.
See not your bride in these unreverent robes. Shaksp.
Fie! unrevend tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sov'reignty to off thou hast prefer'd,
With twenty thousand foul-confuting oaths. Shaksp.

UNRU

UNREVERENTLY. adv. Disrespectfully.
I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou more for thyself. B. John.
UNREVE'RS'D. adj. Not revoked; not repealed.
She hath offer'd to the dooms,
Which unrevoked stands in effectual force, Shaksp.
A sea of melting tears.
UNREVO'K'D. adj. Not recalled.
Hear my decree, which unrevok'd shall stand. Milton.
UNREWA'RD'D. adj. Not rewarded; not recompensed.
Providence takes care, that good offices may not pass unrewarded.
Since for common good I yield the fair,
My private loss let grateful Greece repair;
Not unrewarded let your prince complain,
That he alone has fought and bled in vain. Pope.
TO UNRI'DDLE. v. a. To solve an enigma; to explain a problem.
Some kind power unriddle where it lies,
Whether my heart be faulty, or her eyes! Suckling.
The Platonick principles will not unriddle the doubt. Glance.
A reverse often clears up the passage of an old poet, as the poet often serves to unriddle the reverse. Addison.
UNRI'G. v. a. Not ridiculous.
If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this autoreness unto a smile, he hardly could with perpetuity resist proper motives thereof. Bacon's Vulg. Errors.
TO UNRI'G. v. a. To strip of the tackle.
Rhodes is the foreveign of the sea no more;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store. Dryden.
UNRI'GHT. Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be unright.
What in most English writers useth to be loose, and as it were unright, in this author is well grounded, timely framed, and strongly truss'd up together. Gloucester to Spenser's Kal.
Shew that thy judgment is not unright. Wisd. xii.
UNRI'GHTOUS. adj. Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.
Octavius here left into his room,
And it usurp'd by unrighteous doom;
But he his title justify'd by might. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Within a month!
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears,
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married.—Oh most wicked speed!
Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. Ja. iv.
UNRI'GHTOUSLY. adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.
For them
Their foes a deadly Shibboleth devise:
By which unrightously it was decreed,
That none to trust, or profit should succeed,
Who would not swallow first a poi'sonous wicked weed. Dryden.
A man may fall unadvisedly under publick disgrace, or is unrightously oppressed. Collier on Pride.
UNRI'GHTOUSNESS. n. f. Wickedness; injustice.
Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted, than themselves. All sin, say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin. The apostle, therefore, turns it for us: all unrightous-ness, says he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is unrighteousness, saith Austin upon this place. Hall.
Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Filloson.
UNRI'GHTFUL. adj. Not rightful; not just.
Thou, which know'st the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again
To pluck him headlong from th' usurp'd throne. Shaksp.
TO UNRI'G. v. a. To deprive of a ring.
Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,
And pigs unring'd at vit. franc. pledge. Hudibras.
TO UNRI'P. v. a. [This word is improper; there being no difference between rip and unrip; and the negative particle is therefore of no force; yet it is well authorized.] To cut open.
Like a traitor
Didst break that vow, and with thy treach'rous blade, Unrip'dst the bowels of thy sov'reign's son. Shaksp.
He could not now, with his honour, so unrip, and put a lie upon all that he had said and done before, as to deliver him up. Bacon's Hen. VII.
We are angry with searchers, when they break open trunks, and unrip packs, and open sealed letters. Taylor.
Cato well observes, that friendship ought not to be unripp'd, but unstitch'd. Collier.
UNRI'PE. n. f.
1. Immature; not fully concocted.
Purpose is of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shaksp.
In this northern tract our hoarier throats,
Utter unripe, and ill-confined notes. Waller.

UNRU

He fix'd his unripe vengeance to defer, Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen, Dryden.
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen.
2. Too early.
Who hath not heard of the valiant, wife, and just Dori-laus, whose unripe death doth yet, so many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes? Sidney, b. iii.
UNRI'PEN'D. adj. Not matured.
Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unripe beauties of the north. Addison's Cato.
UNRI'PENESS. n. f. Immaturity; want of ripeness.
The ripeness, or unripeness, of the occasion, must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to commit the beginnings of all great actions to Argus, with his hundred eyes;
and the ends to Briareus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.
UNRI'VALLED. adj.
1. Having no competitor.
Honour forbid! at whose unrivall'd shines,
Eale, pleasure, virtue, all our iox resign. Pope.
2. Having no peer or equal.
TO UNRO'L. v. a. To open what is rolled or convolved.
O honour!
The queen of nations, from her antient seat,
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss;
Time has unroll'd her glories to the last,
And now clos'd up the volume. Dryden's All for Love.
UNROMA'NTICK. adj. Contrary to romance.
It is a base, unromantic spirit not to wait on you. Swift.
TO UNROO'f. v. a. To strip off the roof or covering of houses.
The rabble should have first unroo'd the city,
Ere to prevail'd with me. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
UNROO'ST'D. adj. Driven from the roof.
Thou dotard! thou art woman-tir'd, unroosted,
By thy old dame Parlet here. Shaksp. Winter Tale.
UNROUGH. adj. Smooth.
Siward's son,
And many unrough youths, that even now
Protest their hist of manhood. Shaksp. Macbeth.
TO UNROO'T. v. a. To tear from the roots; to extirpate; to eradicate.
Since you've made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold; you do to grow in my requital,
That nothing can unroot you. Shaksp.
Unroot the forest oaks and bear away Flocks, folds, and trees, an undistinguish'd prey. Dryden.
UNRO'UND. adj. Not shaped, not cut to a round.
Those unrl'd pitolets,
That more than cannon-shot avails or lets;
Which, negligently left unrounded, look Like many-angled figures in the book
Of some dread conjurer. Dennis.
UNRO'YAL. adj. Unprinciply; not royal.
By the advice of his envious counsellors, he sent them with unroyal reproaches to Mutidorus and Pyrocles, as if they had done traitorously. Sidney.
TO UNRU'GLE. v. n. To cease from commotion, or agitation.
Where'er he guides his finny couriers,
The waves unruffle, and the sea subsides. Dryden.
UNRU'FLED. adj. Calm; tranquil; not tumultuous.
Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface. Addison.
UNRU'LED. adj. Not directed by any superior power.
The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging furies, unruled and undirected of any; for they to whom the was committed, faints in their labour, or forsook their charge. Spenser.
UNRU'LINESS. n. f. [from unruly] Turbulence; tumultuousness; licentiousness.
By the negligence of some who were hardly to be commanded, and by the unruliness of others, who without leave were gone a-shore, so fair an occasion of victory was neglected. Knol.
No care was had to curb the unruliness of anger, or the exorbitance of desire. Amongst all their sacrifices, they never sacrific'd so much as one lust. Sandys's Sermons.
UNRU'LY. adj. Turbulent; ungovernable; licentious; tur-multuous.
In sacred bands of wedlock ty'd
To Theron, a loose unruly swain;
Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chase the savage beast with busy pain. Fairy Queen.
Down I come, like glitt'ring Phaeton, Shaksp. Rich. II.
Wanting the manage of unruly jades.
The best and foundest of his time hath been but rash;
then mult we look from his age, to receive but unruly waywardness. Shaksp. K. Lear.
The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Ja. iii.
Thou dost a better life, and nobler vigour give;
Dost each unruly appetite controul. Rescomm.

UNS

Love insults, disguised in the cloud,
And welcome force of that unuly crowd.
Passions kept their place, and transgressed not the boundaries of their proper natures; nor were the disorders begun, which are occasioned by the licence of unuly appetites. Glauco.
You must not go where you may dangers meet.
Th' unuly sword will not there give wounds, but take. Dryden.
And beauty will not there give wounds, but take. Dryden.
UNSAFELY, adv. Not secure; hazardous; dangerous.
If they would not be drawn to seem his adversaries, yet others should be taught how unsafe it was to continue his friends. Hooker, b. v.

With speed retir'd
Where erst was thickest fight, th' angelick throng,
And left large field, unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
Uncertain ways unsafe are,
And doubt a greater mischief than despair. Denham.
Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.

UNSAFELY, adv. Not securely; dangerously.
Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage,
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age;
So bad, that thou thyself hadst no defence
From vice, but barely by departing hence. Dryden.

As no man can walk, so neither can he think, unceasingly or unsafely, but in using, as his legs, so his thoughts amiss, which a virtuous man never doth. Grew.

UNSAFELY, adv. Not uttered; not mentioned.
Chanticleer shall with his words unsafely. Dryden.
That I may leave nothing material unsaid, among the feveral ways of imitation, I shall place translation and paraphrase. Fulton's Classics.

UNSAFELY, adv. Not pickled or seasoned with salt.
The muratick curvy, induced by two great quantity of sea-salt, and common among mariners, is cured by a diet of fresh unsalted things, and watery liquor acidulated. Arbutnot.

UNSAFELY, adv. [in]salutatus, Lat.] Not saluted.
Gods! I prate;
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

UNSAFELY, adv. Unholy; not consecrated.
Her obsequies have been so far enlarged
As we have warranty; her death was doubtful;
And but that great command o'er-ways the order,
She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd Till the last trump. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

UNSATISFIED, adj. [in]satisfabilis, Lat.] Not to be satisfied;
greedy without bounds.
Unsatisfiable in their longing to do all manner of good to all the creatures of God, but especially men. Hooker, b. i.

Craffus the Roman, for his unsatisfiable greediness, was called the gulph of avarice. Rakish.

UNSATISFACTORYNESS, n. f. Failure of giving satisfaction.
That which most deters me from such trials, is their un- satisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Boyle.

UNSATISFACTORY, adj. Not giving satisfaction; not clearing the difficulty.
That speech of Adam, 'The woman thou gavest me to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat, is an un- satisfactory reply, and therein was involved a very impious error. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

Latria to the cross, is point blank against the definition of the council of Nice; and it is an unsatisfactory answer to say, they only were against latria given to images for themselves. Stillingfleet.

UNSATISFIEDNESS, n. f. [from unsatisfied.] The state of being not satisfied; want of fulness.
Between my own unsatisfiability in conscience, and a necessity of satisfying the importunities of some, I was persuaded to chide rather what was false, than what seemed just. K. Charles.

That unsatisfiability with transitory fruitions, that men deplete as the unhappiness of their nature, is indeed the privilege of it, as it is the prerogative of men not to be pleased with such fond toys as children doat upon. Boyle.

UNSATISFIED, adj.
1. Not contented; not pleased.
Q. Elizabeth being to resolve upon a great officer, and being by some put in some doubt of that person, whom the meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lantern seeking a man, and seemed unsatisfied in the choice of a man for that place. Bacon.

Flashy wits, who cannot fathom a large discourse, must be very much unsatisfied of me. Dryden.

Concerning the analytical preparation of gold, they leave persons unsatisfied. Boyle.

2. Not filled; not gratified to the full.
Though he were unsatisfied in getting,
Yet in bestowing he was most princely. Shakspeare.

Whether shall I, by justly placuing
Him whom I hate, be more unjustly cruel
To her I love? or, being kind to her,
Be cruel to myself, and leave unsatisfied her
My anger and revenge? Daphnion's Solilo.

Eternity, human nature can't look 'into, without a reluctious awe: our thoughts are lost in the endless view, and return to us weary and unsatisfied, without finding bounds or place to fix on. Rogers's Sermon.

UNSATISFYING, adj. Unable to gratify to the full.
Nor is fame only unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles. Addison.

UNSAFETY, adj. [from unsafely.]
1. Bad taste.
2. Bad smell.
If we concede a few unsafeties in any people, yet shall we find the Jews less subject hereto than any. Brown.

UNSAFETY, adj.
1. Tasteless.
Can that which is unsafely be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg? Job vi. 6.

2. Having a bad taste.
Unsafely food, perhaps, Milton's Par. Lost.
To spiritual natures.
Some may emit an unsafely odour, which may happen from the quality of what they have taken. Brown.

4. Unpleasant; disgusting.
Things of so mean regard, although necessary to be ordered, are notwithstanding very unsafely, when they come to be disputed of; because disputation pre-supposeth some difficulty in the matter. Hooker, b. v.

Unsafely news; but how made he escape? Shakspeare.
To UNSAFELY, v. a. To retract; to recant; to deny what has been said.
Call you me fair? that fair again unsafely;
Demetrius loves you, fair. Shakspeare.

Say and unsafely, feign, flatter, or abjure. Milton.
How soon
Would height recall high thoughts, how soon unsafely
What feign'd submission swore. Milton's Par. Lost.

To say, and straight unsafely, pretending first
To fly pain, professing next the spy,
Argues no leader, but a liar trad'd.
There is nothing said there, which you may have occasion to unsafely hereafter. Atterbury.

UNSCALY, adj. Having no scales.
The jointed lobster, and unsafely sole.
UNSCARED, adj. Not marked with wounds.
And must she die for this? O let her live;
So she may live unsafely from bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter. Shakspeare.

UNSCOLAR, adj. Not bred to literature.
Notwithstanding these learned disputations, it was to the nationalistic flatness, that the world owed their peace and liberty. Locke.

UNSCOLLED, adj. Uneducated; not learned.
When the apostles were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, they were, St. Paul excepted, unschooled and unlettered men. Hooker, b. v.

UNSCORCHED, adj. Not touched by fire.
His hand,
Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscored. Shakspeare.

UNSCORDED, adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.
Th' enrolled penalties,
Which have, like unscored armour, hung by th' wall,
And none of them been worn. Shakspeare.

UNSCATCHED, adj. Not torn.
I with much expeditious march
Have brought a counter-check before your gates,
To have unscored your city's threaten'd cheeks. Shakspeare.

UNSCREED, adj. Not covered; not protected.
Those balls of burnished brass, the tops of churches are adorned with, derive their glittering brightness from their being exposed, unscreed, to the sun's resplendent beams. Boyle.

UNSCRIPTURAL, adj. Not defensible by scripture.
The doctrine delivered in my sermon was neither new nor unscriptural, nor in itself false. Atterbury.

To UNSEAL, v. a. To open any thing sealed.
This new glare of light
Cast sudden on his face, unsealed his sight. Dryden.

UNSEAL, adj.
1. Wanting a seal.
Your oaths
Are words, and poor conditions but unsealed. Shakspeare.

2. Having the seal broken.
To UNSEAL, v. a. To rip; to cut open.
He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
Till he unsealed him from the nape to th' chops,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements. Shakspeare.

UNSEARCHABLE, adj. Inscrutable; not to be explored.
All is best, though we often doubt
What th' unsearchable disposer
Of highest wisdom brings about,
And ever best found in the close. Milton's Agonistes.

Thou hast vouchsaf'd
This friendly condescension, to relate Things else by me unsearchable. Milton's Par. Lost.

Job discourseth of the secrets of nature, and unsearchable
perfections of the works of God.
These counsels of God are to us unsearchable; neither has he left us in scripture any marks, by which we may infallibly conclude ourselves in that happy number he has chosen. Rogers.

It is a vast hindrance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time among infinities and unsearchables. Watts's Logic.

UNSEARCHABLENESS, n. f. Impossibility to be explored.
The unsearchableness of God's ways should be a bridle to restrain presumption, and not a sanctuary for spirits of error. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

UNSEASONABLE, adj.
1. Not suitable to time or occasion; unfit; untimely; ill-timed.
Zeal, unless it be rightly guided, when it endeavours the most busily to please God, forceth upon him those unseasonable offices which please him not. Hooker, b. v.

Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men to suspect that wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance. Hooker.

It is then a very unseasonable time to plead law, when swords are in the hands of the vulgar. Spenser's Ireland.

The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable fashion, as is done in holiday. Howard.

This digression I conceived not unseasonable for this place,
nor upon this occasion. Clarendon.

Haply mention may arise
Of something not unseasonable to ask. Milton.

Timothy lay out a-nights, and went abroad often at un-
seasonable hours. Arbutnot.

2. Not agreeable to the time of the year.
Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolv'd in tears. Shakspeare.

3. Late; as, unseasonable time of night.
UNSEASONABLENESS, n. f. Disagreement with time or place.
The moral goodness, unfitness, and unseasonableness of moral or natural actions, falls not within the verge of a brutal faculty. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

UNSEASONABLY, adv. Not seasonably; not agreeably to time or occasion.
Some things it is athen unseasonably, when they need not to be prayed for, as deliverance from thunder and tempest,
when no danger is nigh. Hooker, b. v.

Leave to fathom such high points as these,
Not be ambitious, ere the time, to please;
Unseasonably wise, till age and cares
Have form'd thy soul to manage great affairs. Dryden.

By the methods prescribed, more good, and less mischief,
will be done in acute distempers, than by medicines improperly and unseasonably applied. Arbutnot.

Ulysses yielded unseasonably, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Brown.

UNSEASONED, adj.
1. Unseasonable; untimely; ill-timed. Out of use.
Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours perforce must add
Unto your sickness. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

I think myself in a better plight for a lender than you are;
the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned
intrusion. Shakspeare.

2. Unformed; not qualified by use.
'Tis an unseason'd courtier; advise him. Shakspeare.

3. Irregular; inordinate.
The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable fashion, as is done in holiday. Howard.

4. Not kept till fit for use.
5. Not salted; as, unseasoned meat.
UNSEASONED, adj.
1. Not supported.
Him did you leave
Second to none, unseasoned by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. Not exemplified a second time.
Strange and unseasoned shapes of worms succeeded. Brown.

To UNSEASON, v. a. To disclose; to divulge.
He that consulteth what he should do, should not declare what he will do; but let princes beware, that the unseasoning
of their affairs comes not from themselves. Bacon.

churches, in such unseasonable fashion, as is done in holiday. Howard.

This digression I conceived not unseasonable for this place,
nor upon this occasion. Clarendon.

Haply mention may arise
Of something not unseasonable to ask. Milton.

Timothy lay out a-nights, and went abroad often at un-
seasonable hours. Arbutnot.

2. Not agreeable to the time of the year.
Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolv'd in tears. Shakspeare.

3. Late; as, unseasonable time of night.
UNSEASONABLENESS, n. f. Disagreement with time or place.
The moral goodness, unfitness, and unseasonableness of moral or natural actions, falls not within the verge of a brutal faculty. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

UNSEASONABLY, adv. Not seasonably; not agreeably to time
or occasion.
Some things it is athen unseasonably, when they need not to be prayed for, as deliverance from thunder and tempest,
when no danger is nigh. Hooker, b. v.

Leave to fathom such high points as these,
Not be ambitious, ere the time, to please;
Unseasonably wise, till age and cares
Have form'd thy soul to manage great affairs. Dryden.

By the methods prescribed, more good, and less mischief,
will be done in acute distempers, than by medicines improperly and unseasonably applied. Arbutnot.

Ulysses yielded unseasonably, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Brown.

UNSEASONED, adj.
1. Unseasonable; untimely; ill-timed. Out of use.
Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours perforce must add
Unto your sickness. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

I think myself in a better plight for a lender than you are;
the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned
intrusion. Shakspeare.

2. Unformed; not qualified by use.
'Tis an unseason'd courtier; advise him. Shakspeare.

3. Irregular; inordinate.
The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable fashion, as is done in holiday. Howard.

4. Not kept till fit for use.
5. Not salted; as, unseasoned meat.
UNSEASONED, adj.
1. Not supported.
Him did you leave
Second to none, unseasoned by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. Not exemplified a second time.
Strange and unseasoned shapes of worms succeeded. Brown.

To UNSEASON, v. a. To disclose; to divulge.
He that consulteth what he should do, should not declare
what he will do; but let princes beware, that the unseasoning
of their affairs comes not from themselves. Bacon.

UNSECRETE, adj. Not close; not trusty.
Who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves? Shakspeare.

UNSECURE, adj. Not safe.
Love, though most sure,
Yet always to itself seems unsecure. Denham.

UNSECCED, adj. Not drawn to ill.
If the remain unsecced, you not making 'it appear otherwise; for your ill opinion, and th' assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword. Shakspeare.

Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unhaken, unsecced, unterrify'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNSECCING, adj. Wanting the power of vision.
I shou'd have scratch'd out your unseccing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee.

2. UNSENT for. Not called by letter or messenger.
If a physician should go from house to house unsent for, and enquire what woman hath a cancer, or what man a fistula, he would be as unwelcome as the disease itself. Taylor.
Somewhat of weighty consequence brings you here so often, and unsent for. Dryden.
UNSEPARABLE. adj. Not to be parted; not to be divided.
Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Who twine as 'twere in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
Break out to bitterest enmity. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
UNSEPARATED. adj. Not parted.
To whom Persephone, entire and whole,
Gave to retain th' unseparated soul. Pope's Odyssey.
UNSERVICABLE. adj. Useless; bringing no advantage or convenience.
The beast, impatient of his smarting wound,
Thought with his wings to fly above the ground;
But his late wounded wing unservicable found. Spenser.
'Tis certainly demonstrated, that the condensation and expansion of any proportion of the air, is always proportional to the weight incumbent upon it: so that if the atmosphere had been much greater or less than it is, it would on the surface of the earth, have been unservicable for vegetation and life. Bentley's Sermons.
It can be no unservicable design to religion, to undeceive men in so important a point. Rogers's Sermons.
UNSERVICABLE. adj. Without use; without advantage.
It does not enlarge the dimensions of the globe, or lie idly and unservicably there, but part of it is introduced into the plants which grow thereon, and the rest either remounts again, with the ascending vapour, or is wash'd down into rivers. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
UNSET. adj. Not set; not placed.
They urge that God left nothing in his word undescribed, nothing unset down; and therefore charged them strictly to keep themselves into that without any alteration. Hooker.
TO UNSETTLE. v. a.
1. To make uncertain.
Such a doctrine unsettles the titles to kingdoms and estates; for if the actions from which such settlements spring were illegal, all that is built upon them must be so too; but the last is absurd, therefore the first must be so likewise. Arbutnot.
2. To move from a place.
As big as he was, did there need any great matter to unsettle him. L'Estrange.
3. To overthrow.
UNSETTLED. adj.
1. Not fixed in resolution; not determined; not steady.
Impartially judge, whether from the very first day that our religion was unsettled, and church government flung out of doors, the civil government has ever been able to fix upon a sure foundation. South's Sermons.
A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains. Shakespeare.
Prepar'd I was not
For such a business; there am I found
So much unsettled. Shakespeare.
With them, a bastard of the king decess'd,
And all th' unsettled humours of the land,
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery, voluntary.
Uncertain and unsettled he remains. Shakespeare.
Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself. Milton.
A covetous man deliberated betwixt the qualms of a wambling stomach, and an unsettled mind. L'Estrange.
Unsettled virtue stormy may appear;
Honour, like mine, serenely is severe. Dryden.
2. Unequable; not regular; changeable.
March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most windy and tempestuous, the most unsettled and unequable seasons in most countries. Bentley's Sermons.
3. Not established.
My cruel fate,
And doubts attending an unsettled state,
Forc'd me to guard my coast. Dryden.
4. Not fixed in a place or abode.
David supposed that it could not stand with the duty which he owed unto God, to set himself in a house of cedar trees, and to behold the ark of the Lord's covenant unsettled. Hooker.
UNSETTLEDNESS. n. f.
1. Irresolution; undetermined state of mind.
2. Uncertainty; fluctuation.
The unsettledness of my condition has hitherto put a stop to my thoughts concerning it. Dryden.
3. Want of fixity.
When the sun shines upon a river, though its waves roll this way and that by the wind, yet, for all their unsettledness, the sun strikes them with a direct and certain beam. South.
UNSHIVERED. adj. Not parted; not divided.
Honour and policy, like unshiver'd friends,
I th' war do grow together. Shakespeare, Coriolanus

UNS

Their bands, though slack, no dissolution fear;
Th' unshiver'd parts the greatest pressure bear;
Though loose, and fit to flow, they still cohere. Blackmore.
To Unshiver. v. a. To make otherways than the sex commonly is.
All you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me, from the crown to th' toe, top full
Of direct cruelty. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
UNSHADOWED. adj. Not clouded; not darkened.
He alone sees all things with an unshadowed, comprehensive vision, who eminently is all. Glennville.
UNSHAKEABLE. adj. Not subject to concussion. Not in use.
Your life stands,
As Neptune's park, ribbed and pale in
With rocks unshakeable, and roaring waters. Shakespeare.
UNSHAKED. adj. Not shaken. Not in use.
I know but one,
That unaffailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakespeare, Jul. Caesar.
UNSHAKEN. adj.
1. Not agitated; not moved.
Purposely is
Of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken, when they mellow be. Shakespeare.
The wicked's spite against God, is but like a madman's running his head against the wall, that leaves the wall unshaken, but dashes his own brains out. Boyle.
2. Not subject to concussion.
3. Not weakened in resolution; not moved.
Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unshaken, uneduc'd, untear'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
Ill wast thou shroudest then,
O patient son of God! yet only flood'd Unshaken. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God, in unshaken duty to his vicegerent. Spenser.
His principles were founded in reason, and supported by virtue, and therefore did not lie at the mercy of ambition: his notions were no less steady and unshaken, than just and upright. Adams.
TO UNSHAKEN. v. a. To loose from bonds.
A laudable freedom of thought unshakes their minds from the narrow prejudices of education, and opens their eyes to a more extensive view of the publick good. Adams.
UNSHAKED. adj. Not shamed.
The brave man feels not popular applause;
Unsham'd, though foil'd, he does the best he can:
Force is of brutes, but honour is of man. Dryden.
UNSHAPEN. adj. Mismatch'd; deformed.
This unshapen earth we now inhabit, is the form it was found in, when the waters had retired. Burnet.
Gasping for breath, th' unshapen Phœbe die,
And on the boiling wave extended lie. Adams.
UNSHARED. adj. Not partaken; not had in common.
Bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss;
Tedious unshar'd with thee, and odious soon. Milton.
TO UNSHARE. v. a. To draw from the scabbard.
Executioner, unshar'd thy sword;
Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue. Shakespeare.
Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all
Are brought to the correction of your law:
There is not now a rebel's sword unshar'd. Shakespeare.
Viewing the Trojan reliques, the unshar'd Æneas's sword. Denham.
Arcite, his sword unshar'd. Dryden.
Far hence be souls profane!
Now, Trojan, take the way thy fates afford;
Assume thy courage, and unshar'd thy sword. Dryden.
The Roman senate has resolv'd,
'Till time give better prospects, still to keep
The sword unshar'd, and turn its edge on Caesar. Adams.
Each chief his sev'nfold shield display'd,
And half unshar'd the shining blade. Pope.
UNSHED. adj. Not split.
To blood unshed the rivers must be turn'd. Milton.
UNSHETERED. adj. Wanting a screen; wanting protection.
He is breeding that worm, which will smite this gourd, and leave him unshetered to that scorching wrath of God, which will make the improvement of Jonah's passionate wish, that God would take away his life, his most rational desire. Decay of Piety.
UNSHIELDED. adj. Not guarded by the shield.
He try'd a tough, well-chosen spear!
Though Cygnus then did no defence provide,
But scornful offer'd his unshielded side. Dryden.
TO UNSHIP. v. a. To take out of a ship.
At the cape we landed for fresh water; but discovering a leak, we unshipped our goods, and watered there. Gulivar.
UNSHO'D

UNSHOCKED. adj. Not disfigured; not offended.
Thy spotless thoughts unshock'd the priest may hear. Tickell.
UNSHO'D. adj. [from unshod.] Having no shoes.
Their feet unshod, their bodies wrapt in rags;
And both as swift on foot, as chased flags. Fairy Queen.
Withhold thy foot from being unshod. Jer. ii.
The king's army, naked and unshod, would, through those inclosed parts, have done them little harm. Clarendon.
UNSHOOK. part. adj. Not shaken.
Pit, box, and gallery in convulsions hurl'd,
Thou stand'st unshook amidst a burbling world. Pope.
UNSHO'RN. adj. Not clipped.
This strength, diffus'd
No less through all my sinews, joints and bones,
Than thine, while I prefer'd these locks unshorn,
The pledge of my unviolated vow. Milton's Agonistes.
Straight as a line in beauteous order stood,
Of oaks unshorn, a venerable wood. Dryden.
UNSHO'T. part. adj. Not hit by shot.
He that on her his bold hand lays,
With Cupid's pointed arrow plays;
They, with a touch, they are so keen,
Wound us unshot, and the unseen. Waller.
TO UNSHO'UT. v. a. To annihilate, or retract a shout.
Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcus;
Repeat him, with the welcome of his mother. Shakespeare.
UNSHOWER'D. adj. Not watered by showers.
Nor is Oris seen
In Memphian grove or green,
Trampling th' unshower'd grafs with lowings loud. Milton.
UNSHRINKING. adj. Not recoiling; not shunning danger or pain.
Your fan, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But, like a man, he died. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
UNSHUNNABLE. adj. Inevitable.
'Tis the plague of great ones,
Prerogativ'd as they less than the base;
'Tis destiny unshunnable like death. Shakespeare, Othello.
UNSHUT. adj.
1. Not parted by a sieve.
The ground one year at rest, forget not thou
With richest dung to hearten it again,
Or with unshut althes. Moy's Virgil.
2. Not tied.
Affection! puh! you speak like a green girl,
Unshut in such perilous circumstance. Shakespeare.
UNSHUT. adj. Not seeing. A low word, used only with unseen, as in the example following. Probably formed by corruption of unshut.
They'll say our business to reform
The church and state is but a worm;
For to subscribe, unshut, unseen,
To an unknown church discipline. Hudibras.
UNSHUT. adj. Invisible; not seen.
Beauties that from worth arise,
Are like the grace of deities,
Still present with us, though unshut. Suckling.
UNSHUTLINESS. n. f. [from unshut.] Deformity; disagreeableness to the eye.
The unshutlines in the legs, may be helped, by wearing a laced stocking. Wife'sman's Surgery.
UNSHUTLY. adj. Disagreeable to the sight.
On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food.—
—Good Sir, no more: these are unshut tricks. Shakespeare.
Those blossoms also, and those dropping gums,
That lie bestrown, unshut, and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milton.
Amongst the rest, a small, unshut root,
But of divine effect, he call'd me out. Milton.
It must have been a fine genius for gardening, that could have formed such an unshut hollow, into so beautiful an area. Spectator, N° 477.
UNSHUTTER. adj. [from unshut, Lat.]
1. Not hearty; not faithful.
2. Not genuine; impure; adulterated.
I have so often met with chymical preparations, which I have found unshutter, that I dare scarce trust any. Boyle.
3. Not found; not solid.
Myrrha was joy'd at the welcome news to hear;
But, clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unshutter. Dryden.
UNSHUTTER. adj. Adulteration; cheat.
A spirit of sea-fate may, without any unshutter, be so prepared, as to dissolve crude gold. Boyle.
TO UNSHUT. v. a. To deprive of strength.
Not are the nerves of his compacted strength,
Stretch'd and dissolv'd into unshut length. Denham.

Now toys and trifles from their Athens come,
And dates and pepper have unsnaw'd Rome. Dryden.
The affected purity of the French has unsnaw'd their heroic verse. The language of an epic poem is almost wholly figurative: yet are they so fearful of a metaphor, that no example of Virgil can encourage them to be bold with safety. Dryden.
UNSNOWED. adj. Not scorched; not touched by fire.
By the command of Domitian, when cast into a chaldron of burning oil, he came out unsnaw'd. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Three men pass'd through a fiery furnace, unscorch'd, unsnaw'd. Stephens's Sermons.
UNSNOWING. adj. Not sinking.
Anxur feels the cool refreshing breeze
Blown off the sea, and all the dewy strand Lies cover'd with a smooth, unsnawing sand. Adams.
UNSNOWED. adj. Nerveless; weak.
Two special reasons
May to you, perhaps, seem much unsnaw'd,
And yet to me are strong. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
UNSNOWING. adj. Impeccable.
A perfect unsnawing obedience, free from particular acts of transgression. Rogers.
UNSNOWED. adj. Not measured; not computed.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unsnaw'd twiftness will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
UNSNOWED. adj. Wanting skill; wanting knowledge.
Unsnaw'd in Hellebore, if thou shouldst try
To mix it, and mistake the quantity,
The rules of physick would against thee cry. Dryden.
Unsnaw'd and young, yet something still I writ,
Of Ca'dith beauty, join'd to Cecil's wit. Prior.
Not eastern monarchs on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine to gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unsnaw'd. Blackmore.
Poets, like painters, thus unsnaw'd to trace
The naked nature, and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover every part,
And hide with ornaments their want of art. Pope.
UNSNOWFUL. adj. Wanting art; wanting knowledge.
This overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unsnawful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve. Shakespeare.
Hear his sighs, though mute:
Unsnawful with what words to pray, let me Interpret for him. Milton's Par. Lost.
A man, unsnawful in syllogism, could perceive the weakness and inconclusiveness of a long, artificial, and plausible discourse.
Using a man's words, according to the propriety of the language, though it be not always understood, leaves the blame on him, who is so unsnawful in the language as not to understand it, when used as it ought. Locke.
UNSNOWFULLY. adv. Without knowledge; without art.
You speak unsnawfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darkened in your malice. Shakespeare.
UNSNOWFULNESS. n. f. Want of art; want of knowledge.
The sweetness of her countenance did give such a grace to what she did, that it did make handsome the unhandlome-ness, and make the eye force the mind to believe that there was a praise in that unsnawfulness. Sidney.
Let no prices be heightened by the necessity or unsnawfulness of the contractor. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
UNSNOWING. adj. Not killed.
If there were any who felt a pity of so great a fall, and had yet any sparks of unsnawing duty left in them towards me, yet durst they not shew it. Sidney, b. iii.
Not hecatomb unsnaw, nor vows unpaid,
On Greeks accurs'd, this dire contagion bring. Dryden.
UNSLAKED. adj. Not quenched.
Her desires new rous'd,
And yet unslak'd, will kindle in her fancy,
And make her eager to renew the feast. Dryden.
Wheat steep'd in brine, drawing the brine from it, they mix with unslak'd lime beat to powder, and so sow it. Mortimer.
UNSLIPPING. adj. Ever wakeful.
And roscate dews dispos'd
All but th' unslipping eyes of God to rest. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNSLIPPING. adj. Not liable to slip; fast.
To knit your hearts
With an unslipping knot, take, Antony, Octavia to wife. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
UNSLIPPING. adj. Unpolluted; not stained.
That drop of blood that's calm proclaims me bastard;
Cries cuckold to my father; brands the harlot
Even here, between the chaste and unslipping brow
Of my true mother. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
UNSMOKED. adj. Not smoked.
His antient pipe in fable dy'd,
And half unsmak'd lay by his side. Swift.

UNSMOOTH. adj. Rough; not even; not level. Not used.
Those blossoms, and those dropping gums
That lie betwixt, unsmoothly, and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milton.

UNSOICIABLE. adj. [insoiciabilis, Lat.] Not kind; not communicative of good; not suitable to society.
By how much the more we are accompanied with plenty,
By so much the more greedily is our end desired, whom when time hath made unsoiciable to others, we become a burden to ourselves. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Such a behaviour deters men from a religious life, by representing it as an unsoiciable state, that extinguishes all joy. Addison's Spectator, N° 497.

UNSOICIABLY. adv. Not kindly; without good-nature.
These are pleas'd with nothing that is not unsoiciably four, ill-natur'd, and troublesome. L'Estrange.

UNSOILED. adj. Not polluted; not tainted; not stained.
Who will believe thee, Isabel?
My unsoil'd name, th' austereness of my life,
Will your accusation overweigh. Shakespeare.
The humours are transparent, to let in the light, unsoiled and unobscured by any inward tincture. Roy.
Her Aethiopian stream remains unsoil'd, Unmix'd with foreign filth, and undefil'd. Dryden.

UNSOILED. adj. Not exchanged for money.
Mopius the sage, who future things foretold,
And other fees, yet by his wife unsoild. Dryden.
Adieu, my children! better thus expire
Unfall'd, unsoild; thus glorious mount in fire. Pope.

UNSOILDERLIKE. adj. Unbecoming a soldier.
Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept; but even this would be unsoilderlike in our age. Broome.

UNSOILED. adj. Fluid; not coherent.
The extension of body is nothing but the cohesion of solid, separable, moveable parts; and the extension of space, the continuity of unsoild, inseparable and unmoveable parts. Locke.

UNSOIL'D. for unsoiled. Spenser.

UNSOUPHISTICATED. adj. Not adulterated.
The humour and tinctures are purely transparent, to let in light and colours, unsoiled and unsouphisticated by any inward tincture. Moré's Antidote against Atheism.
Blue vitriol, how venerable and unsouphisticated loever, rubb'd upon the whetted blade of a knife, will not impart its latent colour. Boyle.

UNSOUPHISTICATED. adj. Not explicated.
Why may not a sincere searcher of truth, by labour and prayer, find out the solution of those perplexities, which have hitherto been unsoild? Watts.
As Virgil propounds a riddle which he leaves unsoild;
so I will give you another, and leave the explication to your acute judgment. Dryden.

UNSOUPHISTICATED. adj. Not distributed by proper separation.
Their ideas, ever indifferent and repugnant, lie in the brain
unsoild, and thrown together without order. Watts.

UNSOUPHISTICATED. adj.
1. Had without seeking.
Mad man, that does seek Occasion of wrath, and cause of strife;
She comes unsoild; and thinned, follows eke. Fairy Queen.
Her virtue, and the conscience of her worth,
That would be woo'd, and not unsoild be won. Milton.
They new hope resume,
To find whom at the first they found unsoild. Milton.
The sea o'er-fraught would swell, and th' unsoild diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
Slumber, which forgot
When call'd before to come, now came unsoild. Milton.
If some foreign and unsoild ideas offer themselves, reject them, and keep them from taking off our minds from its present pursuit. Locke.
Thou that art ne'er from velvet slipper free,
Whence comes this unsoild honour unto me? Fenton.

2. Not feared.
Hopeless to find, yet loth to leave unsoild,
Or that, or any place that harbours men. Shakespeare.

UNSOUPHISTICATED. adj.
1. Sickly; wanting health.
Intemperate youth
Ends in an age imperfect, and unsoild. Denham.
An animal whose juices are unsoild, can never be duly nourished; for unsoild juices can never duly repair the fluids and solids. Arbutnot.

2. Not free from cracks.
Rotten; corrupted.
Not orthodox.
These arguments being found and good, it cannot be un- soild or evil to hold still the same assertion. Hooker.

UNS

Eutyches of sound belief, as touching their true personal copulation, become unsoild, by denying the difference which still continueth between the one and the other nature. Hooker.

5. Not honest; not upright.
Do not tempt my misery,
Left it should make me unsoild a man,
As to upbraid you with those kindneses
That I have done for you. Shakespeare.

6. Not true; not certain.
Their vain humours, fed
With fruitless follies and unsoild delights. Hubbard's Tale.

7. Not fast; not calm.
The now sad king,
Toss'd here and there, his quiet to confound,
Feels sudden terror bring cold shivering;
Lifts not to eat; still mutes; sleeps unsoild. Daniel.

8. Not close; not compact.
Some lands make unsoild cheese, notwithstanding all the care of the good housewife. Mortimer's Husbandry.

9. Not sincere; not faithful.
This Boobycloud soon drops upon the ground
A certain token that his love's unsoild;
While Lubberkin ticks firmly. Gay.

10. Not solid; not material.
Of such subtle substance and unsoild,
That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-cloaths are unbound. Fairy Queen.

11. Erroneous; wrong.
What fury, what conceit unsoild,
Presenteth here to death so sweet a child?
His puillance, trusting in th' Almighty's aid,
I mean to try, whose reason I have try'd
unsoild and false. Milton.

12. Not fast under foot.
UNSOUPHISTICATED. adj. Not tried by the plummet.
Gloster is unsoild yet, and full of deep deceit. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
Orpheus lute was string'd with poets sinews,
Whole golden touch could soften steel and stones;
Make tygers tame, and huge Leviathans Forfake unsoild deeps to dance on sands. Shakespeare.

UNSOUPHISTICATED. n. f.
1. Errorneousness of belief; want of orthodoxy.
If this be unsoild, wherein doth the point of unsoild lie? Hooker, b. iv.

2. Corruptness of any kind.
Neither is it to all men apparent, which complain of un- sound parts, with what kind of unsoild every such part possessed. Hooker, b. iv.

3. Want of strength; want of solidity.
The unsoild of this principle has been often expos'd, and is universally acknowledged. Addison.

UNSOUPHISTICATED. adj.
1. Not made four.
Meat and drink last longer unputrified and unsoild in winter than in summer. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Not made more.
Secure these golden early joys,
That youth unsoild with sorrow bears. Dryden.
UNSOUPHISTICATED. adj. Not propagated by scattering seed.
Mushrooms come up hastily in a night, and yet are un- soild. Jeson.
If the ground lie fallow and unsoild, corn-flowers will not come. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
And western winds immortal spring maintain'd. Dryden.

UNSPARED. adj. Not spared.
Whatever thing
The scythe of time mows down, devour unspared. Milton.

UNSPARING. adj. Not sparing; not parsimonious.
She gathers tribute large, and on the board
Heaps with unsparring hand. Milton.

TO UNSPARE. v. a. To retract; to recant.
I put myself to thy direction, and unspare mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself. Shakespeare.

UNSPAREABLE. adj. Not to be expressed.
A thing, which uttered with true devotion and zeal of heart, affordeth to God himself that glory, that aid to the weakest sort of men, to the most perfect that solid comfort, which is unspareable. Hooker, b. v.
A heavier task could not have been impos'd,
Than I to speak my grief unspareable. Shakespeare.
Unspareable: for who, though with the tongue
Of angels, can relate?
The comfort it conveys is something bigger than the capacities of mortality; mighty, and unspareable; and not to be understood, till it comes to be felt. Saunders's Sermons.
This fills the minds of weak men with groundless fears, and unspareable rage towards their fellow subjects. Ux-

UNS

UNSPAREABLY. adv. Inexpressibly; ineffably.
When nature is in her dissolution, and presents us with nothing but bleak and barren prospects, there is something un- spareably cheerful in a spot of ground which is covered with trees, that smile amidst all the rigours of winter. Spectator.

UNSPECIFIED. adj. Not particularly mentioned.
Were it not requisite that it should be concealed, it had not passed unspecified. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

UNSPECULATIVE. adj. Not theoretical.
Some unspeculative men may not have the skill to examine their assertions. Government of the Tongue.

UNSPED. adj. Not dispatched; not performed.
Venustus withdraws,
Unsped the service of the common cause. Corth.

UNSPENT. adj. Not wasted; not diminished; not weakened;
not exhausted.
The found inclosed within the sides of the bell, cometh forth at the holes unspent and more strong. Bacon.
Thy fame, not circumscrib'd with English ground,
Flies like the nimble journeys of the light,
And is, like that, unspent too in its flight. Dryden.

TO UNSPARE. v. a. To remove from its orb.
You put me off with limber vows; but I,
Though you would seek t' unspare the stars with oaths,
Should yet say, Sir, no going.
Let my lamp at midnight hour
Be seen in some high lonely tow'r,
Where I may oft out-watch the bear,
With thrice-great Hermes; or unspare
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds, or what vast regions hold
Th' immortal mind. Milton.

UNSPENT. adj. Not discovered; not seen.
With narrow search I must walk round
This garden, and no corner leave unsp'd. Milton.
Resolv'd to find some fault, before unsp'd;
And disappointed, if but satisfy'd. Tickell.

UNSPENT. adj.
1. Not shed.
That blood which thou and thy great grandfire shed;
And all that since these sister nations bled,
Had been unsp'd, had happy Edward known,
That all the blood he spilt had been his own. Denham.

2. Not spoiled; not marred.
To borrow to-day, and to-morrow to mis,
For lender or borrower noance it is;
Then have of thine own, without lending unsp'd. Tuffer.

TO UNSPENT. v. a. To dissipate; to deprecate; to deject.
Denmark has continued ever since weak and unsp'd,
bent only upon safety.
Could it be in the power of any temporal loss, so much to discompose and unsp'd my soul? Norris.

UNSPENT. adj.
1. Not plundered; not pillaged.
All the way that they fled, for very deepight, in their return they utterly wasted whatsoever they had before left un- sp'd. Spenser's State of Ireland.
The English search'd the rivers in such sort, as they left few ships unsp'd or untaken. Hayward.
Unsp'd shall be her arms, and unprofan'd
Her holy limbs. Dryden.

2. Not married.
UNSPENT. adj.
1. Not marked with any stain.
A milk-white hind,
Without unsp'd, innocent within. Dryden.
Seven bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chuse,
And for Diana seven unsp'd ewes. Dryden.

2. Immaculate; not tainted with guilt.
Satyrus bid him other business ply,
Than hunt the steps of pure, unsp'd maid. Fairy Queen.
A heart unsp'd is not easily daunted. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
There is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unsp'd soldiers. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
Pure religion and undefiled is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unsp'd from the world. James's 1. 27.
Widom is the grey hair to men, and an unsp'd life is old age. Apocrypha.
Make her his eternal bride;
And from her fair unsp'd side
Two blissful twins are to be born. Milton.
Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave
His prey, nor suffer my unsp'd soul
For ever with corruption there to dwell. Milton.
Vindicate the honour of religion, by a pure and unsp'd obedience to its precepts. Rogers's Sermons.

UNSPENT. adj. Not formed; irregular.
When he speaks,
'Tis like a chime a mending, with terms unsp'd;
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperboles. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.

UNSTABLE. adj. [instabilis, Lat.]
1. Not fixed; not fast.
Where gentry, title, wisdom,
Cannot conclude by the yea and no
Of general ignorance, it must omit Real necessities, and give way the while T' unstable lightness. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
A popular state not founded on the general interests of the people, is of all others the most uncertain, unstable, and subject to the most easy changes. Temple.
Thus air was void of light, and earth unstable. Dryden.
See harness'd steeds desert the stony town,
And wander roads unstable, not their own. Gay.

2. Inconstant; irresolute.
A double-minded man is unstable. James's 1. 8.

UNSTABLE. adj. Not cool; not prudent; not settled into difcretion; not steady; mutable.
His unstable youth had long wandered in the common labyrinth of love; in which time, to warn young people of his unfortunate folly, he compiled these twelve oeglogues. Spenser.
To the gay gardens his unstable desire
Him wholly carried, to refresh his frights. Spenser.
Will the king come, that I may breathe my last
In wholesome counsel to his unstable youth. Shakespeare.
Tell me, how will the world's repute me,
For undertaking to unstable a journey?
I fear it will make me scandalized. Shakespeare.
Wo to that land,
Which gasps beneath a child's unstable command. Sandys.
Vice leads Vain unstable youth to beggary and shame. Richards.

UNSTABLE. n. f. Indiscretion; volatile mind.
The oft changing of his colour, with a kind of shaking unstable over all his body, he might see in his countenance some great determination mixed with fear. Sidney.

UNSTABLE. adj. Not stained; not died; not discoloured.
Pure and unstable religion ought to be the highest of all cares appertaining to public regimen. Hooker, b. v.
Ne let her waves with any filth be dy'd,
But ever, like herself, unstable hath been try'd. Fa. Queen.
I do commit into your hand
Th' unstable sword that you have us'd to bear,
With this remembrance, that you use the same
With a like bold, just, and impartial spirit,
As you have done gainst me. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.
I will do it without fear or doubt,
To live an unstable wife to my sweet love. Shakespeare.
Your youth,
And the true blood which peeps forth faintly through it,
Do plainly give you out an unstable shepherd. Shakespeare.
The hooked chariot stood
Unstable with hostile blood. Milton.
That good earl, once president
Of England's council, and her treasury;
Who liv'd in both unstable with gold or fee,
And left them both, more in himself content. Milton.
Her people guiltless, and her fields unstable. Recommon.
These, of the garter call'd, of faith unstable,
In fighting fields the laurel have obtain'd. Dryden.

TO UNSTABLE. v. a. To put out of state.
High-battled Caesar will
Unstable his happiness, and be flag'd to th' shew Against a sword. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
I would unstable myself, to be in a due resolution. Shakespeare.

UNSTABLE. adj. Contrary to statutes.
That plea did not avail, although the lease were notoriously unstable, the rent reserv'd, being not a seventh part of the real value. Swift.

UNSTABLE. adj. Not stopped; not stayed.
With the issuing blood
Stille the villain, whole unstable thirst York and young Rutland could not satisfy. Shakespeare.

UNSTEADILY. adv.
1. Without any certainty.
2. Inconstantly; not consistently.
He that uses his words loosely and unsteadily, will not be minded, or not understood. Locke.

UNSTEADINESS. n. f. Want of constancy; irresolution; mutability.
A prince of this character, will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics. Addison.
In the result, we find the same spirit of cruelty, the same blindness, and obstinacy, and unsteadiness. Swift.

UNSTEADY. adj.
1. Inconstant; irresolute.
And her unsteady hand hath often plac'd Men in high pow'r, but seldom holds them fast. Denham.
No measures can be taken of an unsteady mind; still 'tis too much or too little. L'Estrange.
While

UNS

While choice remains, he will be still unsteady,
And nothing but necessity can fix him. Rowe.
2. Mutable; variable; changeable.
If the motion of the sun were as unequal as that of a ship driven by unsteady winds, it would not at all help us to measure time. Locke.
3. Not fixed; not settled.
UNSTEADFAST. adj. Not fixed; not fast.
I'll read you matter,
As full of peril and advent'rous spirit,
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteady footing of a spear. Shakespeare.
UNSTEADY. adj. Not steady.
Other wheat was sown unstepped, but watered twice a day. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
To UNSTING. v. a. To disarm of a sting.
He has disarmed his afflictions, unstung his miseries; and though he has not the proper happiness of the world, yet he has the greatest that is to be enjoyed in it. South's Sermons.
UNSTINTED. adj. Not limited.
In the works of nature is unstinted goodness shewn us by their author. Skellon.
UNSTIRRED. adj. Not stirred; not agitated.
Such seeming milks suffered to stand unstirred, let fall to the bottom a reinous substance. Boyle on Colours.
To UNSTITCH. v. a. To open by picking the stitches.
Cato well observes, though in the phrase of a taylor, friendship ought not to be unripped, but unstitched. Callier.
UNSTOOPING. adj. Not bending; not yielding.
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
Th' unstooping firmness of my upright soul. Shakespeare.
To UNSTOP. v. a. To free from stop or obstruction; to open.
Such white fumes have been afforded, by unstopping a liquor diaphanous and red. Boyle on Colours.
The eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf unstopped. Isa. xxxv. 5.
One would wonder to find such a multitude of niches un-stopped. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
UNSTOPPED. adj. Meeting no resistance.
The flame unstopp'd, at first more fury gains,
And Vulcan rides at large with loos'n'd reigns. Dryden.
UNSTRAINED. adj. Easy; not forced.
By an easy and unstrained derivation, it implies the breath of God. Hakewill on Providence.
UNSTRATIFIED. adj. Not contracted.
The eternal wisdom, from which we derive our beings, enriched us with all these embellishments that were suitable to the measures of an unstrained goodness, and the capacity of such a creature. Clarville.
UNSTRENGTHENED. adj. Not supported; not assisted.
The church of God is neither of capacity so weak, nor so unstrengthened with authority from above, but that her laws may exact obedience at the hands of her own children. Hooker.
To UNSTRING. v. a.
1. To relax any thing string; to deprive of strings.
My tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstrung viol or harp. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
Eternal structures let them raise,
On William and Maria's praise;
Nor fear they can exhaust the store,
'Till nature's music lies unstrung.
'Till thou, great God! shalt lose thy double pow'r,
And touch thy lyre, and shoot thy beams no more. Prior.
His idle horn on fragrant myrtles hung;
His arrows scatter'd, and his bow unstrung. Smith.
2. To loose; to untie.
Invaded thus, for want of better bands,
His garland they unstring, and bind his hands. Dryden.
UNSTRUCK. adj. Not moved; not affected.
Over dank and dry,
They journey toilsome, un-fatig'd with length
Of march, unstruck with horror at the sight
Of Alpine ridges bleak. Philips.
UNSTUPEID. adj. Not premeditated; not laboured.
In your conversation I cou'd observe a clearness of notion, express'd in ready and unstupid words. Dryden.
UNSTUPID. adj. Unfilled; unfurnished.
Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye;
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth, with unstudied brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shak.
UNSUBSTANTIAL. adj.
1. Not solid; not palpable.
Welcome, thou unsubstantial air that I embrace;
Th' wretch that thou hast blown unto the world,
Owes nothing to thy blasts. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Darkness now rose,
As daylight funk, and brought in low'ring night,
Her shadowy offsprings, unsubstantial both,
Privation more of light and absent day. Milton.

2. Not real.
If such empty, unsubstantial beings may be ever made use of on this occasion, there were never any more nicely imagined and employed. Addison.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not succeeded.
Unjust equal o'er equals to let reign;
One over all, with unsuccessful power. Milton.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not having the wished event; not successful.
O the sad fate of unsuccessful love!
You see yon heads without, there's worse within. Cleveland.
Ye pow'rs retain'd
From unsuccessful charge, be not dismay'd.
Hence appear the many mistakes, which have made learning generally so unpleasant and so unsuccessful. Milton.
My counsels may be unsuccessful, but my prayers
Shall wait on all your actions. Duncan.
The corruption, perverseness, and vitiosity of man's will, he charges as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with, unsuccessful. South.
Had Portius been the unsuccessful lover,
The same compassion would have fall'n on him. Addison.
Successful authors do what they can to exclude a competitor, while the unsuccessful, with as much eagerness, lay their claim to him as their brother. Addison.
Those are generally more unsuccessful in their pursuit after fame, who are more desirous of obtaining it. Addison.
Leave dang'rous truths to unsuccessful fate. Pope.
UNSUCCESSFULLY. adv. Unsuccessfully; without success.
The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently;
while the ambitious man attempts to please others finally,
and, perhaps, in the issue unsuccessfully too. South.
UNSUCCESSFULNESS. n. f. Want of success; event contrary to wish.
Admonitions, fraternal or paternal, then more public reprehensions, and upon the unsuccessfulness of all these milder medicaments, the censures of the church. Hammond.
UNSUCCESSIVE. adj. Not proceeding by flux of parts.
We cannot sum up the unsuccessive and stable direction of God. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The unsuccessive duration of God with relation to himself, doth not communicate unto other created beings, the same manner of duration. Hale.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not having the breasts drawn.
Unluck'd of lamb or kid, that tend their play. Milton.
UNSUCCESSFUL. n. f. Not supportable; intolerable; not to be endured.
The irksome deformities, whereby through endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, they oftentimes disgrace, in most unsuccessful manner, the worthiest part of christian duty towards God. Hakewill.
That glorious form, that light unsuccessful,
And that far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he wont at heav'n's high council table
To sit the midst of trinal unity, Milton.
He laid aside.
A sinking breath, and twenty ill smells besides, are more unsuccessful by her natural fluttliness. Swift.
UNSUCCESSFUL. n. f. [Inefficiency, Fr.] Inability to answer the end proposed.
The error and unsuccessfulness of the arguments, doth make it on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things as he hath not enabled them to prove. Hakewill.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. [Inefficiency, Fr.] Unable; inadequate.
Malebranche having shewed the difficulties of the other ways, and how unsuccessful they are, to give a satisfactory account of the ideas we have, erects this, of seeing all things in God, upon their ruin, as the true. Locke.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not sweetened with sugar.
Try it with sugar put into water formerly sugared, and into other water unsugared. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not congruous; not equal; not proportionate.
Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion; richly suited, but unsuitable, just like the brooch and the tooth-pick, which we wear not now. Shakespeare.
He will smile upon her, which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy, that it cannot but turn him into contempt. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
That would likest render contempt instead;
Hard recompence, unsuitable return
For so much good. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
All that heaven and happiness signifies is unsuitable to a wicked man; and therefore could be no felicity to him. Tilley.
Consider whether they be not unnecessary expenses; such as are unsuitable to our circumstances. Atterbury.
To enter into a party, as into an order of friars, with lo-renseign an obedience to superiors, is very unsuitable with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously assert. Swift.
UNSUCCESSFULNESS. n. f. Incongruity; unsuitableness.
The unsuitableness of one man's aspect to another man's fancy, has raised such an aversion, as has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.
UNSUCCESSFUL.

UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not fitting; not becoming.
Whilst you were here, o'erwhelmed with your grief,
A passion most unsuited such a man,
Cassio came hither. Shakespeare. Othello.
Leave thy joys, unsuited such an age,
To a fresh corner, and resign the stage. Dryden.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not fouled; not disgraced; pure.
My maiden honour yet is pure
As the unsuited lily. Shakespeare.
To royal authority, a most dutiful observance has ever been the proper, unsuited honour of your church. Sprat's Sermons.
Rays which on Hough's unsuited mitre shine. Pope.
These an altar raise:
An hecatomb of pure, unsuited lays
That altar crowns. Pope.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not celebrated in verse; not recited in verse.
Thus was the first day ev'n and morn,
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial choirs. Milton's Par. Lost.
Half yet remains unsung; but narrower bound
Within the visible diurnal sphere.
Here the muse fo oft her harp has strung,
That not a mountain rears its head unsung. Addison.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not exposed to the sun.
I thought her as chaste as unsung snow. Shakespeare.
You may as well spread out the unsung d'heaps
Of misers treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe, as bid me hope
Danger will wink an opportunity,
And let a single, helpless maiden pass
Uninjur'd in this wild surrounding waste. Milton.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not more than enough.
Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuited flux, even proportion,
And the no whit encumber'd with her store. Milton.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj.
1. Not forced, or thrown from under that which supports it.
Glad some they quaff, yet not encroach on night,
Season of rest; but well bedew'd repair
Each to his home with unsuited feet. Philips.
2. Not defeated by stratagem.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not supplied; not accommodated with something necessary.
Prodigal in ev'ry other grant,
Her fire left unsuited her only want. Dryden.
Every man who enjoys the possession of what he naturally wants, and is unmindful of the unsuited distress of other men, betrays the same temper. Spektor.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. [Insuperable, Fr.] Intolerable; such as cannot be endured.
The uneasiness of unrelieved thirst, by continuance grows
the more unsupportable. Boyle.
The waters mounted up into the air, thicken and cool it;
and by their interposition betwixt the earth and the sun, fence off the ardent heat, which would be otherwise unsupportable. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adv. Intolerably.
For a man to do a thing, while his conscience assures him that he shall be infinitely, unsupportably miserable, is certainly unnatural. South.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj.
1. Not sustained; not held up.
Gently with myrtle band; mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupporting flow'r. Milton.

On the coast averie
From entrance, or cherubick watch, by stealth Found unsuspected way. Milton's Par. Lost.
This day, my Pericles, thou shalt perceive,
Whether I keep myself those rules I give,
Or else an unsuspected glutton live. Dryden.
They are persons of unquestionable abilities, altogether
unsuspected of avarice or corruption. Swift.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Not imagining that any ill is designed.
When Albion sends her eager sons to war,
Pleas'd, in the gen'ral fight, the host lie down
Sudden, before some unsuspecting town;
The captive race, one instant makes our prize,
And high in air Britannia's standard flies. Pope.
UNSUCCESSFUL. adj. Having no suspicion.
He his guide requested to let him lean
With both his arms on those two massy pillars,
That to the arched roof gave main support:
He unsuspicious led him. Milton's Agonistes.
The easy queen receiv'd my faint address,
With eager hope and unsuspicious faith. Smith.

 Man alone acts more contrary to nature, than the wild and most untamed part of the creation. Locke.
 To UNTAGLE v. a. To loose from intricacy or convolu-
 tion.
 O time, thou must untangle this, not I;
 It is too hard a knot for me to untie. Shakespeare.
 This is that very Mab,
 That cakes the clocks, in foul, fluttish hairs,
 Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes. Shakespeare.
 I'll give thee up my bow and dart;
Untangle but this cruel chain,
 And freely let me fly again. Prior.
UNTAILED adj. Not tailed; not tried by the palate.
 The tall stag resolves to try
 The combat next; but if the cry
 Invades again his trembling ear,
 He straight resumes his wonted care;
 Leaves the untailed spring behind,
 And, wing'd with fear, outflies the wind. Waller.
 If he chance to find
 A new repast, or an untasted spring,
 Blesses his stars, and thinks it luxury. Addison's Cato.
UNTAUSTING adj.
 1. Not perceiving any taste.
 Cydonian oil,
 Whose balmy juice glides o'er th' untasting tongue. Smith.
 2. Not trying by the palate.
UNTAUGHT adj.
 1. Uninstructed; uneducated; ignorant; unlettered.
 A lie is continually in the mouth of the untaught. Eschyl. xx.
 Taught, or untaught, the dunce is still the same;
 Yet still the wretched master bears the blame. Dryden.
 On ev'ry thorn delightful wisdom grows,
 In ev'ry stream a sweet instruction flows;
 But some untaught o'erhear the whispering rill,
 In spite of sacred leisure, blockheads still. Young.
 2. Debar'd from instruction.
 He, that from a child untaught, or a wild inhabitant of the woods, will expect principles of sciences, will find himself mistaken. Locke.
 3. Unskilled; new; not having use or practice.
 Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,
 Us'd to command, untaught to plead for favour. Shakespeare.
 To UNTAUGH v. a. To make to quit, or forget what has been inculcated.
 That elder berries are poison, as we are taught by tradition, experience will untaugh us. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Their customs are by nature wrought;
 But we, by art, untaugh what nature taught. Dryden.
UNTEMPERED adj. Not tempered.
 One built up a wall, and others daubed it with untempered mortar. Ezek. xiii. 10.
UNTEMPERED adj.
 1. Not embarrassed by temptation.
 In temptation dispute not, but rely upon God, and contend not with him but in prayer, and with the help of a prudent untempted guide. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 2. Not invited by any thing alluring.
 Untempted, or by wager or by price,
 He would attempt to climb the precipice. Cotton on the Peak.

 Unbrib'd by love, unterent d by threats;
 These are exploits worthy Achilles son. A. Phillips.
UNTHANKED adj.
 1. Not repaid with acknowledgment of a kindness.
 If all the world
 Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
 Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but freeze,
 Th' all-giver wou'd be unthank'd, wou'd be unprais'd. Mil.
 Their batter'd admiral too soon withdrew,
Unthank'd by ours for his unfinish'd fight. Dryden.
 2. Not received with thankfulness.
 Fore'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live!
 Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve. Dryden.
UNTHANKFUL adj. Ungrateful; returning no acknowledgment for good received.
 The casting away of things profitable for sustenance, is an unthankful abuse of the fruits. Haker.
 He is kind to the unthankful. Luke vi. 35.
 They which he created, were unthankful unto him which prepared life for them. 2 Efr. viii.
 If you reckon that for evil, you are unthankful for the blessing. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
 The bare supposal of one petty loss, makes us unthankful for all that's left. L'Estrange.
UNTHANKFULLY adv. Without thanks; without gratitude.
 I judged it requisite to say something, to prevent my being thought to have unthankfully taken one of the chief passages of my discourse from a book, to which I was utterly a stranger. Boyle.
UNTHANKFULNESS n. f. Neglect or omission of acknowledgement for good received; want of sense of benefits; ingratitude.
 Thou diest in thine unthankfulness; and thine ignorance makes thee away. Shakespeare.
 Immoderate favours breed first unthankfulness, and afterwards hate. Hayward.
 The unthankful stand reckoned among the most enormous sinners, which evinces the virtue opposite to unthankfulness, to bear the same place in the rank of duties. Souto's Sermons.
UNTHAWED adj. Not dissolved after frost.
 Your wine lock'd up,
 Or fish deny'd, the river yet unthaw'd. Pope.
 To UNTHAW v. a. To recal, or dismiss a thought.
 Unbink your speaking, and say no more.
UNTHINKING adj. Thoughtless; not given to reflection.
 Grey-headed infant! and in vain grown old;
 Art thou to learn, that in another's gold Lie charms resistless! that all laugh to find Unbinking plainness so o'erspread thy mind. Dryden.
 An effectual remedy for the wandering of thoughts whoever shall propose, would do great service to the studious, perhaps help unbinking men to become thinking. Locke.
 The unbinking part contract an unreasonable aversion to that ecclesiastical constitution.
 With earnest eyes, and round unbinking face,
 He first the snuff-box open'd, then the case. Pope.
UNTHO'NY adj. Not obstructed by prickles.
 It were some extenuation of the curse, if in untho'ny calumnies were confinable unto corporal exertions, and there still remained a paradise, or untho'ny place of knowledge. Brown.
UNTHOUGHT of. adj. Not regarded; not heeded.
 That shall be the day, when'er it lights,
 This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
 And your unthought of Harry chance to meet. Shakespeare.

 him. Mortimer's Husbandry.
UNTHRIVING adj. Not thriving; not prospering; not growing rich.
 Let all who thus unhappily employ their inventive faculty, consider, how unthriving a trade it is finally like to prove, that their false accusations of others will rebound in true ones on themselves. Government of the Tongue.
 To UNTHRONE v. a. To pull down from a throne.
 Him to unthrene, we then
 May hope, when everlasting fate shall yield
 To fickle chance, and chaos judge the strife. Milton.
 To UNTIE v. a.
 1. To unbind; to free from bonds.
 Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the yesty waves Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
 2. To loosen from convolution or knot.
 All that of myself is mine,
 Lovely Amoret, is thine;
 Sacharilla's captive fair
 Would untie his iron chain;
 And those scorching beams to shun,
 To thy gentle shadow run. Waller.
 The chain I'll in return untie,
 And freely thou again shalt fly. Prior.
 The fury heard; while on Cocytus' brink,
 Her snakes untied, sulphureous waters drink. Pope.

they conclude, that these particular tracts must have lain untouch'd for some ages. Addison.
- UNTO'WARD. adj.
1. Froward; perverse; vexatious; not easily guided, or taught.
Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be unto'ward. Shakspeare.
The ladies prove averies,
And more unto'ward to be won,
Than by Caligula the moon. Hudibras.
The rabbins write, when any Jew
Did make to God or man a vow,
Which afterwards he found unto'ward,
Or stubborn to be kept, or too hard,
Any three other Jews o' th' nation,
Might free him from the obligation. Hudibras.
They were a cross, odd, unto'ward people. South.
Some men have made a very unto'ward use of this, and such as he never intended they should. Woodward.
2. Aukward; ungraceful.
Vast is my theme, yet unconceiv'd, and brings
Untoward words, scarce loosen'd from the things. Creech.
Some clergymen hold down their heads within an inch of the cushion; which, besides the unto'ward manner, hinders them from making the best advantage of their voice. Swift.
UNTO'WARDLY. adj. Aukward; perverse; froward.
They learn, from unbred or debauched servants, unto'wardly tricks and vices. Locke on Education.
UNTO'WARDLY. adv. Aukwardly; ungainly; perversely.
He that provides for this short life, but takes no care for eternity, acts as unto'wardly and as crossly to the reason of things, as can be. Tillotson.
He explained them very unto'wardly. Tillotson.
UNTRA'CEABLE. adj. Not to be traced.
The workings of providence are secret and untraceable, by which it disposes of the lives of men. South's Sermon.
UNTRA'CED. adj. Not marked by any footsteps.
Nor wonder, if advantage'd in my flight,
By taking wing from thy auspicious height,
Through untrae'd ways, and airy paths I fly.
More boundless in my fancy than my eye. Denham.
UNTRA'CTABLE. adj. [invariable, Fr. intractabilis, Lat.]
1. Not yielding to common measures and management; not governable; stubborn.
The French, supposing that they had advantage over the English, began to be stiff, and almost untractable, sharply pressing for speedy resolutions and short meetings. Hayward.
If any father have a son thus perverse and untractable, I know not what more he can do but pray for him. Locke.
Ullers untractable in the legs, with a gangrenous appearance in the skin. Arbutnot on Diet.
2. Rough; difficult.
I forc'd to ride th' untractable abyss. Milton.
UNTRA'CTABLENESS. n. f. Unwillingness, or unfitness to be regulated or managed; stubbornness.
The great difference in mens intellects arises from a defect in the organs of the body, particularly adapted to think; or in the dulness or untractableness of those faculties, for want of use. Locke.
UNTRA'DING. adj. Not engaged in commerce.
Men leave estates to their children in land, as not so liable to casualties as money, in untrading and unskilful hands. Locke.
UNTRAINED. adj.
1. Not educated; not instructed; not disciplined.
My wit untrain'd in any kind of art. Shakspeare.
The king's forces charged lively, and they again as stoutly received the charge; but being an untrained multitude, without any soldier or guide, they were soon put to flight. Hayward.
Life.
To noble and ignoble, is more sweet
Untrain'd in arms, where rashness leads not on. Milton.
No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field; but will, by little bloodless skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight. Deacy of Piety.
2. Irregular; ungovernable.
Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion:
To court each place of fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.
UNTRANSFERABLE. adj. Incapable of being given from one to another.
In parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power, though the sovereignty remain still entire and untransferable, in the prince. Hewel's Pre-eminence of Parliament.
UNTRANSPARENT. adj. Not diaphanous; opaque.
Though held against the light they appear'd of a transparent yellow, yet looked on with one's back turn'd to the light, they exhibited an untransparent blue. Boyle on Colours.

- UNTRAVELLED. adj.
1. Never trodden by passengers.
We find no open track, or constant manuduction in this labyrinth, but are oft times fain to wander in America, and untravelled parts. Brown's Pref. to Vulgar Errors.
Long untravelled d' heaths. Thomson.
2. Having never seen foreign countries.
An untravelled Englishman cannot relish all the beauties of Italian pictures; because the postures expressed in them are often such as are peculiar to that country. Addison.
To UNTR'EAD. v. a. To tread back; to go back in the same steps.
We will untread the steps of damned flight,
And, like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd. Shakspeare.
UNTR'EASURED. adj. Not laid up; not repositied.
Her attendants
Saw her a-bed, and in the morning early
They found the bed untreasur'd of their mistress. Shakspeare.
UNTR'EATABLE. adj. Not treatable; not practicable.
Men are of so untreatable a temper, that nothing can be obtained of them. Decay of Piety.
UNTR'IED. adj.
1. Not yet attempted.
It behoves,
From hard essays, and ill successful paths,
A faithful leader, not to hazard all Through ways of danger, by himself untry'd. Milton.
That she no ways nor means may leave untry'd.
Thus to her sister she herself apply'd. Denham.
2. Not yet experienced.
Never more
Mean I to try, what rash untry'd I fought,
The pain of absence from thy sight. Milton's Par. Lost.
The happiest of mankind overlooking those solid blessings which they already have, set their hearts upon somewhat which they want; some untry'd pleasure, which, if they could but taste, they should then be completely blest. Atterbury.
Self-preservation, the long acquaintance of soul and body, the untry'd condition of a separation, are sufficient reasons not to turn our backs upon life, out of an humour. Collier.
Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untry'd being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass? Addison.
3. Not having passed trial.
The father secure,
Ventures his filial virtue, though untry'd,
Against what'er may tempt. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
UNTRIUMPHABLE. adj. Which allows no triumph.
What towns, what garrisons might you,
With hazard of this blood subdue;
Which now y're bent to throw away
In vain, untriumphable fray? Hudibras.
UNTR'O'D. adj. Not pass'd; not marked by the foot.
UNTR'ODDEN. adj.
1. The way he came, not having mark'd, return
Was difficult, by human steps untr'o'd. Paradise Regain'd.
Now while the heav'n by the sun's team untr'o'd,
Hath took no print of the approaching light,
And all the spangled host keep watch.
A garland made of such new bays,
And fought in such untr'o'd ways,
As no man's temples e'er did crown. Waller.
Who was the first to explore th' untr'o'd path,
When life was hazarded in ev'ry step? Addison's Cato.
UNTR'OLLED. adj. Not bowled; not rolled along.
Hard fate! untr'o'd is now the charming dye;
The playhouse and the parks unvisited must lie. Dryden.
UNTR'OBLED. adj.
1. Not disturbed by care, sorrow, or guilt.
Quiet untr'o'd soul, awake! awake!
Arm, fight and conquer, for fair England's sake. Shakspeare.
2. Not agitated; not confused.
Our Saviour meek, and with untr'o'd mind,
After his airy jaunts, though hurry'd fore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.
3. Not interrupted in the natural course.
Would they think with how small allowance,
Untr'o'd nature doth herself suffice,
Such superfluities they would despise. Fairy Queen.
4. Transparent; clear.
The equal distribution of the spirits in the liquor with the tangible parts, ever representeth bodies clear and untr'o'd. Bacon.
UNTRU'E. adj.
1. False; contrary to reality.
By what construction shall any man make those com-pans true, holding that distinction untrue. Hooker.
That a vessel filled with ashes, will receive the like quantity of water, that it would have done if it had been empty, is utterly untrue, for the water will not go in by a fish part. Bacon.
2. False;

UNT

2. False; not faithful.
I cannot break to sweet a bond,
Unless I prove untrue;
Nor can I ever be so fond,
To prove untrue for you. Suckling.
Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in bothful ease, and loose delights:
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue. Dryden.
UNTRU'LY. adv. Falsely; not according to truth.
It was their hurt *untrue*ly to attribute so great power unto false gods. Hooker, b. v.
On these mountains it is generally received that the ark reited, but *untrue*ly. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
UNTRU'STINESS. n. f. Unfaithfulness.
Secretary Peter, under pretence of gravity, covered much untrustiness of heart. Hayward.
UNTRUTH. n. f.
1. Falsehood; contrariety to reality.
2. Moral falsehood; not veracity.
He who is perfect, and abhors untruth,
With heavenly influence inspires my youth. Sandys.
3. Treachery; want of fidelity.
I would,
So my untruth had not provok'd him to it,
The king had cut off my head with my brother's. Shakspeare.
4. False assertion.
In matter of speculation or practice, no untruth can possibly avail the patron and defender long; and things most truly, are likewise most behovefully spoken. Hooker, b. iii.
There is little hope for common justice in this dispute, from a man, who lays the foundations of his reasonings in so notorious an untruth. Atterbury.
UNTRU'ABLE. adj. Unharmonious; not musical.
My news in dumb silence will I bury;
For they are harsh, *untrue*able, and bad. Shakspeare.
A *untrue*able, merely unequal in its parts, giveth a harsh and *untrue*able sound; which strings we call false. Bacon.
His harsh *untrue*able pipe is no more fit than a raven's, to join with the music of a choir. Tatler, N° 54.
To UNTRU'NE. v. a.
1. To make incapable of harmony.
Take but degree away, untrue that string,
And hark what discord follows. Shakspeare.
When the last and dreadful hour,
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And music shall untrue the sky. Dryden.
The captives, as their tyrant shall require,
That they should breathe the song, and touch the lyre,
Shall say; can Jacob's servile race rejoice,
*Untrue*d the music, and diffus'd the voice? Prior.
2. To disorder.
O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature;
Th' untrue and jarring senses, O wind up
Of this child-changed father. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
UNTRU'NED. adj. Not turned.
New crimes invented, left *untrue*n'd no stone,
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own. Dryden.
So eager hath the inquisitive part of mankind been to bring this matter to a fair issue, that no stone hath been left *untrue*n'd, no way, whereby these things could have been brought forth of the sea, but one or other hath pitch'd upon. Woodward.
UNTRU'TORED. adj. Uninstructed; untaught.
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern *untrue*tor'd churl; and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakspeare.
Thy even thoughts with so much plainness flow,
Their sense *untrue*tor'd infancy may know:
Yet to such height is all that plainness wrought,
Wit may admire, and letter'd pride be taught. Prior.
To UNTRU'NE. v. a.
1. To open what is held together by convolution.
But since the fitters did so soon *untrue*ne
So fair a thread, I'll strive to piece the line. Waller.
2. To open what is wrapped on itself.
It turns finely and softly three or four turns, caused by the unwinding of the beard by the moisture. Bacon.
3. To separate that which clasps round any thing.
Divers worthy gentlemen of England, all the Syren songs of Italy could never *untrue*ne from the mast of God's word. Ascham.
To UNTRU'NE. v. a. To separate any things involved in each other, or wrapped up on themselves.
*Untrue*ning his deceitful clew,
He 'gan to weave a web of wicked guile. Fairy Queen.
The interest of prince and people is so enfolded in a mutual embrace, that they cannot be *untrue*ning without pulling a limb off. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

- Untrue*ning all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony. Milton.
No, I'll untrue you;
I have occasion for your stay on earth. Dryden.
Tarred hempen ropes cut final and *untrue*ning, are beneficial for lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.
*Untrue*ning a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.
To UNTRU'NE. v. a. [See UNTRU'NE.] To loose.
O time! thou must unangle this, not I:
It is too hard a knot for me t' *untrue*ne. Shakspeare.
To UNTRU'NE. v. a. To uncover; to strip of a veil. This word is unveil, or unveil, according to its etymology. Sea
VAIL, and VEIL.
Troy reviv'd, her mourning face unvail'd. Denham.
Now unveil'd, the toilet stands display'd,
Each silver vase in mystick order laid. Pope.
UNVA'LUABLE. adj. Inestimable; being above price.
Secure the innocence of children, by imparting to them the unvaluable blessing of a virtuous and pious education. Atterb.
UNVA'LUED. adj.
1. Not prized; neglected.
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and the health of the whole state. Shakspeare.
2. Inestimable; above price.
I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
Inestimable stones, unvail'd jewels. Shakspeare.
UNVA'QUISHED. adj. Not conquered; not overcome.
Shall I for lucre of the soft unvanquish'd d,
Detraet so much from that prerogative, Shakspeare.
As to be called but viceroy of the whole?
Victory doth more often fall by error of the unvanquish'd,
than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.
They rise unvanquish'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
UNVA'RIABLE. adj. [invariable, Fr.] Not changeable; not mut-able.
The two great hinges of morality stand fixt and unvariable as the two poles: whatever is naturally conducive to the common interest, is good; and whatever has a contrary influence, is evil. Norris.
UNVA'RIED. adj. Not changed; not diversified.
If authors cannot be prevailed with to keep close to truth and instruction, by unvaried terms, and plain, unsophisticated arguments; yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on. Locke.
They ring round the same unvaried chimes,
With sure returns of still-expected rhymes. Pope.
UNVA'RISHED. adj.
1. Not overlaid with varnish.
2. Not adorned; not decorated.
I will a round, unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms
I won his daughter with. Shakspeare, Othello.
UNVA'RYING. adj. Not liable to change.
We cannot keep by us any standing, unvarying measure of duration, which consists in a constant acting succession, as we can of certain lengths of extension, as inches marked out in permanent parcels of matter. Locke.
To UNVE'IL. v. a. [See VEIL and VAIL.]
1. To uncover; to divest of a veil.
The moon,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton.
To the limpid stream direct thy way,
When the gay morn unveils her smiling ray. Pope.
2. To disclose; to show.
The providence, that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Does ev'n our thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles. Shak.
UNVE'ILEDLY. adv. Plainly; without disguise.
Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unveiledly communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which had cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands, that (scorns to purchase knowledge with pains. Boyle.
UNVE'NTILATED. adj. Not fanned by the wind.
This animals, to succour life, demand;
Nor should the air unventilated stand;
The idle deep corrupted would contain Blue deaths. Blackmore's Creation.
UNVE'RITABLE. adj. Not true.
All these proceeded upon unveritable grounds. Brown.
UNVE'RSED. adj. Unacquainted; unskilled.
Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.
UNVE'XED. adj. Untroubled; undisturbed.
With a blest and unweave retire,
We will bear home the lily blood again. Shakspeare.
*Unweave*d with thought of wants which may betide;
Or for to-morrow's dinner to provide. Dryden's Juvenal.

UNVIOLATED. adj. Not injured; not broken.
 Herein you war against your reputation,
 And draw within the compass of suspect
 Th' unviolated honour of your wife. Shakespeare.
 He, with singular constancy, preserved his duty and fidelity to his majesty unviolated. Carendon.
 This strength diffus'd
 No less through all my sinews, joints, and bones,
 Than thine, while I preserv'd these locks unhorn,
 The pledge of my unviolated vow. Milton.
 UNVIRTUOUS. adj. Wanting virtue.
 If they can find in their hearts that the poor, unvirtuous, fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will be the ministers. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
 UNVISITED. adj. Not resorted to.
 In some wild zone
 Dwell, not unvisited of heav'n's fair light, Secure. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
 The playhouse and the park unvisited mull lie. Dryden.
 UNIFORM. adj. Wanting uniformity.
 Such an uniform piety is in many so exactly apportioned to Satan's interest, that he has no cause to wish the change of his tenure. Decay of Piety.
 UNVOYAGEABLE. adj. Not to be passed over or voyaged.
 Not this unvoyageable gulph obdurate,
 Detain from following thy illustrious track. Milton.
 UNWROED. adj. Not incited; not pressed.
 The time was once, when thou unurg'd would'st yow,
 That never words were music to thine ear,
 Unless I spake. Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors.
 UNUSED. adj.
 1. Not put to use; unemployed.
 She, whose husband about that time died, forgetting the absent Plangus, or, at least, not hoping of him to attain to aspiring a purpose, left no art unused, which might keep the line from breaking, whereas the fish was already taken. Sidney.
 Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
 Looking before and after, gave us not
 That capability and godlike reason,
 To rust in us unused. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 2. Not accustomed.
 He, unused to such entertainment, did shortly and plainly answer what he was. Sidney, b. ii.
 One, whose eyes,
 Albeit unused to the melting mood,
 Dropt tears as fast as the Arabian trees
 Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare, Othello.
 What art thou?
 Not from above: no, thy wan looks betray Diminish'd light, and eyes unused to day. Dryden.
 UNUSEFUL. adj. Useless; serving no purpose.
 I was persuaded, by experience, that it might not be un-useful in the capacities it was intended for. Glanville.
 Birds flutter with their wings, when there is but a little down upon them, and they are as yet utterly unuseful for flying. Milton's Satire against Absolutism.
 As when the building gains a fever stay,
 We take th' unuseful scaffolding away. Dryden.
 Pleas'd to find his age
 Declining, not unuseful to his lord. Philips.
 UNUSUAL. adj. Not common; not frequent; rare.
 With this unusual and strange course they went on, till God, in whose heaviliest worldly judgments I nothing doubt but that there may lie hidden mercy, gave them over to their own inventions. Hooker.
 You gain your point, if your industrious art
 Can make unusual words easy and plain. Reformers.
 A sprightly red vermilion all her face;
 And her eyes languish with unusual grace. Glanville.
 That peculiar turn, that the words should appear new, yet not unusual, but very proper to his auditors. Pelton.
 The river flows redundant, and attacks
 The ling'ring remnant with unusual tide. Philips.
 UNUSUALNESS. n. f. Uncommonness; infrequency.
 It is the unusualness of the time, not the appearance, that surprises Alcibiades. Broom.
 UNUTTERABLE. adj. Ineffable; inexpressible.
 Signs now breath'd
 Unutterable, which the spirit of pray'r
 Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
 Than lowly oratory. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
 It wounds my soul
 To think of your unutterable sorrows,
 When you shall find Hippolitus was guiltless. Smith.
 UNVULNERABLE. adj. Exempt from wound; not vulnerable.
 The god of soldiers inform Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou may'st prove
 To shame invulnerable, and tickle th' wars
 Like a great sea mark, standing every flaw. Shakespeare.

UNWA'KED. adj. Not roused from sleep.
 The more
 His wonder was, to find unwa'ken'd Eve
 With tresses compos'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
 UNWA'LED. adj. Having no walls.
 He came to Tauris, a great and rich city, but unwa'led, and of no strength. Knight's Hist. of the Turk.
 UNWA'RES. adv. Unexpectedly; before any caution; or expectation.
 She, by her wicked arts,
 Too false and strong for earthly skill or might,
 Unwares me wrought unto her wicked will. Fairy Queen.
 His loving mother came upon a day
 Unto the woods, to see her little son,
 And chanc'd unwa'rs to meet him in the way,
 After his sports and cruel pastime done. Paisius, b. i.
 Still we fail, while prosperous blows the wind,
 Till on some secret rock unwa'rs we light. Paisius.
 UNWA'RILY. adv. Without caution; carelessly.
 The best part of my powers unwa'rily
 Were in the wastes all unwa'rily
 Devour'd by the unexpected flood. Shakespeare.
 If I had not unwa'rily engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it till I had look'd over it. Digby.
 By such principles, they renounce their legal claim to liberty and property, and unwa'rily submit to what they really abhor. Frederick, No 10.
 UNWA'RINESS. n. f. [from unwa'ry]. Want of caution; carelessness.
 The same temper which inclines us to a desire of fame, naturally betrays us into such slips and unwa'rinesses, as are not incident to men of a contrary disposition. Speilator, No 256.
 UNWA'RLIKE. adj. Not fit for war; not used to war; not military.
 He safely might old troops to battle lead,
 Against th' unwa'rlie Persian, and the Mede;
 Whose hasty flight did from a bloodless field,
 More spoils than honour to the victor yield. Waller.
 Avert unwa'rlie Indians from his Rome.
 Triumph abroad, secure our peace at home. Dryden.
 UNWA'RNED. adj. Not cautioned; not made wary.
 Unexperienced young men, if unwa'rn'd, take one thing for another, and judge by the outside. Lake.
 May hypocrites,
 That flyly speak one thing, another think,
 Drink on unwa'rn'd, till by inchanting cups
 Infatuate, their wily thoughts dissolve. Philips.
 UNWARRANTABLE. adj. Not defensible; not to be justified;
 not allowed.
 At very distant removes an extemporary intercourse is feasible, and may be compensated without unwarrantable correspondence with the people of the air. Glanville.
 He who does an unwarrantable action through a false information, which he ought not to have believed, cannot in reason make the guilt of one in the excuse of another. Smith.
 UNWA'RY. adv. Not justifiably; not defensibly.
 A true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, will not suffer you to rise up to that confidence, which some men unwarrantably pretend to, nay, unwarrantably require of others. Wake's Preparation for Death.
 UNWA'RRANTED. adj. Not ascertained; uncertain.
 The subjects of this kingdom believe it is not legal for them to be enforced to go beyond the seas, without their own consent, upon hope of an unwarranted conquest; but to resist an invading enemy, the subject must be commanded out of the counties where they inhabit. Bacon.
 UNWA'RY. adj.
 1. Wanting caution; imprudent; hasty; precipitate.
 Nor think me so unwa'ry,
 To bring my feet again into the snare,
 Where once I have been caught. Milton's Agonistes.
 So spake the false archangel, and insus'd Bad influence into th' unwa'ry breast. Milton.
 Yet more amaz'd, unwa'ry thus reply'd,
 Turning short, he struck with all his might Full on the helmet of th' unwa'ry knight. Dryden.
 Propositions about religion are insinuated into the unwa'ry, as well as unbiassed understandings of children, and rivetted there by long custom. Locke.
 2. Unexpected. Obsolete.
 All in the open hall amazed stood,
 At suddenness of that unwa'ry fight,
 And wonder'd at his breathless hasty mood. Fairy Queen.
 UNWA'SHED. adj. Not washed; not cleaned by washing.
 UNWA'SHEN. adj.
 Another lean unwa'sh'd artificer
 Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death. Shakespeare.
 To eat with unwa'shen hands defileth not a man. Math. xv.
 He

U N W

He accepts of no unclean, no unwashed sacrifice; and if repentance offer not in prayer, will never find admittance. Deppa.
 When the fleece is thorn, if sweat remains Unwashed, it soaks into their empty veins. Dryden.
 UNWA'STED. adj. Not consumed; not diminished.
 Why have those rocks so long unwasted stood,
 Since, lavish of their flock, they through the flood
 Have, ages past, their melting crystal spread,
 And with their spoils the liquid regions fed? Blackmore.
 UNWASTING. adj. Not growing less; not decaying.
 Purest love's unwasting treasure;
 Constant faith, fair hope, long leisure;
 Sacred Hymen! these are thine. Pope.
 UNWA'YED. adj. Not used to travel; not seasoned in the road.
 Beasts, that have been rid off their legs, are as much for a man's use, as colts that are unwayed, and will not go at all. Suckl.
 UNWA'KENED. adj. Not awakened.
 By reason of the extinction of some air out of the glass, the classical power of the remaining air was very much debilitated, in comparison of the unwa'kened pressure of the external air. Boyle.
 UNWA'PONED. adj. Not furnished with offensive arms.
 As the beards are armed with fierce teeth, paws, horns, and other bodily instruments of much advantage against unwa'poned men; so hath reason taught man to strengthen his hand with such offensive arms, as no creature else can well avoid. Raleigh.
 UNWA'RIABLE. adj. Not to be tired.
 Desire to resemble him in goodness, maketh them unwa'riable. Hooker, b. i.
 UNWA'RIED. adj.
 1. Not tired; not fatigued.
 The Creator from his work
 Delighting, though unwa'ried, up return'd. Milton.
 Their bloody talk unwa'ry'd, still they ply. Waller.
 Still th' unwa'ry'd fire purges the tuneful strain. Dryden.
 2. Indefatigable; continual; not to be spent; not sinking under fatigue.
 I lay'd to range abroad in fresh attire,
 Through the wide compass of the airy coast,
 And with unwa'ried limbs each part to enquire. Spenser.
 Godlike his unwa'ry'd bounty flows;
 First loves to do, then loves the good he does. Denham.
 A winged virtue through th' ethereal sky,
 From orb to orb, unwa'ry'd dost thou fly. Tickell.
 An unwa'ried devotion in the service of God, recommended the gospel to the world. Rogers's Sermons.
 The righteous shall certainly be saved, but then the christian character of a righteous man implies a constant, unwa'ried performance in many painful instances of duty. Rogers.
 To UNWA'RY. v. a. To refresh after weariness.
 It unwa'ries, and refreshes more than any thing, after too great labour. Temple.
 UNWA'D. adj. Unmarried.
 This servitude makes you to keep unwa'd. Shakespeare.
 UNWA'DGABLE. adj. Not to be cloven.
 Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt Split'st the unwa'dgable and gnarled oak,
 Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
 UNWA'DED. adj. Not cleared from weeds.
 Field 'tis an unwa'ded garden,
 That grows to feed; things rank, and gross in nature, Possess it merely. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 UNWA'FERED. adj. Not lamented. Now unwa'fer.
 He must not float upon his watery bier
 Unwa'fer, and welter to the parching wind,
 Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton.
 UNWA'FERING. adj. Ignorant; unknowing.
 Her seeming dead he found with feigned fear,
 As all unwa'fering of that well she knew;
 And pained himself with busy care to rear
 Her out of careless swoon. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 The purpos'd counsel, pre-ordain'd and fix'd
 Of the most high. Paradise Regain'd.
 1. Not examined by the balance.
 Solomon left all the vessels unwa'ghed, because they were exceeding many. 1 Kings vii.
 2. Not considered; negligent.
 What unwa'ghed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pickt out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner essay me? why he hath not been thrice in my company. Shakespeare.
 Daughter, what words have pass'd thy lips unwa'gh'd,
 Deem not unjustly by my doom oppress'd,
 Or human race the wisest, and the best. Pope's Odyssey.
 UNWA'GHRING. adj. Inconsiderate; thoughtless.
 Wife? why, no question but he was—a very superficial, ignorant, unwa'ghing fellow. Shakespeare.
 UNWA'LCOME. adj. Not pleasing; not grateful; not well received.

U N W

Such welcome and unwa'lcome things at once,
 'Tis hard to reconcile. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 Soon as th' unwa'lcome news
 From earth arriv'd at heaven-gate, displeas'd
 All were who heard. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
 Though he that brings unwa'lcome news
 Has but a losing office, yet he that shews
 Your danger first, and then your way to safety,
 May heal that wound he made. Denham's Sophy.
 Fore'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live;
 Unwa'lcome freedom, and unwa'lcome reprieve. Dryden.
 From the very first instances of perception, some things are grateful, and others unwa'lcome to them; some things that they incline to, and others that they fly. Locke.
 Such hasty nights as these, would give very unwa'lcome interruptions to our labours. Bentley's Sermon.
 UNWA'RT. adj. Not lamented; not bemoaned.
 Our fatherless distress was left unwa'rt;
 Your widow dolours likewise be unwa'rt. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
 We, but the slaves that mount you to the throne;
 A bale, ignoble crowd, without a name;
 Unwa'rt, unworthy of the funeral flame;
 By duty bound to forfeit each his life. Dryden.
 UNWA'RT. adj. Not moist.
 Once I meant to meet
 My fate with face unwa'rt, and eyes unwa'rt;
 Yet since I have thee here in narrow room,
 My tears shall set thee first afloat within thy tomb. Dryden.
 UNWA'RT. adj. Not punished; not corrected with the rod.
 Tremble, thou wretch,
 That hast within thee undivulged crimes, Unwa'rt of justice. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
 Once I caught him in a lie;
 And then, unwa'rt, he had the grace to cry. Pope.
 UNWA'LESOME. adj.
 1. Infalibrious; mischievous to health.
 The discovery of the disposition of the air is good for the prospects of wholesome and unwa'lesome years. Bacon.
 There I a prisoner chain'd; scarce freely draw
 The air imprison'd alloy, close and damp;
 Unwa'lesome draught; but here I find amends,
 The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweeter,
 With day-spring-born; here leave me to respire. Milton.
 How can any one be assured, that his meat and drink are not poisoned, and made unwa'lesome before they are brought to him? South.
 Rome is never fuller of nobility than in summer; for the country towns are so infested with unwa'lesome vapours, that they dare not trust themselves in them, while the heats last. Addison on Italy.
 Children born healthy, often contract diseases from tan unwa'lesome nairs. A. Burton on Diet.
 2. Corrupt; tainted.
 We'll use this unwa'lesome humidity; this gross, watry pumpion: we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakespeare.
 UNWA'LESLY. adv. Heavily; with difficult motion.
 Unwa'lesly they wallow first in oozes;
 Then in the shady covert seek repose. Dryden.
 UNWA'LESLINESS. n. f. Heaviness; difficulty to move; or be moved.
 To what a cumbersome unwa'lesliness
 And burdensome corpulence my love had grown;
 But that I made it feed upon
 That which love worst endures, discretion. Donne.
 The supposed unwa'lesliness of its massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses. Glanville.
 UNWA'LESLY. adj. Unmanageable; not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.
 An ague, meeting many humours in a fat, unwa'lesly body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits, carried him out of the world. Clarendon.
 Part, huge of bulk!
 Wallowing unwa'lesly, enormous in their gait,
 Tempest the ocean. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
 Unwa'lesly fums of wealth, which higher mount,
 Than files of martial'd figures can account. Dryden.
 Nothing here th' unwa'lesly rock avails,
 Rebounding harmless from the plated scales;
 That, firmly jointed, preserv'd him from a wound,
 With native armour crusted all around. Addison's Ovid.
 What carriage can bear away all the rude and unwa'lesly toppings of a branchy tree at once? Waller's Inpr. of the Mind.
 UNWA'LLING. adj. Loath; not contented; not inclined; not complying by inclination.
 The nature of man is unwa'lling to continue doing that wherein it shall always condemn itself. Hooker, b. v.
 If thou dost find him tractable,
 Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
 If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwa'lling, or Be thou so too. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

U N W

If the sun rise unwilling to his race,
Clouds on his brows, and spots upon his face,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden.
Heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear;
More pow'rful gods have torn thee from my side,
Unwilling to resign, and doom'd a bride. Dryden.
UNWILLINGLY. adv. Not with good-will; not without loath-
ness.
The whining school-boy, with his fatchel,
And thinning morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. Shakep. As You Like It.
A feast the people hold to Dagon, and forbid
Laborious works, unwillingly this rest
Their superstition yields. Milton's Agonistes.
Still dismay'd
By seas or skies, unwillingly they stay'd. Denham.
These men were once the prince's foes, and then
Unwillingly they made him great: but now, Being his friends, shall willingly undo him. Denham.
The dire contagion spreads so fast,
That where it seizes, all relief is vain;
And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would else the foe maintain. Dryden.
UNWILLINGNESS. n. f. Loathsomeness; disinclination.
Obedience, with professed unwillingness to obey, is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker, b. v.
What moved the man to yield to her persuasions? Even the same cause that hath moved all men since, an unwil- lingness to grieve her, and make her sad, left she should pine, and be overcome with sorrow. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
I see with what unwillingness
You lay upon me this command, and through your fears Discern your love, and therefore must obey you. Denham.
There is in most people a reluctance and unwillingness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how fond they are to have an inscription upon their grave. Swift.
To UNWIND. v. a. pret. and part. passive unwound.
1. To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.
All his subjects having by some years learned, so to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have needed a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound so deeply an entered vice. Sidney, b. ii.
Empirick politicians use deceit:
You boldly shew that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end;
Which should you veil, we might unwind the clue,
As men do nature, till we came to you. Dryden.
2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.
Desiring to serve God as they ought; but being not so skillful as in every point to unwind themselves, where the snarles of glozing speech lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy. Hooker, b. v.
As you unwind her love from him,
Left it should ravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shakep. Two Gentlemen of Verona.
To UNWIND. v. n. To admit evolution.
Put the bottoms into clean scalding water, and they will easily unwind. Mortimer's Husbandry.
UNWIPED. adj. Not cleared.
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found Upon their pillows. Shakep. Macbeth.
UNWISE. adj. Weak; defective in wisdom.
O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus Giv'n Hydra here to chuse an officer? Shakep. Coriolanus.
Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shakep.
He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise. Milton.
This the Greeks say, this the barbarians; the wife and the unwise. Tillotson.
When kings grow stubborn, stothful, or unwise,
Each private man for publick good should rise. Dryden.
When the balance of power is duly fixt in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first steps of popular encroachments. Swift.
UNWISELY. adv. Weakly; not prudently; not wisely.
Lady Zelmane, like some, unwisely liberal, that more delight to give presents than pay debts, chose rather to be-flow her love upon me, than to recompense him. Sidney.
Unwisely we the wiser East Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.
To UNWASH. v. a. To wash that which is, not to be.
My hege, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle.—
—Why now thou hast unwash'd five thousand men;
Which likes me better than to wash one. Shakep.

U N W

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them. Brown.
UNWISHED. adj. Not fought; not desired.
So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the inevitable Philoclea, but that her unwish'd presence gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.
To his unwish'd yoke
My soul consents not to give lov' reignity. Shakep.
While heaping unwish'd wealth I distant roam;
The best of brothers at his natal home
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope.
UNWISHT. adj. Unthought of; not known.
To UNWIT. v. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.
Friends all but now; even now
In quarters, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then, but now,
As if some planet had unwisht men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts. Shakep.
UNWITHDRAWING. adj. Continually liberal.
Wherefore did nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks? Milton.
UNWITHTOOD. adj. Not opposed.
Cresly plains,
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confels
What the Silures vigour unwitstood, Cou'd do in rigid fight. Philips.
UNWITNESSED. adj. Wanting evidence; wanting notice.
Least their zeal to the cause should any way be unwit- nessed. Hooker.
UNWITTINGLY. adv. [Properly unwittingly, from unwitting.]
Without knowledge; without consciousness.
In these fatal things it falls out, that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly accessory to their determinations. Sidney.
Those things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly, as the heavens and elements of the world, which can do no otherwise than they do. Hooker, b. i.
Atheists repudiate all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a deperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquillity they seek for. Bentley.
UNWOUND. adj.
1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.
His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure th' unwound sun to view. Fairy Queen.
My father's of a better nature
Than he appears by speech; this is unwound
Which now came from him. Shakep.
Every unwound meteor is portentous, and some divine prophecy. Granville.
Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart,
All signs of some unwound change appear. Dryden.
2. Unaccustomed; unused.
Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefastness pleasant, and pleasure shamefast, tenderly moved her feet, unwound to feel the naked ground. Sidney, b. ii.
Sea calves unwound to fresh waters fly. Moy.
O how oft shall he
On faith and changed gods complain; and seas
Rough with black winds and storms,
Unwound shall admire. Milton.
UNWORKING. adj. Living without labour.
Lazy and unworking shopkeepers in this being worse than gamesters, do not only keep so much of the money of a country in their hands, but make the publick pay them for it. Locke.
UNWORKSHIPPED. adj. Not adored.
He resolv'd to leave
Unworkshipp'd, unbey'd the throne supreme. Milton.
UNWORTHILY. adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.
I wou'd, base knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg,
Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast installed. Shakep. Hen. VI.
Feating lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
I gave him gentle looks. Shakep.
If we look upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truths adorned with embellishments of poetry. Brady.
UNWORTHINESS. n. f. Want of worth; want of merit.
A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner. Sidney, b. ii.
O let

U N Y

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrongs, as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest mist is not easier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with so high thoughts. Sidney.
Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness; it nothing leads us
To chide him from our caves, for he perils. Shakep.
I fear'd to find you in another place;
But, since you're here, my jealousy grows less:
You will be kind to my unworthiness. Dryden.
Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some. Wake on Death.
UNWORTHY. adj.
1. Not deserving.
The Athanasian creed and doxology should remain in use, the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard founding, as they are in the church of Christ. Hooker.
Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over. Kuelles.
2. Wanting merit.
Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthy shews as fairly in the mask. Shakep.
Are there unworthy men chosen to offices?
So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Mist that which one unworthy may attain;
And die with grieving. Shakep. Merch. of Venice.
3. Mean.
Tell me, Philoclea, did you ever see such a shepherd?
did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquer'd me? Sidney.
4. Not suitable; not adequate.
I laid at her feet a work, which was unworthy her, but which I hope she will forgive. Dryden.
Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him. Pope to Swift.
Care is taken to interperic additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author. Swift.
5. Unbecoming; vile.
The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid. Dryden.
UNWOUND. part. pass. and pret. of unwind. Unwound.
Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitch'd ropes unwound are more lasting. Mortimer's Husbandry.
UNWOUNDED. adj.
1. Not wounded.
We may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
2. Not hurt.
Oh! blest with temper:
She who can love a sister's charms, or hear Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear. Pope.
To UNWOUND. v. a. To untwine.
The beads of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwound themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air. Boyle.
UNWRITING. adj. Not assuming the character of an author.
The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molest. Arbutnot.
UNWRITTEN. adj. Not conveyed by writing; oral; traditional.
A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another. Spenser's State of Ireland.
As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion; a rude, unwritten blank; making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born. South's Sermons.
The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and the unwritten. Hale.
UNWROUGHT. adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.
Or prove at least to all of wiser thought,
Their hearts were fertile land, although unwrought. Fairfax.
Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command;
Unwrought and easy to the potter's hand:
Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel
The first sharp motions of the forming wheel. Dryden.
UNWRUNG. adj. Not pinched.
We that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade winch, our withers are unwring. Shakep. Hamlet.
UNYIELDED. adj. Not given up.
O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the ground,
Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound. Dryden.
To UNYUKE. v. a.
1. To loose from the yoke.
Our army is dispers'd already:
Like unwieldy steers unyu'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south. Shakep. Hen. IV.

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them the employment of slaves; they unyu'd the mules. Brown.
2. To part; to disjoin.
Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this figure, and this kind regret. Shakep.
UNYUKE. adj.
1. Having never worn a yoke.
Set'n bullocks yet unyu'd for Phœbus chuse,
And for Diana few'n unpotted ewes. Dryden.
2. Licentious; unrestrained.
I will a-while uphold
The unyu'd humour of your idleness. Shakep. Hen. IV.
UNZONED. adj. Not bound with a girdle.
Easy her motion seem'd, serene her air;
Full, though unzon'd, her bosom. Prior.
VOCABULARY. n. f. [vocabulary, Lat. vocabulaire, Fr.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a word-book.
Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which signify nothing, not only in the dictionary of man, but in the fabulous vocabulary of Satan. Brown's Fable, Errors.
Among other books, we should be furnished with vocabula-ries and dictionaries of several sorts. Watts.
VOCAL. adj. [vocal, Fr. vocalis, Lat.]
1. Having a voice.
Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;
And there be words not made with lungs;
Sententious show'rs! O let them fall,
Their cadence is rhetorical. Croshaw.
Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade;
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise. Milton.
Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood. Milton.
None can animate the lyre,
And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire,
As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryden.
Mennon, though stone, was counted vocal;
But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all.
Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.
2. Uttered or modulated by the voice.
They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must shew some reason wherefore the one shou'd be thought a legal ceremony, and not the other.
And join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton's Par. Lost.
VOCALITY. n. f. [vocality, Lat. from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.
L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocality, are not easy in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced spirally. Hilder.
To VOCALIZE. v. a. [from vocal.] To form into voice.
It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone; another thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx, to give it the sound of human voice. Hilder.
VOCALLY. adv. [from vocal.] In words; articulately.
Although it is as natural to mankind, to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal signs; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of institution. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
VOCATION. n. f. [vocation, Fr. vocatio, Lat.]
1. Calling by the will of God.
Neither doth that which St Paul, or other apostles, teach, enforce the utter disability of any other men's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls. Hooker, b. v.
They which thus were in God eternally by their intended admission to life, have, by vocation or adoption, God actually now in them. Hooker, b. v.
2. Summons.
What can be urged for them who not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of meer wantonness make themselves ridiculous? Dryden.
3. Trade; employment.
He would think his service greatly rewarded, if he might obtain by that means to live in the sight of his prince, and yet practise his own chosen vocation. Sidney, b. i.
God's mother, in a vision full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakep. Hen. VI.
God has furnished men with faculties sufficient to direct them in the way they should take, if they will seriously employ them, when their ordinary vocations allow them the leisure. Locke.
A whore in her vocation,
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.
VOCATIVE. n. f. [vocative, Fr. vocativus, Lat.] The grammatical case used in calling or speaking to.

VOI

VOCIFERA'TION. n. f. [vociferatio, vocifero, Lat.] Clamour; outcry.
The lungs, kept too long upon the stretch by vociferation, or loud singing, may produce the same effect. Arbutnot.
VOCIFEROUS. adj. [vocifero, Lat.] Clamorous; noisy.
Several templars, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to hiss, and confels'd they were forced to laugh. Pope.
VOGUE. n. f. [vogue, Fr. from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode.
It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than to vouch a man's faintship from the vogue of the world. South.
Use may revive the obsoletest words, And banish those that now are most in vogue. Roscommon.
What factions th' have, and what they drive at In publick vogue, or what in private. Hudibras.
In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to. L'Estrange.
No periodical writer, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time. Addison.
At one time they keep their patients so close and warm, as almost to stifle them; and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
VOICE. n. f. [vox, Fr. voix, Lat.]
1. Sound emitted by the mouth.
2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.
Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
3. Any sound made by breath.
O Marcus, I am warm'd; my heart Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.
4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.
Are you all resolved to give your voices? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. Shakespeare.
I've no words;
My voice is in my sword! thou bloodier villain Than terms can give thee out. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and must shortly perish, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few; for two hundred gave voices, reducing that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of greatest gravity. Knolles.
Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice Of holy fenates, and elect by voice. Dryden.
5. To voice. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To rumour; to report. Out of use.
Is this th' Athenian minion, whom the world Voic'd to regardfully? Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
It was voiced that the king purposed to put to death Edward Plantagenet, prisoner in the tower; whereat there was great murmur. Bacon's Hen. VII.
Many fought to feed The easy creditors of novelties, By voicing him alive. Daniel's Civil War.
2. To vote.
Your minds, pre-occupied with what You rather must do, than what you should do, Made you, against the grain, to voice him consul. Shakespeare.
3. To voice. v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.
Stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims. Bacon.
It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high. South's Sermons.
VOICED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with a voice.
That's Erythraea,
Or some angel voic'd like her. 'Tis she! my struggling soul
Would fain go out to meet and welcome her! Denham.
VOID. adj. [voides, Fr.]
1. Empty; vacant.
The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis i. 2.
I'll get me to a place more void, and there Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. Shakespeare.
2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.
If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did move them to bring them in? Hooker.
My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please. Isa. lv. 11.
This custom made their whole government void, as an engine built against human society, worthy to be fired and pulled down.
Though the wisdom of a future parliament may find cause to declare this, or that act of parliament void, yet there will be the same temper requisite to repeal it. Clarendon.

VOL

The two houses declared, that nothing which should from that time pass under the great seal, should be good and valid, but void and null. Clarendon, v. viii.
Some kind of subjection is due from every man to every man, which cannot be made void by any power whatsoever. Swift.
3. Unsupplied; unoccupied.
Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden, and said, I am sure my office will not be long void. Camden.
4. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.
If some be admitted into the ministry, void of learning, or few in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitefo.
How void of reason are our hopes and fears! Dryden.
Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain.
5. Unsubstantial; unreal.
Senseless, lifeless idol, void and vain. Pope.
VOID. n. f. [from the adjective.] An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.
Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence, And fills up all the mighty void of sense. Pope.
With what power
Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along
Th' illimitable void? Thomson.
To VOID. v. a. [from the adjective; voider, Fr.]
1. To quit; to leave empty.
If they will fight with us, bid them come down, Or void the field. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,
And duly waited for my coming forth? Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
Towards this passage, somewhat darker than the chamber which he voided, this assassin gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side. Watson's Buckingham.
2. To emit; to pour out.
The ascending water is vented by fits, every circumvolution voiding only so much as is contained in one helix. Wilkins.
3. To emit as excrement.
Excrements smell ill to the same creature that voideth them; and the cat burieth what she voideth. Bacon.
Believ'd the heav'ns were made of stone,
Because the sun had voided one. Hudibras.
By the use of emulsions, and frequent emollient injections, his urine voided more easily. Wifeman's Surgery.
Fleshy filaments, or matter voided by urine, are suspicious symptoms of a stone in the kidneys, especially if the patient has been subject to voiding of gravel. Arbutnot.
4. To vacate; to nullify; to annul.
It was become a practice, upon any specious pretences, to void the security that was at any time given for money borrowed. Clarendon.
VOIDABLE. adj. [from void.] Such as may be annulled.
If the metropolitan, pretending the party deceased had bona notabilia in divers dioceses, grants letters of administration, such administration is not void, but voidable by a sentence. Ayl.
VOIDER. n. f. [from void.] A basket, in which broken meat is carried from the table.
A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil shoulder I pick their bones. Cleaveland.
VOIDNESS. n. f. [from void.]
1. Emptiness; vacancy.
2. Nullity; inefficacy.
3. Want of substantiality.
If thereby you understand their nakedness and voidness of all mixt bodies, good divines are of opinion, that the work of the creation was not in itself distinguished by days. Hale.
VOITURE. n. f. [French.] Carriage; transportation by carriage. Not in use.
They ought to use exercise by voiture or carriage. Arbutnot.
VOLANT. adj. [volans, Lat. volans, Fr.]
1. Flying; passing through the air.
The volant, or flying automata, are such mechanical contrivances as have a self-motion, whereby they are carried aloft in the air, like birds. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
2. Nimble; active.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low, and high, Fled, and purfu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.
Blind British bards, with volant touch,
Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes
Provoke to harmless revels. Philips.
VOLATILE. adj. [volatilis, Lat.]
1. Flying; passing through the air.
The caterpillar towards the end of summer waxeth volatile, and turneth to a butterfly. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
There is no creature only volatile, or no flying animal but hath feet as well as wings; because there is not sufficient food for them always in the air. Ray on the Creation.
2. [Volatile, Fr.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.
In vain, though by their powerful art they bind Volatile Hermes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

When arsenick with soap gives a regulus, and with mercury sublimate a volatile fusible salt, like butter of antimony; doth not this shew that arsenick, which is a substance totally volatile, is compounded of fix'd and volatile parts, (strongly cohering by a mutual attraction; so that the volatile will not ascend without carrying up the fixed? Newton.
3. Lively; fickle; changeable of mind; full of spirit.
Active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
You are as giddy and volatile as ever, just the reverse of Mr. Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life. Swift.
VOLATILE. n. f. [volatile, Fr.] A winged animal.
The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and serves for the flight of volatiles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VOLATILENESS. n. f. [volatilitas, Fr. from volatile.]
1. The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.
Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or pliancy, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies. Bacon.
Of volatility, the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning.
Heat causeth the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals. Bacon.
The animal spirits cannot, by reason of their subtilty and volatileness, be discovered to the sense. Hale.
The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much bigger; nor may they be much less, lest they lose their opacity. Newton's Opticks.
By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, in which the odour or smell consists. Arbutnot.
2. Mutability of mind.
VOLATILIZATION. n. f. [from volatilize.] The act of making volatile.
Chemists have, by a variety of ways, attempted in vain the volatilization of the salt of tartar.
3. To volatilize. v. a. [volatilizer, Fr. from volatile.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.
Spirit of wine has a refractive power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation: the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton's Opticks.
Spiritous liquors are so far from attenuating, volatilizing, and rendering perspirable the animal fluids, that it rather condenses them. Arbutnot on Aliments.
VOL. n. f. [vol, Fr.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks.
Past fix, and not a living soul!
I might by this have won a vol. Swift.
VOLCANO. n. f. [Italian, from Vulcan.] A burning mountain.
Navigators tell us there is a burning mountain in an island, and many volcanos and fiery hills. Brown.
When the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
From the volcanos gross eruptions rise,
And curling sheets of smoke obscure the skies. Garth.
Subterraneous minerals ferment, and cause earthquakes, and cause furious eruptions of volcanos, and tumble down broken rocks. Bentley's Sermons.
VOLERY. n. f. [volerie, Fr.] A flight of birds.
An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery; amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him. Lacke.
VOLITATION. n. f. [volitis, Lat.] The act or power of flying.
Birds and flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VOLITION. n. f. [volitis, Lat.] The act of willing; the power of choice exerted.
There is as much difference between the approbation of the judgment, and the actual volitions of the will, as between a man's viewing a desirable thing with his eye, and reaching after it with his hand.
Volition is the actual exercise of the power the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance.
VOLITIVE. adj. Having the power to will.
They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive, making the man not only more knowing, but more wife and better. Scott's Sermons.
VOLLEY. n. f. [volleys, Fr.]
1. A flight of shot.
From the wood a volley of shot flew two of his company. Raleigh's Apology.

VOL

More on his guns relies, than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd. Waller.
2. A burst; an emission of many at once.
A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off. Shakespeare.
3. Distrustful sense with modest caution speaks;
It still looks home, and short excursions makes;
But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks. Pope.
To VO'LLY. v. n. To throw out.
The holding every man shall beat as loud
As his strong sides can volley. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
VO'LLIED. adj. [from volley.] Disploded; discharged with a volley.
I stood
Thy fierceest, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting volley'd thunder made all speed. Milton.
The Gallick navy, impotent to bear
His volley'd thunder, torn, dissolv'd, scud. Philips.
VOLT. n. f. [volte, Fr.] Volt signifies a round or a circular tread; a gate of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center; so that these two treads make parallel tracks, the one which is made by the fore feet larger, and the other by the hinder feet smaller; the shoulders bearing outwards, and the croupe approaching towards the center. Farrier's Dict.
VOLUBILITY. n. f. [volubilitas, Fr. volubilis, from volubilis, Lat.]
1. The act or power of rolling.
Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl, and is derived from its roundness. Watts's Logick.
Then celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions; and by irregular volubility, turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker, b. i.
2. Activity of tongue; fluency of speech.
Say she be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakespeare.
He express'd himself with great volubility of words, natural and proper. Clarendon.
He had all the French assurance, cunning, and volubility of tongue. Addison.
She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father. Female Quixote.
3. Mutability; lability to revolution.
He that's a victor this moment, may be a slave the next: and this volubility of human affairs, is the judgment of providence, in the punishment of oppression. L'Estrange.
VO'UBLE. adj. [volubilis, Lat.]
1. Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.
Neither the weight of the matter of which a cylinder is made, nor its round vo'uble form, which, meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that dead, choiceless creature in its first motion. Hammond.
The adventitious corpuscles may produce stability in the matter they pervade, by expelling thence those vo'uble particles, which, whilst they continued, did by their shape unfit for cohesion, or, by their motion, oppose coalition. Boyle.
2. Rolling; having quick motion.
This less vo'uble earth,
By shorter flight to the east, had left him there. Milton.
I then vo'uble, and bold; now hid, now seen,
Among thick-woven arborets. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
3. Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.
A friend promised to dissect a wougan's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully vo'uble and flippant. Addison.
These with a vo'uble and flippant tongue, become mere echo's. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.
Cassio, a knave very vo'uble; no further conscionable, than in putting on the meer form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his loose affection. Shakespeare.
If vo'uble and sharp discourse be marr'd, Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard. Shakespeare.
VOLUME. n. f. [volumen, Lat.]
1. Something rolled, or convolved.
2. As much as seems convolved at once; as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.
Therefore and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I've seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.
Behind the gen'ral mends his weary pace,
And silently to his revenge he fails;
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.
Thames' fruitful tides,
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play, Penton.

In their conjunction met, give me to spell. Milton.

There is pleasure in doing something new, though never so little, without pestering the world with voluminous transscriptions. Gravett's Bills of Mortality.

3. Copious; diffusive.
He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.

The most severe reader makes allowances for many rests and nodding-places in a voluminous writer. Spectator, N° 124.

VOLUMINOUSLY, adv. [from voluminous.] In many volumes or books.

The controversies are hotly managed by the divided schools, and voluminously every where handled. Granville.

VOLUNTARILY, adv. [from voluntary, Fr. from voluntarius.] Spontaneously, of one's own accord; without compulsion.

6th there is no likelihood that ever voluntarily they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation itself must seek them. Hooker.

To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, is against God and nature. Hooker, b. v.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily, and by choice, to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

VOLUNTARY, adj. [from voluntarius, Lat.] South.

1. Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.
God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent;

intending before-hand, and decreeing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him. Hooker, b. i.

The lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary chusing. Shakespeare.

2. Willing; acting with willingness.
Then virtue was no more, her guard away,
She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope's Odyssey.

3. Done without compulsion.
Voluntary forbearance denotes the forbearance of an action, consequent to an order of the mind. Locke.

The old duke is banished; the new duke, and three or four loving lords, have put themselves into voluntary exile with him. Shakespeare, As You Like It.

They must have recourse to abstinence, which is but vol- untary fasting, and to exercise, which is but voluntary labour. Seed's Sermon.

4. Acting of its own accord; spontaneous.
The publick prayers of the people of God in churches thoroughly settled, did never use to be voluntary dictates, proceeding from any man's extemporal wit. Hooker, b. v.

Thoughts which voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton.

VOLUNTARY, n. f. [from the adjective.] Milton.

1. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.

upon their own head. Davies's Ireland.

Aids came in partly upon voluntaries, and partly voluntaries
from all parts. Bacon.

2. A piece of music play'd at will, without any settled rule. Shakespeare.

Whistling winds, like organs, play'd
Until their voluntaries made. Clarendon.

The waken'd earth in odours rife,
To be her morning sacrifice. Clarendon.

By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepar'd for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive. Spectator, N° 630.

VOM

VOLUNTEER, n. f. [voluntaire, Fr.] A soldier who enters into the service of his own accord.

Congreve, and the author of the Relapies, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them; as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the misfortune of their friends. Collier.

All Asia now was by the ears;
And Gods beat up for volunteers. Collier.

To Greece and Troy,
To VOLUNTEER v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.

Leave off these wagers, for in conscience speaking
The city needs not your new tricks for breaking;

And if you gallants lose, to all appearing,
You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOLUPTUARY, n. f. [voluptuaire, Fr. voluptuarius, Lat.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.

Does not the voluptuary understand in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluptuaries; men who liv'd like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterbury.

VOLUPTUOUS, n. f. [voluptuosus, Lat. voluptuosus, Fr.]
Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

He them deceives; deceiv'd in his deceit
Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt. Spenser.

If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread.
The one is the supplanting, or the opposing of authority established; the other is the giving license to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bacon.

Thou wilt bring me from
To that new world of light and bliss, among

The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Milton.

Then swol'n with pride, into the snare I fell
Of fair fallacious looks; venerable trains,

Soft'ned with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milton.

Speculative atheism subsists only in our speculation; whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley's Sermons.

VOLUPTUOUSLY, adv. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriously; with indulgence of excessive pleasure.

Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously forfeit out of action. Shak.

This cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or voluptuously disposed, as never to suffer me to think of them; but perpetually to carry away, and apply my mind to other things. South.

VOLUPTUOUSNESS, n. f. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriousness; ad-dictedness to excess of pleasure.

There's no bottom
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,

Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

If he fill'd his vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the drench of his bones

Call on him for't. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

Here where still ev'ning is, not noon nor night;
Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight.

These foas of Epicurus, for voluptuousness and irreligion, must pass for the only wits of the age. South.

You may be free, unless
Your other lord forbids, voluptuousness. Dryden.

VOLUTE, n. f. [volute, Fr.] A member of a column.

That part of the capitals of the Ionic, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head-dresses of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, these that appear above the stems in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionic, and eight in the Composite. These *volute*s are more especially remarkable in the Ionic capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and echinus:

whence that ancient architect calls the volute pulvinus. Hardi.

It is said there is an Ionic pillar in the Santa Maria Trantevere, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learnt from thence the working of that difficult problem. Adelphi.

VOMICA, n. f. [Latin.] An encysted humour in the lungs.

If the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vomica, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema; because the vomica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the putrid matter, and taint the blood. Albucasis on Diet.

VOMIC, n. f. [vomic, Fr.] A fruit of an East-Indian tree, the wood of which is the lignum colubinum, or snake-wood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of a breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown-piece. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds; and taken taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill's Mat. Medica.

To VOMIT. v. n. [vomo, Latin.]

1. To cast up the contents of the stomach.
The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his grass, vomit, and is well. More.

To VOMIT. v. a. [vomit, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stomach.
Hast thou found honey? eat so much as is sufficient, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it. Prov. xxv. 16.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. Jonah ii.

Vomiting is of use, when the foulness of the stomach requires it. Wise man's Surgery.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar. Arbutnot.

2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.

VOMIT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,

Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

2. An emetic medicine; a medicine that causes vomit.
Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances; if there be any symptoms of an inflammation of the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbut.

VOMITIOUS, n. f. [from vomit, Lat.] The act or power of vomitting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch? Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grew's Cosmology.

VOMITIVE, adj. [vomitif, Fr.] Emetic; causing vomits.

From this vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitif, occasion black ejections. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

VOMITORY, adj. [vomitore, Fr. vomitarius, Lat.] Procuring vomits; emetic.

Since regulus of sublim, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitary operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight. Harvey on Conjunctions.

VORACIOUS, adj. [voraces, Fr. vorax, Lat.]

1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; edacious.
So voracious is this humour grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Government of the Tongue.

VORACIOUSLY, adv. [from voracious.] Greedily; ravenously.

VORACIOUSNESS, n. f. [voracitas, Fr. voracitas, Lat. from vo-

VORACITY.] voracius, Lat.] Greediness; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth pamper their voracities. Sandys.

Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Darwin's Physico-Theology.

VORTEX, n. f. In the plural vortices. [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fix'd stars; yet these, and all their parts would, by their tenacity and fluidness, communicate their motion to one another. Newton's Opticks.

Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets. Bentley's Sermons.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng;

Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her power confess. Pope.

VORTICAL, adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion, the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly;

the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton's Opticks.

It is not a magnetical power, nor the effect of a vortical motion; those common attempts towards the explication of gravity. Bentley's Sermons.

VOTARIST, n. f. [devotus, Lat.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship;

votary.

I with a more strict restraint
Upon the filterhood, the votarists of St. Clare. Shakespeare.

Earth, yield me roots! What is here?
Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold!

No, gods, I am no idle votarist. Shakespeare.

The grey-headed ev'n,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,

Role from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

VOU

VOTARY, n. f. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee?
Thou art a votary to fond desire. Shakespeare.

Thou, faint god of sleep! forget that I Was ever known to be thy votary.

No more my pillow shall thine altar be,
Nor will I offer any more to thee,

Myself a melting sacrifice. Craftshaw.

By these means, men worship the idols have been set up in their minds, and stamp the characters of divinity upon absurdities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and mon-kies. Locke.

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries, among those who are called by the name of the son of God. Rogers's Sermons.

How can heav'nly wisdom prove
An instrument to earthly love?

Know't thou not yet, that men commence
Thy votaries for want of sense. Swift.

VOTARY, adj. Consequent to a vow.
Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bac.

VOTARESS, n. f. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial votress passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakespeare.

His mother was a votress of my order;
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,

Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakespeare.

No votary this votress needs,
Her very syllables are beads. Cleaveland.

Thy votress from my tender years I am;
And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game. Dryden.

What force have pious vows? the queen of love
His sister sends, her votress from above. Pope.

VOTE, n. f. [votum, Lat.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.

He that joins instruction with delight,
Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes. Roscommon.

How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the supposed honesty or learning of those of the same profession?

as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude. Locke.

The final determination arises from the majority of opi-

VOW

Vouch. n. f. [from the verb.] Warrant; attestation.
 What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself? Shaksp. Othello.
Vouch. n. f. [from vouch.] One who gives witness to any thing.
 Better to starve,
 Than crave the hire which first we do deserve:
 Why in this wolfish gown should I stand here,
 To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
 Their needful voucher? Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, i. e. has so much silver in it.
 All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator, N. 253.
 I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them, which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost. Pope.
To VOUCHSAFE. v. a. [vouch and safe.]
 1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.
 2. To condescend to grant.
 He grew content to mark their speeches, then marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference.
 Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?—
 —Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll Vouchsafe thee hearing. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 But if the sense of touch seem such delight
 Beyond all other, think the same vouchsafe d.
 To cattle and each beast. Milton.
 It is not said by the apostle, that God vouchsafed to the heathens the means of salvation; and yet I will not affirm that God will have none of those, to whom the sound of the gospel never reached. South's Sermons.
To VOUCHSAFE. v. n. To deign; to condescend; to yield.
 Do I not see Zelmane, who does not think a thought which is not first weigh'd by wisdom and virtue? doth not the vouchsafe to love me with like ardour?
Vouchsafe to love me with like ardour?
 Of these supposed crimes to give me leave
 By circumstance but to acquit myself. Shaksp. Rich. III.
Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
 What pow'r the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.
VOUCHSAFE. n. f. [from vouchsafe.] Grant; condescension.
 The infinite superiority of God's nature, places a vast disparity betwixt his greatest communicated vouchsafements, and his boundless, and therefore to his creatures incommunicable perfections. Boyle.
Vow. n. f. [vœu, Fr. votum, Lat.]
 1. Any promise made to a divine power; an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions is consecrated to a particular purpose.
 The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows;
 They are polluted offerings. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 If you take that vow and that wish to be all one, you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow. Hammond.
 She vows for his return, with vain devotion, pays. Dryden.
 2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.
 By all the vows that ever men have broke,
 In number more than ever women spoke. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 Those who wear the woodbine on their brow,
 Were knights of love, who never broke their vow;
 Firm to their plighted faith. Dryden.
To Vow. v. a. [vœu, Fr. vovio, Lat.] To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.
 David often voweth unto God the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving in the congregation. Hooker.
 To Master Harvey, upon some special consideration, I have vowed this my labour. Spenser.
Vow and pay unto the Lord. Pf. lxxvi.
 When we have not only vowed, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his public worship, and the ministers thereof, they are not now arbitrable, nor to be revoked. Spelman.
 Whoever sees these irreligious men,
 With burden of a sickness, weak and faint,
 But hears them talking of religion then,
 And vowing of their soul to every saint. Davies.
 This plant Lattine, when his town he wall'd,
 Then found, and from the tree Laurentum call'd;
 And last, in honour of his new abode,
 He vow'd the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden.
To Vow. v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.
 Doft see how unregarded now
 That piece of beauty passes? Shaksp. Hen. IV.
 There was a time, when I did vow
 To that alone: but mark the fate of faces. Suckling.

Vo'wel. n. f. [voyelle, Fr. vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.
 I distinguish letters into vowels and consonants, yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel; which will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel, as bl, fl, and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, still, &c. and as Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Brown.
Vow'el'low. n. f. [vow and follow.] One bound by the same vow.
 Who are the votaries,
 That are vow'el'low with this virtuous king? Shaksp.
VOYAGE. n. f. [voyage, Fr.] A travel by sea.
 Guyon forward 'gan his voyage make,
 With his black palmer, that him guided still. Fairy Queen.
 Our ships went hundry voyages, as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantick and Mediterranean seas. Bacon.
 This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage; contented to fit in the cabin when the winds were allay'd, but ready to resume the helm when the storm arose. Prior.
 2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.
 If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her look to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.
 If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail, I am no further your enemy. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
 3. The practice of travelling.
 All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon.
To VOYAGE. v. n. [voyager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel by sea.
 For voyaging to learn the direful art,
 To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
 Thus refus'd 't' impart the baneful trust. Pope's Odyssey.
To VOYAGE. v. a. To travel; to pass over.
 I with pain
Voyag'd th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep
 Of horrible confusion. Milton's Par. Lost.
VOYAGER. n. f. [voyager, Fr. from voyage.] One who travels by sea.
 Didstain not in thy constant travelling
 To do as other voyagers, and make Some turns into less creeks, and wisely take Fresh water at the Heliconian spring.
 How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell. Chapin.
 Deny your vessels, ye deny in vain;
 A private voyager I pass the main. Pope's Odyssey.
UP. adv. [up, Saxon; ap, Dutch and Danish.]
 1. Aloft; on high; not down.
 From those two Mytilene brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things, now up now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
 Thither his course he bends; but up or down,
 By center, or eccentric, hard to tell, Milton.
 Or longitude.
 2. Out of bed; in the state of being risen from rest.
 Helen was not up? was she?
 His chamber being commonly stived with suitors, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servants to dress him; his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners. Watson.
 3. In the state of being risen from a feat.
 Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that Sir Roger was up. Addison.
 4. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.
 Now morn with rosy light had break'd the sky,
 Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily;
 Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's fane. Dryden.
 5. In a state of being built.
 Up with my tent; here will I lie to-night;
 But where to-morrow!—well, all's one for that. Shaksp.
 6. Above the horizon.
 As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city. Judges ix.
 7. To a state of advancement.
 Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of christian indifference, we are in bondage. Atterbury.
 8. In a state of exaltation.
 Those that were up themselves, kept others low;
 Those that were low themselves held others hard,
 No suffered them to rise, or greater grow.
 Henry the fifth is crown'd; up vanity!
 Down royal state! all you false councillors hence. Shaksp.
 9. In a state of climbing.
 10. In a state of insurrection.
 The gentle archbishop of York is up. Shaksp. Hen. IV.
 With well-appointed powers.
 Rebels there are up,
 And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

Thou hast fix'd me; my soul's up in arms,
 And mans each part about me. Dryden.
 11. In a state of being increased, or raised.
 Grief and passion are like floods raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be pour'd unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.
 12. From a remoter place, coming to any person or place.
 As a boar was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. L'Estrange.
 13. From younger to elder years. Pf. lxxxviii.
 14. Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.
 Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands when the tide is low. Addison.
 15. Up and down. Backward and forward.
 Our desire is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth. Hooker, b. v.
 The flipping king he rambled up and down,
 With shallow jesters. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 Up and down he traverses his ground;
 Now wards a falling blow, now strikes again:
 Then nimble shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
 Now back he gives, then rushes on again. Daniel.
 Thou and death
 Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen Wing silently the busom air. Milton.
 On this windy sea of land, the fiend
 Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey. Milton.
 What a miserable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run flaring up and down thus in woods. L'Estrange.
 —She moves! life wanders up and down Through all her face, and lights up every charm. Addison.
 16. Up to. To an equal height with.
 Tantalus was punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water, that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink it. Addison.
 17. Up to. Adequately to.
 The wisest men in all ages have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.
 They are determined to live up to the holy rule, by which they have obliged themselves to walk. Atterbury.
 We must not only mortify all these passions that solicit us, but we must learn to do well, and act up to the positive precepts of our duty. Regent's Sermons.
 18. Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.
 She, quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
 Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
 Another time, quoth she, become more wise:
 Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidney.
 19. It is added to verbs, implying some accumulation, or increase.
 If we could number up those prodigious swarms that settled in every part of the Campania of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any six parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
 20. Up, interject.
 21. A word exhorting to rise from bed.
 Up, up! cries gluttony, 'tis break of day;
 Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey. Pope.
 22. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.
 Up then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of nine;
 Such cause of mourning never hadst afore.
 Up, grisly ghosts; and up my rustic race;
 Matter of mirth now shalt thou have no more. Spenser.
 But up, and enter now into full bliss. Milton.
 Up, up, for honour's sake; twelve legions wait you,
 And long to call you chief. Dryden.
 Up, prep. From a lower to a higher part; not down.
 In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary; in going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.
To UPBEAR. v. a. pret. upbore; part. pass. upborn. [up and bear.]
 1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.
 Upborn with indeatigable wings. Milton.
 Raised in a line the ready racers stand,
 Start from the goal, and vanish o'er the strand:
 Swift as on wings of wind, upborn they fly,
 And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope.
 2. To raise aloft.
 This with prayer,
 Or one short sigh of human breath, upborn, Ev'n to the seat of God. Milton's Par. Lost.
 A monstrous wave upborn
 The chief, and dall'd him on the craggy shore. Pope.

3. To support from falling.
 Vital pow'r is 'gan wax both weak and wan,
 For want of food and sleep; which two upbear,
 Like weighty pillars, this frail life of man. Fairy Queen.
To UPBraid. v. a. [upbray, Saxon, Saxo-
 1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful.
 The fathers, when they were upbraid'd with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most gracious nature, who did not therefore the less affect of their hearty affection. Hooker, b. v.
 It seem'd in me
 But as an honour snatch'd with boist'rous hand,
 And I had many living to upbraid
 My gain of it by their assistances,
 Which daily grew to quarrel. Shaksp. Hen. IV.
 If you refuse your aid, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 Vain man! how long wilt thou thy God upbraid?
 And, like the roaring of a furious wind,
 'Tis vent the vile distemper of thy mind?
 How cunningly the forcereels displays
 Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine. Milton.
 'Tis a general complaint against you, and I must upbraid you with it, that because you need not write, you will not. Dryden.
 You may the world of more defects upbraid,
 That other works by nature are unmade;
 That she did never at her own expence
 A palace rear. Blackmore.
 2. To object as matter of reproach.
 Those that have been bred together, are more apt to envy their equals when raised: for it doth upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them. Bacon.
 Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge or upbraid to them those small remains of antient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left. Sprat.
 May they not justly to our climes upbraid,
 Shortness of night, and penury of shade. Prior.
 3. To urge with reproach.
 I have too long born
 Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs. Shaksp.
 He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraidings of his own conscience. Decay of Piety.
 4. To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.
 Ev'ry hour
 He flashes into one gross crime or other;
 His knights grow riotous, and he himself upbraid's us
 On ev'ry trifle. Shaksp. Lear.
 If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth liberally, and upbraideth not. Ja. i. 5.
 Be ashamed of upbraidings speeches before friends; and after thou hast given upbraid not. Ecclus. xli. 22.
 5. To bring reproach upon; to shew faults by being in a state of comparison.
 Ah, my son, how evil fits it me to have such a son, and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness? Sidney.
 The counsel which I cannot take,
 Instead of healing, but upbraid's my weakness. Addison.
 6. To treat with contempt. Not in use.
 There also was that mighty monarch laid,
 Low under all, yet above all in pride;
 That name of native fire did foul upbraid,
 And would, as Ammon's son, be magnify'd. Fairy Queen.
UPBRAIDINGLY. adv. By way of reproach.
 The time was, when men would learn and study good things, not envy those that had them. Then men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. B. Johnson.
To UPBURY. v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To flume.
 Vile knight,
 That knights and knight-hood dost with shame upbraid,
 And shew'st th' ensample of thy childish might,
 With silly, weak, old women thus to fight. Spenser.
UPBROUGHT. part. pass. of upbring. Educated; nurtured.
 Divinely wrought,
 And of the brood of angels, heav'nly born,
 And with the crew of blessed saints upbrought,
 Each of which did her with her gifts adorn. Spenser.
UPHAND. adj. [up and hand.] Lifted by the hand.
 The uphand sledge is used by underworkmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter. They use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
UPCAST. [Participle from cast up.] The verb to upcast is not in use. [Thrown upwards.
 Beasts with upcast eyes forsake their shade,
 And gaze, as if I were to be obey'd. Dryden.
 UPCAUST.

UPH

- Old Saturn, here with upcast eyes, Beheld his abdicated skies. Addison.
- UPCAST*. n. f. A term of bowling; a throw; a cast.
Was there ever man had such luck? when I kiss'd the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away! Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
- To UPCASTHER. v. a. [up and gather.] To contract.
Himself he clost upcasther more and more
Into his den, that his deceitful train,
By his there being might not be bewraid,
Ne any noise, ne any question made. Spenser.
- UPHELD*. pret. and part. pass. of uphold. Maintained; sustained.
He who reigns
Monarch in heav'n, 'till then, as one secure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.
- UPHILL*. adj. [up and hill.] Difficult; like the labour of climbing an hill.
What an uphill labour must it be to a learner, who has those first rudiments to master at twenty years of age, which others are taught at ten. Clariss.
- To UPHOLD. v. a. [up and hold.] To treasure; to store;
to accumulate in private places.
Heaps of huge words upholded hideously
With horrid sound, though having little sense,
They think to be chief praise of poetry;
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poesy,
And made a monster of their fantasia. Spenser.
- If thou hast upholded in thy life
Extorted treasure, in the womb of earth, Speak of it. Shakespeare.
- To UPHOLD. v. a. preter. upheld; and part. pass. upheld, and upholden. [up and held.]
1. To lift on high.
The mournful train with groans and hands upheld, Besought his pity. Dryden.
  2. To support; to sustain; to keep from falling.
While life upholds this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster. Shakespeare.
  3. To keep from declension.
There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are fair pleaded; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his council, and beats down in him the conceit of his cause. Bacon.
  4. To support in any state of life.
Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves. Raleigh.
  5. To continue; to keep from defeat.
Divers, although peradventure not willing to be yoked with elderships, yet were contented to uphold opposition against bishops, not without greater hurt to the court of their whole proceedings. Hooker.
  6. To keep from being lost.
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. Shakespeare.
  7. To continue without failing.
A deaf person, by observing the motions of another man's mouth, knows what he says, and upholds a current communication of discourse with him. Holder.
  8. To continue in being.
As Nebuchodonosor liveth, who hath sent thee for the upholding of every living thing. Judith xi. 7.
  9. A due proportion is held betwixt the parts, as well in the natural body of man, as the body politic of the state, for the upholding of the whole. Hakewill.
- UPHOLDERS*. n. f. [from uphold.]
1. A supporter.
Suppose then Atlas ne'er so wife:
Yet when the weight of kingdoms lies
Too long upon his single shoulders,
Sink down he must, or find upholders. Swift.
  2. A sustainer in being.
The knowledge thereof is so many manucutions to the knowledge and admiration of the infinite wisdom of the creator and upholder of them. Hale.
  3. An undertaker; one who provides for funerals.
The company of upholders have a right upon the bodies of the subjects. Arbutnot.
  4. Where the brass knocker wrapt in flannel band,
Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand;
Th' upholder, useful harbinger of death,
Waits with impatience for the dying breath. Gay.

UPO

- UPHOLDSTERER*. n. f. [A corruption of upholder.] One who furnishes houses; one who fits up apartments with beds and furniture.
If a corner of the hanging wants a single nail, send for the upholderer. Swift.
- Mere wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,
Your barber, cook, upholderer. Pope.
- UPLAND*. n. f. [up and land.] Higher ground.
Men at first, after the flood, liv'd in the uplands and sides of the mountains, and by degrees sunk into the plains. Bacon.
- UPLAND*. adj. Higher in situation.
Those in Cornwall do no more by nature than others elsewhere by choice, conceive themselves an estranged society from the upland dwellers, and carry an emulation against them. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
- Sometimes with secure delight,
The upland Hamlets will invite. Milton.
- UPLANDISH*. adj. [from upland.] Mountainous; inhabiting mountains.
Lion-like, uplandish, and mere wild,
Slave to his pride; and all his nerves being naturally comp'd
Of eminent strength; stalks out and preys upon a filly sheep.
- To UPLAY. v. a. [up and lay.] To hoard; to lay up.
We are but farmers of ourselves; yet may,
If we can flock ourselves and thrive, uplay
Much, much good treasure for the great rent-day. Dome.
- To UPLIFT. v. a. [up and lift.] To raise aloft.
Mechanick slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
- The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And, with uplifted arms, is safe arriv'd
At Ravenspurg. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
- Together both, with next t' almighty arm
Uplifted imminent, one stroke they aim'd. Milton.
- Satan talking to his nearest mate,
With head uplift above the waves, and eyes
That sparkling blaz'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
- When by just vengeance guilty mortals perish,
The gods behold their punishment with pleasure,
And lay th' uplifted thunder-bolt aside. Addison's Cato.
- Songs, sonnets, epigrams, the winds uplift,
And whilk them back to Evans, Young and Swift. Pope.
- UPMOST*. adj. [An irregular superlative formed from up.] Highest; topmost.
- Away! ye skum,
That still rise upmost when the nation boils;
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice, when rated to depart. Dryden.
- UPON*. prep. [up and on.]
1. Not under; noting being on the top or outside.
As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam; and anon methought
The wood began to move. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
  2. Thrown over the body, as cloaths.
I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her night-gown upon her. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
  3. By way of imprecation or insult.
Hard-hearted Clifford! take me from the world;
My soul to heav'n, my blood upon your heads. Shakespeare.
  4. It expresses ostentation, or protestation.
How? that I should murder her?
Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I Have made to thy command!—I, her!—her blood! Shak.
  5. It is used to express any hardship or mischief.
If we would neither impose upon ourselves, nor others, we must lay aside that fallacious method of censuring by the lump. Burnet.
  6. In consequence of. Now little in use.
Let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
  7. Then the princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension of the anbitious designs of that nation. Bacon.
  8. They were entertained with the greatest magnificence that could be, upon no greater warning. Bacon.
  9. I wish it may not be concluded, left, upon second cogita-tions, there should be cause to alter. Bacon.
  10. These forces took hold of divers; in some upon discontent, in some upon ambition, in some upon levity, and desire of change, and in some few upon conscience and belief, but in most upon simplicity; and in divers out of dependance upon some of the better sort, who did in secret favour these bruits. Bacon.
  11. He made a great difference between people that did rebel upon wantonness, and them that did rebel upon want. Bacon.
  12. Upon pity they were taken away, upon ignorance they are again demanded. Hayward.
  13. Promises can be of no force, unless they be believed to be conditional, and unless that duty proposed to be enforced by them, be acknowledged to be part of that condition, upon per-

of which those promises shall not belong to any. Hammond.
- The earl of Cleveland, a man of signal courage, and an excellent officer upon any bold enterprise, advanced. Clarendon.
- The king had no kindness for him upon an old account, as remembering the part he had acted against the earl of Stratford. Clarendon, b. viii.
- Though sin offers itself in never to pleasing and alluring a drest at first, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the soul, upon the commission of it, infinitely overbalance those faint and transient gratifications. South's Sermons.
- The common corruption of human nature, upon the bare stock of its original depravation, does not usually proceed so far. South's Sermons.
- When we make judgments upon general presumptions, they are made rather from the temper of our own spirit, than from reason. Burnet.
- 'Tis not the thing that is done, but the intention in doing it, that makes good or evil. There's a great difference betwixt what we do upon force, and what upon inclination. Locke.
- The determination of the will upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide. Locke.
- There broke out an irreparable quarrel between their parents; the one valuing himself too much upon his birth, and the other upon his possessions. Spektator, N° 164.
- The design was discovered by a person, as much noted for his skill in gaming, as in politics, upon the base, mercenary end of getting money by wagers. Swift.

your native commodities, or lessen your trade. Locke.
  10. The mind, upon the suggestion of any new notion, runs immediately after similes, to make it the clearer. Locke.
  11. If, upon the perusal of such writings, he does not find himself delighted, or if, upon reading the admired passages in such authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he wants the faculty of discovering them. Spektator, N° 400.
  12. This advantage we lost upon the invention of fire-arms. Addison.
  13. In a state of view.
Is it upon record? or else reported Successfully, from age to age? Shakespeare, Rich. III.
  14. The next heroes we meet with upon record were Romulus Numa. Temple.
  15. The atheists taken notice of among the ancients, are left branded upon the records of history. Locke.
  16. Supposing a thing granted.
If you say necessity is the mother of arts and inventions, and there was no necessity before, and therefore these things were slowly invented, this is a good answer upon our supposition. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
  17. Relating to a subject.
Ambitious Confidence would not cease,
'Till she had kindled France, and all the world,
Upon the right and party of her son. Shakespeare, K. John.
  18. Yet when we can intreat an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

repetition of the same epithets which we find in Homer. Pope.
  23. In noting a particular day.
Constantia he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to be solemnized. Addison.
  24. Noting reliance or trust.
We now may boldly spend upon the hope
Of what is to come in. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
  25. God commands us, by our dependance upon his truth, and his holy words, to believe a fact that we do not understand; and this is no more than what we do every day in the works of nature, upon the credit of men of learning. Swift.
  26. Near to; noting situation.
The enemy lodged themselves at Aldermaston, and those from Newberry and Reading, in two other villages upon the river Kennet, over which he was to pass. Clarendon.

lying on the sea-shores, upon which they live. Woodward.
  22. UPPER. adj. [a comparative from up.]
  1. Superiour in place; higher.
Give the forehead a majestick grace, the mouth smiling;
which you shall do by making a thin upper lip, and shadowing the mouth line a little at the corners. Peasbom.
  2. Our knight did bear no less a pack
Of his own buttocks on his back;
Which now had almost got the upper Hand of his head, for want of crupper. Audibron.
  3. The understanding was then clear, and the soul's upper region lofty and serene, free from the vapours of the inferior affections. South's Sermons.
  4. With speed to night repair:
For not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
Thy lawless wand'ring walks in upper air. Dryden.
  5. Deep as the dark infernal waters lie,
From the bright regions of the cheerful sky;
So far the proud ascending rocks invade Heav'n's upper realms, and cast a dreadful shade. Addison.
  6. Higher in power.
The like corrupt and unreasonable custom prevailed far, and got the upper-hand of right reason with the greatest part. Hooker, b. i.
  7. UPPERMOST. adj. [superlative from upper.]
  1. Highest in place.
The waters, called the waters above the heavens, are but the clouds, and waters engendered in the uppermost air. Raleigh.
  2. In all things follow nature, not painting clouds in the bottom of your piece, and waters in the uppermost parts. Dryden.
  3. Highest in power or authority.
The lower powers are gotten uppermost, and we see like men on our heads, as Plato observed of old, that on the right hand, which is indeed on our left.
'Tis all one to the common people who's uppermost. Glennville.
  4. This species of discretion will carry a man safe through all parties, so far, that whatever faction happens to be uppermost, his claim is allowed for a share. Swift.
  5. Predominant; most powerful.
As in perfumes compos'd with art and cost,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost;
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all;
So she was all a sweet. Dryden.
  6. UPPRISH. adj. [from up.] Proud; arrogant. A low word.

In this upshot, purposes mistook Fall on th' inventor's heads. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Every leading demonstration to the main upshot of all, which is the proportion betwixt the sphere and cylinder, is a pledge of the wit and reason of that mathematician. Mora.

Upon the upshot, affusions are but the methods of a merciful providence, to force us upon the only means of setting matters right. L'Estrange.

Here is an end of the matter, says the prophet: here is the upshot and result of all; here terminate both the prophecies of Daniel and St. John. Barnet's Theory of the Earth.

Let's now make an end of matters peaceably, as we shall quickly come to the upshot of our affair. Arbuthnot.

At the upshot, after a life of perpetual application, to reflect that you have been doing nothing for yourself, and that the fame or less industry might have gained you a friendship that can never deceive or end; a glory, which, though not to be had till after death, yet shall be glori'd and enjoy'd to eternity. Pope.

UPSIDE DOWN. [an adverbial form of speech.] With total reversion; in complete disorder; with the lower part above the higher. In his lap a mass of coin he told, And turned upside down to feed his eye, And covetous desire, with his huge treasure. Fairy Queen.

The flood did not so turn upside down the face of the earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreed. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

The severe notions of christianity turned all this upside down, filling all with surprise and amazement. They came upon the world, like light darting full upon the face of a man asleep, who had a mind not to be disturbed. Smith.

UPSTAIRS. n. f. [up and stairs.] This word seems to signify upstairs; a man suddenly exalted. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his route; Keeps wassel, and the swagring upspring reels. Shakespeare.

URBANITY. n. f. [urbanitas, Fr. urbanitas, Lat.] Civility; elegance; politeness; merriment; facetiousness. A rustic severity banishes all urbanity, whose harmless condition is consistent with religion. Brown's Puls. Errors.

Railery is the sauce of civil entertainment; and without some such tincture of urbanity, good humour falters. L'Estr.

Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-mannered wit, constitute the Roman satire. Dryden.

URCHIN. n. f. [beurchin, Armorick; erinaceus, Lat.] A hedge-hog. Urchins shall, for that vast of night that they may work, All exercise on thee. Shakespeare's Tempest.

A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes, Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins, Would make such fearful and confused cries, As any mortal body, hearing it, Would straight fall mad. Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus.

That nature designs the preservation of the more infirm creatures, by the defensive armour it hath given them, is demonstrable in the common hedge-hog, or urchin. Roy.

URG

2. A name of slight anger to a child, and check'd his mother's pride: Pleas'd Cupid heard, and check'd his mother's pride: And who's blind now, mamma? the urchin cry'd. 'Tis Cleo's eye, and cheek, and lip, and breast: Friend Howard's genius fancy'd all the rest. Prior.

URG. n. f. Practice; use; habit. Obsolete.

Is the warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as are and have been put in use for the establishment of that cause? Hooker.

He would keep his hand in ure with somewhat of greater value, till he was brought to justice. L'Estrange.

URETER. n. f. [uretere, Fr.] Ureters are two long and small canals from the basin of the kidneys, one on each side. They lie between the doubling of the peritoneum, and descending in the form of an S, pierce the bladder near its neck, where they run first some space betwixt its coats, and then they open in its cavity. Their use is to carry the urine from the kidneys to the bladder. Quincy.

The kidneys and ureters serve for expurgation. Wyseman.

URETHRA. n. f. [uretre, Fr.] The passage of the urine. Caruncles are loose flesh, arising in the urethra. Wyseman.

TO URGE. v. a. [urges, Lat.]

 This barley is called by some urgowonder. Mortimer.
URIM. n. f.
Urim and thummim were something in Aaron's breast-plate; but what, critics and commentators are by no means agreed. The word urim signifies light, and thummim perfection. It is most probable that they were only names given to signify the clearness and certainty of the divine answers which were obtained by the high priest consulting God with his breast-plate on, in contradistinction to the obscure, enigmatical, uncertain, and imperfect answers of the heathen oracles. Newton's Notes on Milton.
 He in celestial panoply, all arm'd
 Of radiant urim, work divinely wrought. Milton.
URINAL. n. f. [urinal, Fr. from urine.] A bottle, in which water is kept for inspection.
 These follies shine through you, like the water in an urinal. Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

 Those relations of urinator belong only to those places where they have dived, which are always rocky. Ray.
URINE. n. f. [urine, Fr. urina, Lat.] Animal water.
 Drink, Sir, is a great provoker of nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Shakespeare.
 As though there were a femininity in urine, or that, like the feed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they foolishly believe we can visibly behold therein the anatomy of every particle.
 The chyle cannot pass by urine nor sweat. Arbutnot.
TO URINE. v. n. [urine, Fr. from the noun.] To make water.
 Places where men urine commonly, have some smell of violets. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 No oviparous animal, which spawn or lay eggs, doth urine, except the tortoise. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
URINOUS. adj. [from urine.] Partaking of urine.
 The putrid matter being distilled, affords a water impregnated with an urinous spirit, like that obtainable from animal substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.
URN. n. f. [urne, Fr. urna, Lat.]
 1. Any vessel, of which the mouth is narrower than the body.
 Minos, the strict inquirer,
 Lives, and crimes, with his affections, hears;
 Round, in his urn, the blended balls he rolls;
 Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden.
 2. A water pot; particularly that in the sign of Aquarius.
 The fish oppose the maid, the watry urn
 With adverse fires sees raging Leo burn. Crech.
 3. The vessel in which the remains of burnt bodies were put.
 Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
 Tombs, with no remembrance over them. Shakespeare's.

 Which way
 Might'st thou deserve, or they impose this usage, Coming from us? Shakespeare's K. Lear.
 The lustre in your eye, heav'n in your cheek,
 Plead you fair usage. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cressida.
 My brother
 Is prif'ner to the bishop, at whose hands
 He hath good usage, and great liberty. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.
 What usage have I met with from this adversary, who passes by the very words I translated, and produces other passages; and then hectors and cries out of my disingenuity. Shil.
 Are not hawks brought to the hand, and to the lure; and lions reclaimed by good usage? L'Estrange.
 Neptune took unkindly to be bound,
 And Eurus never such hard usage found In his Æolian prison. Dryden.
 2. Custom; practice long continued.
 Of things once received and confirmed by use, long usage is a law sufficient. In civil affairs, when there is no other law, custom itself doth stand for law. Hooker, b. ii.
 3. Manners; behaviour. Obsolete.
 A gentle nymph was found,
 Hight Astrey, excelling all the crew,
 In courteous usage, and unstained hue. Spenser.

 A prudent governor, to advance religion, will not consider men's duty but their practice; not what they ought to do, but what they use to do. South's Sermons.
 2. To be customarily in any manner; to be wont.
 Fears use to be represented in such an imaginary fashion, as they rather dazzle men's eyes, than open them. Bacon.
 Snakes that use within the house for shade,
 Securely lurk, and, like a plague, invade Thy cattle with venom. May's Virgil.
 The waters going and returning as the waves and great commotions of the sea use to do, retired leisurely. Barnet.
 Conduct me well
 In these strange ways, where never foot did use. Spenser.
 3. To frequent. Obsolete.
 Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use
 Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks. Milton.
USEFUL. adj. [use and full.] Convenient; profitable to any end; conducive or helpful to any purpose.
 Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry. More's Antidote.
 Gold and silver being little useful to the life of man, in proportion to food, raiment, and carriage, has its value only from the consent of men. Locke.
 That the legislature should have power to change the succession, is very useful towards preserving our religion and liberty. Swift.
 Deliver a particular account of the great and useful things already performed. Swift.
USEFULLY. adv. [from useful.] In such a manner as to help forward some end.
 In this account they must constitute two at least, male and female, in every species; which chance could not have made so very nearly alike, without copyings, nor so usefully differing, without contrivance. Bentley's Sermons.
USEFULNESS. n. f. Conduciveness or helpfulness to some end.

USU

The grandeur of the commonwealth shows itself chiefly in works that were necessary or convenient. On the contrary, the magnificence of Rome, under the emperors, was rather for ostentation, than any real usefulness. Addison.
USELESSLY. adv. [from useless.] Without the quality of answering any purpose.
 In a fauntering humour, some, out of custom, let a good part of their lives run uselessly away, without business of recreation. Locke.

USHER. n. f. [usher, Fr.]
 1. One whose business is to introduce strangers, or walk before a person of high rank.
 The wife of Antony
 Should have an army for an usher, and
 The neighs of horse to tell her approach Long ere she did appear. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
 You make guards and ushers march before, and then enters your prince. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup> 53.
 Gay paid his courtship with the crowd,
 As far as modest pride allow'd;
 Rejects a servile usher's place,
 And leaves St. James's in disgrace. Swift.
 2. An under-teacher; one who introduces young scholars to higher learning.
 Though grammar profits less than rhetoric's,
 Yet ev'n in those his usher claims a share. Dryden.
TO USHER. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as a forerunner or harbinger; to forerun.
 No fun shall ever usher forth my honours,
 Or gild again the noble troops that waited Upon my smiles. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.
 The fun,
 Declin'd, was halting now with prone career
 To th' ocean idles, and in th' ascending scale
 Of heav'n, the stars, that usher evening, rose. Milton.
 As the deluge is represented a disruption of the abyss, so the future combustion of the earth is to be usher'd in, and accompanied with violent imprecations upon nature, and the chief will be earthquakes. Barnet's Theory of the Earth.
 With songs and dance we celebrate the day,
 And with due honours usher in the May. Dryden.
 The Examiner was usher'd into the world by a letter, setting forth the great genius of the author. Addison.
 Oh name for ever (ad! for ever dear!
 Still breath'd in sighs, still usher'd with a tear. Pope.
USQUEBAUGH. n. f. [An Irish and Erie word, which signifies the water of life.] It is a compounded distilled spirit, being drawn on aromatics; and the Irish fort is particularly distinguished for its pleasant and mild flavour. The Highland fort is somewhat hotter; and, by corruption, in Scotland they call it whisky.
USTION. n. f. [ustion, Fr. ustus, Lat.] The act of burning; the state of being burned.
USTIOUS. adj. [ustum, Latin.] Having the quality of burning.
 The power of a burning glass is by an ustious quality in the mirror or glass, arising from a certain unknown substantial form. Watts.
USUAL. adj. [usual, Fr.] Common; frequent; customary; frequently occurring.
 Consultation with oracles was a thing very usual and frequent in their times. Hooker, b. i.
 Could I the care of Providence deserve,
 Heav'n must destroy me, if it would preserve
 And that's my fate, or sure it would have sent Some usual evil for my punishment. Dryden.

U S U

U'SUALLY. adv. [from usual.] Commonly; frequently; customarily.
 If men's desires are usually as large as their abilities, what course we took to allure the former, by that we might engage the latter. South's Sermons.
 Where men err against this method, it is usually on purpose, and to shew their learning. Swift.
 U'SUALNESS. n. f. [from usual.] Commonness; frequency.
 USUCA'PTION. n. f. [usus and capio, Lat.] In the civil law, the acquisition of the property of a thing, by possession and enjoyment thereof for a certain term of years prescribed by law. Diët.
 USURV'CT. n. f. [usufructus, Fr. usus and fructus, Lat.] The temporary use; enjoyment of the profits, without power to alienate.
 The persons receiving the same, have only the usufruct thereof, and not any fee or inheritance therein. Ayliffe.
 USURV'CTUARY. n. f. [usufructuaire, Fr. usufructuarius, Lat.] One that has the use and temporary profit, not the property of a thing.
 The persons of parishes are not in law accounted proprietors, but only usufructuaries, as having no right of fee simple vested in them. Ayliffe's Paragon.
 To USURP. n. f. [usurpata, Lat.] To practice usury; to take interest for money.
 Is this the balm that the usuring senate Pours into captains wounds? Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
 USURER. n. f. [usurarius, Fr. usur, Lat.] One who puts money out at interest. Commonly used for one that takes exorbitant interest.
 Fie; thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit;
 Which, like an usurer, abound'st in all,
 And usest none in that true use indeed.
 Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit. Shak.
 When usurers tell their gold 't' th' field,
 And bawds and whores do churches build. Shaksppeare.
 If thou lend money to any that is poor, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, nor lay upon him usury. Ex. xxii. 25.
 There may be no commutative injustice, while each retains a mutual benefit, the usurer for his money, the borrower for his industry. Child on Trade.
 The ailes usury occasioned great tumults among the people; yet he that took it was not reckoned to transgress any law; and there were some greedy usurers that exacted double, triple. Arbutnot on Coins.
 USURIOUS. adj. [usuaire, Fr. from usury.] Given to the practice of usury; exorbitantly greedy of profit.
 For every hour that thou wilt spare me now, I will allow,
Usurious god of love, twenty to thee,
 When with my brown my grey hairs equal be. Donne.
 To USURP. v. a. [usurper, Fr. usurper, Lat.] To possess by force or intrusion; to seize, or possess without right.
 So ugly a darkness, as if it would prevent the night's coming, usurped the day's right. Sidney, b. ii.
 Not having the natural superiority of fathers, their power must be usurped, and then unlawful; or if lawful, then granted or consented unto by them over whom they exercise the same, or else given them extraordinarily from God. Hooker.
 In as much as the due estimation of heavenly truth dependeth wholly upon the known and approved authority of those famous oracles of God, it greatly behoveth the church to have always most special care, humane inventions usurp the room and title of divine worship. Hooker, b. v.
 Victorious prince of York!
 Before I see thee seated in that throne,
 Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
 These eyes shall never close. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,
 Together with that fair and warlike form?
 Their fox-like thefts are so rank, as a man may find whole pages usurp'd from one author. B. Johnson.
 So he dies,
 But soon revives; death over him no pow'r
 Shall long usurp; ere the third dawning light
 Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
 Out of his grave. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
 All fountains of the deep Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
 Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation rise Above the highest hills. Milton.
 Farewell court,
 Where vice not only hath usurp'd the place,
 But the reward, and even the name of virtue.
 Your care about your banks infers a fear
 Of threatening floods and inundations near:
 If so, a just reprove would only be
 Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.
 Who next usurps, will a just prince appear,
 So much your ruin will his reign endear. Dryden.

 Who's this, that dares usurp
 The guards and habit of Numidia's prince? Addison's Cato.
 USURP'ATION. [usurpation, Fr. from usurp.] Forcible, unjust, illegal seizure or possession.
 The Piercied,
 Finding his usurpation most unjust,
 Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shaksppeare.
 Succeeding kings recovery of their right from unjust usurpations, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. K. Char.
 To raise a tempest on the sea was usurpation on the prerogative of Neptune, who had given him no leave. Dryden.
 O baseness to support a tyrant throne,
 And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!
 Nay, to become a part of usurpation,
 T'elpouse the tyrant's person and her crimes. Dryden.
 Whatever opposition was made to the usurpation of K. James, proceeded altogether from the church of England. Swift.
 USURPER. n. f. [from usurp.] One who seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.
 Ever since he hath continued his first usurped power, and now exacteth upon all men what he list: so that now to subdue or expel an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise, but a restitution of ancient right unto the crown. Spenser.
 Richard duke of York,
 Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
 And that your majesty was an usurper. Shaksppeare.
 But this usurper, his encroachment proud,
 Stays not on man; to God his tow'r intends Siege and defiance. Milton.
 Few usurers to the shades descend
 By a dry death, or with a quiet end.
 He griev'd, the land he freed should be oppress'd,
 And he less for it than usurers do. Dryden.
 USURPINGLY. adv. [from usury.] Without just claim.
 Lay aside the sword,
 Which sways usurpingly these several titles,
 And put the same into young Arthur's hand, Thy right royal sovereign. Shaksppeare's K. John.
 USURY. [usur, Fr. usura, Lat.]
 1. Money paid for the use of money; interest.
 He that high does sit, and all things see,
 With equal eyes, their merits to refore;
 Behold, what ye this day have done for me,
 And what I cannot quit, requite with usury. Fairy Queen.
 The wished day is come at last,
 That shall, for all the pains and sorrows past,
 Pay to her usury of long delight. Spenser.
 Our angles are like money put to usury; they may thrive, though we sit still and do nothing. Walton's Angler.
 What he borrows from the ancients, he repays with usury of his own; in coin as good, and almost as universally valuable. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
 2. The practice of taking interest. It is commonly used with some reproach.
Usury bringeth the treasure of a realm into few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end, most of the money will be in the box. Bacon.
 UTENSIL. n. f. [utensile, Fr. utensile, low Lat.] An instrument for any use, such as the vessels of the kitchen, or tools of a trade.
 Burn but his books; he has brave utensils,
 Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal. Shaksp.
 Mules after these, camels and dromedaries,
 And waggons fraught with utensils of war. Milton.
 Tithes and lands given to God are never; and plate, vestments, and other sacred utensils, are seldom consecrated. South.
 The springs of life their former vigour feel;
 Such zeal he had for that vile utensil. Garth's Dispensary.
 UTERINE. adj. [uterin, Fr. uterinus, Lat.] Belonging to the womb.
 In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of some simple, they may be reduced unto a conceptive constitution. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The vessels of the interior glandulous substance of the womb, are contorted with turnings and meanders, that they might accommodate themselves without danger of rupture to the necessary extension of the uterine substance. Ray.
 UTERUS. n. f. [Latin.] The womb.
 UTILITY. n. f. [utilité, Fr. utilitas, Lat.] Usefulness; profit; convenience; advantageousness.
 Those things which have long gone together, are confederate; whereas new things piece not so well; but though they help by their utility, yet they trouble by their inconstancy. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Should

Should we blindly obey the restraints of physicians and astrologers, we should confine the utility of physick unto a very few days. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 M. Zulichem desired me that I would give a relation of the cure of the gout, that might be made publick, as a thing which might prove of common utility to so great numbers as were subject to that disease. Temple.
 UTIS. n. f. A word which probably is corrupted, at least, is not now understood.
 Then here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem. Shaksppeare's Hen. IV.
 UTMOST. adj. [uncomp. Saxon; from utten.]
 1. Extreme; placed at the extremity.
 Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
 In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide;
 It ought to touch the utmost thread of it,
 She feels it instantly on ev'ry side. Davies.
 As far remov'd from God and light of heav'n,
 As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milton.
 I went
 To view the utmost limits of the land. Dryden.
 2. Being in the highest degree.
 I'll undertake to bring him,
 Where he shall answer by a lawful form,
 In peace, to his utmost peril. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 UTMOST. n. f. The most that can be; the greatest power; the highest degree.
 What miseries,
 Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
 To the utmost of a man. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 I will be free,
 Even to the utmost as I please in words. Shaksppeare.
 Such a confidence, as has employed the utmost of its ability to give itself the best information, and clearest knowledge of its duty, that it can, is a rational ground for a man to build such an hope upon. South.
 Try your fortune. —
 — I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate Without just cause? Dryden's All for Love.
 A man, having carefully enquired into all the grounds of probability and unlikeliness, and done his utmost to inform himself in all particulars, may come to acknowledge on which side the probability rests. Locke.
 The enemy thinks of raising threecore thousand men: let us perform our utmost, and we shall overwhelm them with our multitudes. Addison.
 UTTER. adj. [uncomp. Saxon.]
 1. Situate on the outside, or remote from the center.
 In my flight
 Through utter and through middle darkness borne,
 I long of chaos, and eternal night. Milton's P. Lost, b. iii.
 2. Placed without any compass; out of any place.
 Purfue these fons of darkness, drive them out
 From all heav'n's bounds, into the utter deep. Milton.
 3. Extreme; excessive; utmost. This seems to be Milton's meaning here.
 Such place eternal justice had prepar'd
 For those rebellious; here their prison ordain'd
 In utter darkness; and their portion set
 As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
 As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milton.
 4. Complete; irrevocable.
 The parliament thought the utter taking it away, absolutely necessary for the preservation of the kingdom. Clarendon.
 There could not be any other estimate made of the loss, than by the utter refusal of the auxiliary regiments of London and Kent to march farther. Clarendon, b. viii.
 They feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious thoughts which disquiet mankind. Atterbury.
 To UTTER. v. a. [from the adjective; to make publick, or let out; palam facere.]
 1. To speak; to pronounce; to express.
 Men spake not with the instruments of writing, neither writ with the instruments of speech; and yet things recorded with the one, and uttered with the other, may be preached well enough with both. Hooker.
 These very words I've heard him utter. Shaksppeare.
 There's more gold: but, firrah,
 We say the dead are well. Bring it to that,
 The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shaksppeare.
 Conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood. Jsa. lix. 13.
 Shall not they teach thee and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart?
 Who knows but his poor, bleeding heart,
 Amidst its agonies, remember'd Marcia,
 And the last words he utter'd, call'd me cruel! Addison.

2. To disclose; to discover; to publish.
 When do partial and sinister affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many? Whit.
 Were it folly to be modest in uttering what is known to all the world?
 I meant my words should not reach your ears; but what I utter'd was most true. Dryden's All for Love.
 3. To tell; to vend.
 Such mortal drugs I have, but Mantua's law
 Is death to any he that utters them. Shaksp. Rom. and Juliet.
 They bring it home, and utter it commonly by the name of Newfoundland fish. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
 The Devonshire and Somersetshire graziars feed yearly great droves of cattle in the north quarter of Cornwall, and utter them at home. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
 4. To disperse; to emit at large.
 To preserve us from ruin, the whole kingdom should continue in a firm resolution never to receive or utter this fatal coin. Swift.
 UTTERABLE. adj. [from utter.] Expressible; such as may be uttered.
 UTTERANCE. n. f. [from utter.]
 1. Pronunciation; manner of speaking.
 He, with utterance grave, and countenance sad,
 From point to point discours'd his voyage. Fa. Queen.
 2. [Outrance, Fr.] Extremity; terms of extreme hostility.
 Of him I gather'd honour;
 Which he to seek of me again perforce,
 Behoves me keep at utterance. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
 Mine eternal jewel
 Giv'n the common enemy of man,
 To make them kings; the feed of Banquo kings!
 Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
 And champion me to th' utterance. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 3. Vocal expression; emission from the mouth.
 'Till Adam, though no less than Eve abash'd,
 At length gave utterance to these words constrain'd. Milton.
 Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significancies. Holder.
 There have been some inventions, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
 Many a man thinks admirably well, who has a poor utterance; while others have a charming manner of speech, but their thoughts are trifling. Watts.
 UTTERER. n. f. [from utter.]
 1. One who pronounces.
 2. A divulger; a discloser.
Utters of secrets he from thence debar'd;
 Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime. Fa. Queen.
 3. A seller; a vender.
 UTTERLY. adv. [from utter.] Fully; completely; perfectly.
 For the most part, in an ill sense.
 God, whose property is to shew his mercies then greatest, when they are nearest to be utterly despaired. Hooker, b. ii.
 Arguments taken from the authority of men, may not only so far forth as hath been declared, but further also be of some force in human sciences; which force, be it never so small, doth shew that they are not utterly naught. Hooker, b. ii.
 All your int'rest in those territories
 Is utterly bereft you; all is lost. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 He was so utterly tired with an employment so contrary to his humour, that he did not consider the means that would lead him out of it. Clarendon, b. viii.
 While in the flesh we cannot be utterly insensible of the afflictions that befall us. Atterbury.
 UTTERMOST. adj. [from utter.]
 1. Extreme; being in the highest degree.
 Bereave me not,
 Whereon I live! thy gentle looks, thy aid,
 Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress. Milton.
 2. Most remote.
 The land, from the uttermost end of the straits on Peru side, did go towards the south. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
 UTTERMOST. n. f. The greatest degree.
 There needed neither promise nor persuasion to make her do her uttermost for her father's service. Sidney, b. ii.
 He cannot have sufficient honour done unto him; but the uttermost we can do, we must. Hooker, b. i.
 UVE'OUS. adj. [from uva, Lat.]
 The uveous coat, or iris of the eye, hath a musculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil. Ray on the Creation.
 VULCANO. n. f. [Italian.] A burning mountain; volcano.
 Earth calcin'd, flies off into the air; the ashes of burning mountains, in vulcano's, will be carried to great distances. Arb.
 VULGAR. adj. [vulgaire, Fr. vulgaris, Lat.]
 1. Plebeian; suited to the common people; practised among the common people.
 Men

VUL

Men who have passed all their time in low and vulgar life, cannot have a suitable idea of the several beauties and blemishes in the actions of great men. Addison.

2. Mean; low; being of the common rate.
It requiring too great a sagacity for vulgar minds to draw the line between virtue and vice, no wonder if most men attempt not a laborious scrutiny into things themselves, but only take names and words, and so rest in them. South.
Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes have bow'd me to the ground:
Yet by the flubble you may guess the grain,
And mark the ruins of no vulgar man. Broome.

3. Publick; commonly bruited.
Do you hear aught of a battle toward? — —Most sure, and vulgar; every one hears that. Shakespeare.

VULGAR. n. f. [vulgaire, Fr.] The common people.
I'll about;
Drive away the vulgar from the streets. Shakespeare.
Those men, and their adherents, were then looked upon by the affrighted vulgar, as greater protectors of their laws and liberties than myself. K. Charles.
The vulgar imagine the pretender to have been a child imposed upon the nation by the fraudulent zeal of his parents, and their bigotted counsellors. Swift.

VULGARITY. n. f. [from vulgar.]
1. Meanness; state of the lowest people.
Although their condition may place them many spheres above the multitude; yet are they still within the line of vulgarity and democratical enemies to truth. Brown.
True it is, and I hope I shall not offend their vulgarities, if I say they are daily mocked into error by devils. Brown.

2. Particular instance or specimen of meanness.
Is the grand sophos of Persius, and the sublimity of Juvenal to be circumscribed with the meanness of words, and vulgarity of expression? Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.

VULGARLY. adv. [from vulgar.] Commonly; in the ordinary manner; among the common people.
He was, which people much respect
In princes, and which pleases vulgarly,
Of goodly personage, and of sweet aspect. Daniel.
He, that believes himself incapable of pardon, goes on without thought of reforming; such an one we call vulgarly a desperate person. Hammond's Practical Catechism.
As it is vulgarly understood, that he cut a passage for his army through these mighty mountains, it may seem incredible. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VULNERABLE. adj. [vulnerable, Fr. vulnerabilis, Lat.] Susceptible of wounds; liable to external injuries.

UXO

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Achilles though dipt in Styx, yet having his heel untouched by that water, although he were fortified elsewhere, he was slain in that part, as only vulnerable in the inferior and brutal part. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VULNERARY. adj. [vuleraire, Fr. vulnerarius, Lat.] Useful in the cure of wounds.
Try whether the same effect will not ensue, by common vulnerary plaisters. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
I kept the orifice open, and prescribed him vulneraries. Wise man's Surgery.

TO VULNERATE. v. a. [vulnero, Lat.] To wound; to hurt. De factis there is such an intercourse between the magnetic unguent and the vulnerated body. Glavill's Sects.

VULPINE. adj. [vulpinus, Lat.] Belonging to a fox.
VULTURE. n. f. [vultur, Lat.] A large bird of prey remarkable for voracity.
Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells,
Nor grievly vultures make us once afraid.
We've willing dames enough, there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many,
As will to greatness dedicate themselves.
A ravenous vulture in his open'd side,
Her crooked beak and cruel talons try'd. Dryden.

VULTURINE. adj. [vulturinus, Lat.] Belonging to a vulture.
VULVA. n. f. [vulva, Lat.] In anatomy, a round soft spongy body, suspended from the palate near the foramina of the nostrils over the glottis. Dryden.
By an instrument bended up at one end, I got up behind the vulva. Wise man's Surgery.

UXORIOUS. adj. [uxorius, Lat.] Submissively fond of a wife; infected with connubial dotage.
Towards his queen he was nothing uxorious, nor scarce indulgent; but companionable and respectful. Bacon.
That uxorious king, whose heart, though large,
Begu'd by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UXORIOUSLY. adv. [from uxorius.] With fond submission to a wife.
If thou art thus uxoriously inclin'd
To bear thy bondage with a willing mind, Prepare thy neck. Dryden's Juvenal.

UXORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from uxorius.] Connubial dotage; fond submission to a wife.

W.

W. Is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the found of the Roman v, and the Eolic f. Both the form and found are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin.
W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel, for u, view; shear: the found of u consonant is uniform.
TO WABBLE. v. n. [A low, barbarous word.] To shake; to move from side to side.
If in your work you find it wabble's that is, that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then screw it hard up. Moxon.

WAB. n. f. [from wad, Sax.]
1. A bundle of straw thrust close together.
2. Wadd, or black lead, is a mineral of great use and value.
WADD. n. f. [from wad, wad, Islandick.] A kind of soft stuff loosely woven, with which the skirts of coats are stuffed out.
TO WADDLE. v. n. [waggelen, Dutch, to waddle; whence, by a casual corruption, waddle.] To shake, in walking from side to side; to deviate in motion from a right line.
She could have run and waddled all about. Shakespeare.
The strutting petticoat smooths and levels all distinctions; while I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped, innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down like big-bellied women. Spectator, N° 127.

The farmer's goose,
Grown fat with corn and sitting still,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door fill,
And hardly waddles forth to cool
Her belly in the neighbouring pool.
A dabchick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops. Pope.
Dulness, of business the directing soul,
To human heads like bias to the bowl;
Which, as more pond'rous, makes their aim more true,
Obliquely waddling to the mark in view. Pope.

TO WADE. v. n. [from vadam, Lat. pronounced vadam.]
1. To walk through the waters; to pass water without swimming.
We'll wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood. Shakespeare.
She waded through the dirt to pluck him off. Shakespeare.
I am in blood
Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
He staid seven days at the Cragus, until a bridge was made for the transporting of his army, for that the river was not to be waded over. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
Then since fortune's favours fade;
You that in her arms do sleep,
Learn to swim, and not to wade,
For the hearts of kings are deep. Watson's Poems.
With head, hands, wings, or feet pursues his way,
And swims, or links, or wades, or creeps, or flies. Milton.
It is hard to wade deep in baths where springs arise. Brown.
Fowls that frequent waters, and only wade, have as well long legs as long necks; and those that are made for swimming have feet like oars. More's Divine Dialogues.
Those birds only wade in the water, and do not swim. More.
As when a dabchick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, he flies, and wades, and hops. Pope.

2. To pass difficultly and laboriously.
They were not permitted to enter unto war, nor conclude any league of peace, nor to wade through any act of moment between them and foreign states, unless the oracle of God, or his prophets, were first consulted with. Hooker, b. iii.
I have waded through the whole cause, searching the truth by the causes of truth. Hooker.
The substance of those controversies whereunto we have begun to wade, be rather of outward things appertaining to the church, than of any thing wherein the being of the church consisteth. Hooker, b. iii.

W.

WAD

W. Is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the found of the Roman v, and the Eolic f. Both the form and found are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin.
W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel, for u, view; shear: the found of u consonant is uniform.
TO WABBLE. v. n. [A low, barbarous word.] To shake; to move from side to side.
If in your work you find it wabble's that is, that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then screw it hard up. Moxon.

WAB. n. f. [from wad, Sax.]
1. A bundle of straw thrust close together.
2. Wadd, or black lead, is a mineral of great use and value.
WADD. n. f. [from wad, wad, Islandick.] A kind of soft stuff loosely woven, with which the skirts of coats are stuffed out.
TO WADDLE. v. n. [waggelen, Dutch, to waddle; whence, by a casual corruption, waddle.] To shake, in walking from side to side; to deviate in motion from a right line.
She could have run and waddled all about. Shakespeare.
The strutting petticoat smooths and levels all distinctions; while I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped, innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down like big-bellied women. Spectator, N° 127.

WAF

Virtue gives herself light, through darkness for to wade. Fairy Queen, b. i.

I should chuse rather with spitting and scorn to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord; than, by a denial of those truths, through blood and perjury wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South.
'Tis not to my purpose to wade into those bottomless controversies, which, like a gulph, have swallowed up so much time of learned men. Deasy of Piety.

The dame
Now try'd the stairs, and wading through the night,
Search'd all the deep recess, and issu'd into light. Dryden.
The wrathful God then plunges from above,
And where in thickest waves the sparkles drove,
There lights, and wades through fumes, and gropes his way,
Half-sing'd, half-lifted. Dryden.
Simonides, the more he contemplated the nature of the Deity, found that he waded but the more out of his depth, and that he lost himself in the thought. Addison.

WAFER. n. f. [wagel, Dutch.]
1. A thin cake.
Wife, make us a dinner; spare flesh, neither corn;
Make wafers and cakes, for our sheepe must be shorne. Tassers.
Poor Sancho they persuaded that he enjoyed a great dominion, and then gave him nothing to subsist upon but wafers and marmalade. Pope.

2. The bread given in the eucharist by the Romanists.
That the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once; that the whole body should lie hid in a little thin wafer; yet so, that the members thereof should not one run into another, but continue distinct, and have an order agreeable to a man's body, it doth exceed reason. Idall.

3. Paste made to clothe letters.
TO WAFTE. v. a. [probably from wave.]
1. To carry through the air, or on the water.
A braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have wafte o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakespeare.
Our high admiral
Shall wafte them over with our royal fleet. Shakespeare.
Whether cripples, who have lost their thighs, will not sink but float; their lungs being able to wafte up their bodies, which are in others overpoised by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Nor dares his transport-vessel cross the waves,
With such whose bones are not compos'd in graves:
A hundred years they wander on the shore;
At length, their penance done, are wafte o'er. Dryden.
Lend to this wretch your hand, and wafte him o'er
To the sweet banks of yon forbidden shore. Dryden.
From hence might first spring that opinion of the vehicles of spirits; the vulgar conceiving that the breath was that wherein the soul was wafte and carried away. Roy.
They before wafte over their troops into Sicily in open vessels. Arbutnot on Coins.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You with fair winds may wafte him over:
Alas! what winds can happy prove,
That bear me far from what I love? Prior.
Speed the foot intercourse from foul to foul,
And wafte a sigh from Indus to the pole. Pope.

2. To beckon; to inform by a sign of any thing moving.
TO WAFTE. v. n. To float.
It wafte nearer yet, and then she knew,
That what before she but form'd, was true. Dryden.
Those trumpets his triumphant entry tell,
And now the shouts wafte near the ciadel. Dryden.

WAFTE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A floating body.
From the bellowing east off the whirlwind's wing
Sweeps up the burthen of whole wintry plains,
In one wide wafte. Thomson's Winter.

2. Motion of a streamer. Used as a token or mean of information at sea.

I wept for woe. Dryden's Theocritus.

WAG. n. f. [Jaxian, Saxon; to cheat.] Any one ludicrously mischievous; a merry droll.

Cupid the wag, that lately conquer'd had Wife counsellors, stout captains puffed;
And ty'd them fast to lead his triumph bad,
Glutted with them, now plays with meaneft things. Sidney.

Was not my lord the verier wag o' th' two? Shakespeare.

We wink at wags, when they offend,
And spare the boy, in hopes the man may mend. Dryden.

A counsellor never pleaded without a piece of packthread in his hand, which he used to twist about a finger all the while he was speaking: the wags used to call it the thread of his discourse. Addison.

WAGE. n. f. the plural wages is now only used. [wagen, or wagen, German; gages, Fr.]

1. Pay given for service.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

The last petition is for my men; they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me;
That they may have their wages duly paid them.

And something over to remember me. Shakespeare.

By Tom Thumb, a fairy page;
He sent it, and doth him engage,
By promise of a mighty wage,
To secretly carry.

The thing itself is not only our duty, but our glory: and he who hath done this work, has, in the very work, partly received his wages. South.

2. Gage; pledge. Answer.

To WAGE. v. a. [The origination of this word, which is now only used in the phrase to wage war, is not easily discovered: wagen, in German, is to attempt any thing dangerous.]

1. To attempt; to venture.

We must not think the Turk is so unskilful, Neglecting an attempt of safe and gain, Shakespeare.

To wake and wage a danger proffers.

2. To make; to carry on. Applied to war.

Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd!
No; rather I abjure all roofs, and challenge
To wage against the enmity o' th' air,
To be a comrade with the wolf.

Your reputation wages war with the enemies of your royal family, even within their trenches. Dryden.

He ponder'd, which of all his sons was fit
To reign, and wage immortal war with wit. Dryden.

3. [From wag, wagen.] To set to hire.

Thou must wage
Thy works for wealth, and life for gold engage. F. Queen.

WAG

4. To take to hire; to hire for pay; to hold in pay; to employ for wages.

And have excessive doings at their wake. King's Art of Cook.

2. Vigils; state of forbearing sleep.
By dimpled brook, and fountain brim,
The wood-nymphs deckt with daisies trim,
Their merry wakes and pastimes keep:
What hath night to do with sleep? Milton.

WA'KEFUL. adj. [wake and full.] Not sleeping; vigilant.

Before her gate high God did sweat ordain,
And wakeful watches ever to abide. Spenser.

Why dost thou shake thy leaden sceptre? go,
Bestow thy poppy upon wakeful woe,
Sickness and sorrow, whole pale lids ne'er know
Thy downy finger; dwell upon their eyes,
Shut in their tears; shut out their miseries. Crahaue.

Thy wakeful terrors, affrighting dreams,
Have now their full reward. Denham's Sophy.

Differing sleep, but wakeful with the fright,
The day takes off the pleasure of the night. Dryden.

WA'KEFULNESS. n. f. [from wakeful.]

1. Want of sleep.

Other perfumes are fit to be used in burning agues, consumptions, and too much wakefulness. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

WA'KEROBIN. n. f. [A plant.] The leaves are entire, long, and triangular at the base: the flower consists of one leaf, shaped like an ass's eye: from the bottom of the flower rises the pointal, with embryo's, each of which becomes a roundish berry, containing seeds. Miller.

WALK. n. f. [pell, Saxon; a web.] A rising part in the surface of cloth.

To WALK. v. a. [walen, German; pealcan, Saxon, to roll.]

1. To move by leisurely steps, so that one foot is set down, before the other is taken up.

What mean you, Cæsar? think you to walk forth? Sha.
A man was seen walking before the door very composedly. Cl.

2. It is used in the ceremonial language of invitation for walk or go.

Sir, walk in. —

—I had rather walk here, I thank you. Shakespeare.

These bow'rs as wide as we need walk. Milton.

4. To move the slowest pace. Not to trot, gallop, or amble.
Applied to a horse.

5. To appear as a spectre.

The spirits of the dead
May walk again; if such thing be, thy mother Appear'd to me last night. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

It then draws near the season
Wherein the spirit is wont to walk. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

There were walking spirits of the house of York, as well in Ireland as in England. Dexter's Ireland.

Some say no evil thing that walks by night,
In fog, or fire, by lake, or moorish fen,
Blue meagre hag, or stubborn unkind ghost,
That breaks his magic chains at curfew time;
No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
Hath hurtful pow'r o'er true virginity. Milton.

Do you think I'd walk in any plot,
Where Madam Sempronius should take place of me,
And Fulvia come i' th' rear? B. Johnson.

7. To be in motion. Applied to a clamorous or abusive tomale tongue; and is still in low language retain'd.

As she went, her tongue did walk
In foul reproach, and terms of vile despight; Provoking him by her outrageous talk. Shakespeare. Lear.

8. To act in sleep.

When was it she last wak'd? —
—I have seen her rise from her bed, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon't, read it, and return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

9. To range; to move about.

As they say spirits do at midnight, have
In them a milder nature, than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.

10. To move off.

When he comes forth, he will make their cows and gar-rans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.

He hath left you all his walks,
His private harbours, and new-planted orchards,
On that side the Tiber. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Goodliest trees planted with walks and bow'rs. Milton.

5. Way; road; range; place of wandering.

The mountains are his walks, who wand'ring feeds
On slowly-springing herbs. Sandys's Paraphrase.

Set women in his eye, and in his walk.

Among daughters of men the fairest found.
Our souls, for want of that acquaintance here,
May wander in the hazy walks above. Dryden.

That bright companion of the sun,
Whole glorious aspect I'd our new-born king;
And now a round of greater years begun, Dryden.

New influence from his walks of light did bring.
Wanting an ampler sphere to expatiate in, he open'd a boundless walk for his imagination. Anfou.

6. [Wal, Lat.] A fift.

7. Walk is the slowest or least raised pace, or going of a horse. In a walk, a horse lifts two legs of a side, one after the other, beginning with the hind leg first; as suppose that he leads with the legs on his right side, then he lifts his far hind foot first; and in the time that he is setting it down, which in a step is always short of the tread of his fore foot upon the same side, he lifts his far fore foot, and sets it down before his near foot, and just as he lifts up his near hind foot, and sets it down again just short of his near fore foot, and just as he is setting it down, he lifts his near fore foot, and sets it down just before his far fore foot. Farrier's Dict.

WA'LER. n. f. [from walk.] One that walks.

I ride and walk, and am reputed the best walker in this town. Goy.

May no such vicious walkers crowd the street.

He from his guards and midnight tent,

Disguis'd o'er hills and vallies went, To wanton with the sprightly dame, And in his pleasure lost his fame. Prior.

2. To revel; to play.

Oh! I heard him wanton in his praise;

Speak things of him might charm the ears. Orway.

Nature here

Wanton'd as in her prime, and play'd at will

Her virgin fancies. Milton.

O ye mules! deign your blest retreat,

Where Horace wantons at your spring, And Pindar sweeps a bolder string. Fenton.

3. To move nimbly, and irregularly.

WANTONLY, adv. [from wanton.] Lasciviously; frolicsome-ly; gayly; sportively; carelessly.

Thou dost but try how far I can forbear,

Nor art that monster which thou wouldst appear: But do not wantonly my passion move, I pardon nothing that relates to love. Dryden.

WANTONNESS, n. f. [from wanton.]

1. Lasciviousness; lechery.

The spirit of wantonness is scar'd out of him. Shakep.

Bulls and goats bled apace; but neither the violence of the one, nor the wantonness of the other, ever died a victim at any of their altars. South.

2. Sportiveness; frolic; humour.

When I was in France,

Young would be as sad as night, Only for wantonness. Shakep. K. John.

Love, rais'd on beauty, will like that decay;

Our hearts may bear its slender chain a day: As flow'ry bands in wantonness are worn, A morning's pleasure, and at evening torn. Pope.

3. Licentiousness; negligence of restraint.

The tumults threatened to abate all acts of grace, and turn them into wantonness. K. Charles.

'Till wantonness and pride

Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace. Milton.

WANTONRY, n. f. [want and wry.] A fool; an idiot.

Such a wanton-fadness makes of me,

That I have much ado to know myself. Shakepeare.

WANTY, n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A broad girth of leather, by which the load is bound upon the horse.

A panel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,

With line to fetch litter. Tusser.

WANTED, adj. [Of this

WAR

Thine almighty word leapt down from heaven, as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction. Wisdom.
5. Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.

Duncan's horses
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
To WAR, v. n. [from the noun.] To make war; to be in a state of hostility.

Was this a face,
To be expos'd against the warring winds? Shakspe.
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within? Shakspeare.
—Have you that holy feeling in your soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And are you yet to your own soul's to blind,
That you will war with God, by murd'ring me? Shakspe.
He teacheth my hands to war.
This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare. 1 Tim. i. 18.
He limited his forces, to proceed in aid of the Britons, but in no wife to war upon the French. Bacon's Hen. VII.
We seem ambitious God's whole work t' undo;
With new dilates on ourselves we war,
And with new physick, a worse engine far. Donne.
His next design
Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
And war on Thebus. Dryden.
To the island of Delos, by being reckoned a sacred place, nations warring with one another reformed their goods,
and traded as in a neutral country. Arbutnot on Coins.
To WAR, v. a. To make war upon. A word not any longer used.

And then long time before great Nimrod was,
That first the world with sword and fire warred. Spenser.
To them the same was render'd, to the end,
To war the Scot, and borders to defend. Daniel's Civ. War.
To WARBLE, v. a. [from warben, old Teutonic; werwelen, German; to twirl, or turn round.]

1. To quaver any found.
2. To quaver to quaver.
Follow me as I sing,
And touch the warbled string. Milton.
3. To utter musically.
She can thaw the numbing spell,
If the be right invok'd with warbled song. Milton.
To WARBLE, v. n.

1. To be quavered.
Such strains ne'er warble in the linnet's throat. Gay.
2. To be uttered melodiously.
A plaining song, plain-singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow.
There birds resort, and in their kind, thy praise
Among the branches chant in warbling lays. Wotton.

3. To sing.
Creatures that liv'd and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew;
Birds on the branches warbling; all things smil'd. Milton.
She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note,
But indistinct. Dryden.

A bard amid the joyous circle sings
High airs attempt'd to the vocal strings;
Whilst warbling to the varied strain advance,
Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance. Pope.
WARBLER, n. f. [from warble.] A finger; a songster.
Hark! on ev'ry bough,

In lulling strains the feather'd warblers woo. Tickell.
WARD, A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as heavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way;
from peasant, Saxon

Before the could come to the arbour, the saw walking from her-ward, a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.
To WARD, v. a. [from warden, Saxon; warens, Dutch; garder, French.]

1. To guard; to watch.
He march'd forth towards the castle wall,
Whose gates he found fast shut, he living wight
To ward the same, nor answer comers' call. Fairy Queen.

2. To defend; to protect.
Tell him it was a hand that ward'd him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shakspeare.

3. To fence off; to obstruct, or turn aside any thing mischievous.
Not once the baron lift his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where lordly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
No way to ward or shun her blows he tries.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.

WAR

Toxæus amaz'd, and with amazement flow,
Or to revenge, or ward the coming blow,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

The pointed javelin ward'd off his rage. Addison.
The provision of bread for food; cloathing to ward off the inclemency of the air, were to be first look'd after. Woodw.
It intrusts the scholar in the various methods of warding off the force of objections, and of discovering and repelling the subtle tricks of sophisters. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

To WARD, v. n.
1. To be vigilant; to keep guard.
2. To act upon the defensive with a weapon.
So redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back.

Short crook'd swords in closer fight they wear,
And on their warding arms light bucklers bear. Dryden.
WARD, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Watch; act of guarding.
Still when the sleep, he kept both watch and ward. Spenser.
Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd;
And dire Tiphone there keeps the ward. Dryden.
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

2. Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.
By reason of these two forts, though there be but small wards left in them, there are two good towns now grown, which are the greatest fay of both those two countries. Spenser.

Th' assieg'd castles ward
Their steadfast fons did mightily maintain. Spenser.
3. Guard made by a weapon in fencing.
Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Shakspe. Hen. IV.

Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick. Shakspe. Tempst.
Now, by proof it shall appear,
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.
At this, I threw: for want of other ward,
He lifted up his hand, his front to guard. Dryden.

4. Fortrels; strong hold.
She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too too strongly embattled against me. Shakspe. Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. [Warda, law Lat.] District of a town.
Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal fate to every ward. Dryden.

6. Custody; confinement.
That wretched creature being depreched in that impiety, was held in ward. Hester.

7. The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.
In the key-hole turns
Th' intricate ward, and ev'ry bolt and bar. Milton.
As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in the making and contriving their wards, or guards. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

The keys, as well as the locks, were fitted ward to ward, by the same wisdom. Grew's Cosmology.
8. One in the hands of a guardian.
The king causeth bring up his wards, but bestoweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful. Drummond.

You know our father's ward,
The fair Monimia: is your heart at peace?
Is it so guarded that you could not love her? Owen.
Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed, before she was my ward. Dryden.

When stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.
Titles of honour and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God. Sprat.

9. The state of a child under a guardian.
I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection. Shakspeare.
Lewis the eleventh of France having much abated the greatness and power of the peers, would say, that he had brought the crown out of ward. Bacon.

10. Guardianship; right over orphans.
It is also inconvenient in Ireland, that the ward should be in the disposal of any of those lords. Spenser.
WARDEN, n. f. [from warden, Dutch.]

1. A keeper; a guardian.
2. A head officer.
The warden of apothecaries hall. A magi.

WAR

3. Warden of the cinque ports.
A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of those havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why one magistrate should be assigned to these havens seems to be, because in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies. Cowel.

4. [Pyram solomus, Lat. I know not whence denominated.] A large pear.
Nor must all shoots of pears alike be set,
Custumian, Syrian pears, and warden's great. May's Virg.
Ox-cheek when hot, and warden's bak'd some cry. King.

WARDEN, n. f. [from ward.]
1. A keeper; a guard.
Upon those gates with force he fiercely flew,
And rending them in pieces, fell down.
Those warden's strange, and all that else he met. Hubbard.
Where be these warden's, that they wait not here?
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

2. A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.
Sound trumpets, and set forward combatants.
—But slay, the king hath thrown his warden down. Shakspeare.

Then, then, when there was nothing could have fluid
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warden down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw. Shakspeare.

WARDMOTE, n. f. [from ward and mot, or gemot, Saxon; ward-motus, low Lat.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London for the direction of their affairs.

WARDROBE, n. f. [from ward and robe, French; wardrobe, low Lat.] A room where cloaths are kept.
The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But cloaths meet to keep keen cold away. Fairy Queen.

I will kill all his coats,
I'll murder all his wardrobe piece by piece
Until I meet the king. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

What from his wardrobe her belov'd allows,
To deck the wedding-day of his unpotted spouse. Dryden.
It would not be an impertinent design to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see toga's and tu-nica's, the chlamys and trabea, and all the different vests and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors. Addison.

WARDSHIP, n. f. [from ward.]
1. Guardianship.
By reason of the feudures in chief revived, the sums for respect of homage be encreased, and the profits of wardships cannot but be much advanced. Bacon.

2. Pupillage; state of being under ward.
The houses sued out their livery, and redeemed themselves from the wardship of tumults. King Charles.

WARE, The pretence of wear, more frequently wore.
A certain man ware no cloaths. Luke viii. 27.
WARE, adj. [For this we commonly say aware.]
1. Being in expectation of; being provided against.
The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him. Matt. xxiv. 50.

2. Cautious; wary.
What man so wife, what earthly wit so ware,
As to defery the crafty cunning train
By which deceit doth walk in Vizor fair. Fairy Queen.
Bid her, well be ware and still erect. Milton.

To WARE, v. n. To take heed of; to beware.
A fluster'd, follen, and uncertain light
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again,
Then wares a rising tempest on the main. Dryden.

WARE, n. f. [from ward, Saxon; ware, Dutch; ware, Swedish.]
Commonly something to be sold.
Let us, like merchants, shew our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell.
If the people bring ware or any victuals to sell, that we would not buy it. Nebem. x. 31.

I know thou whole art but a shop
Of toys and trifles, traps and lures,
To take the weak, and make them stop;
Yet art thou fuller than thy ware. Ben. Johnson.

Why should my black thy love impair?
Let the dark shop commend the ware. Cleaveland.
He turns himself to other wares which he finds your markets take off. Locke.

WAR

WA'REFUL, adj. [from ware and full.] Cautious; timorously prudent.
WA'REFULNESS, n. f. [from wareful.] Cautiousness. Obsolete:
With pretence from Strephon her to guard, Sidney.
He met her full; but full of wa'refulness.

WAREHOUSE, n. f. [from ware and house.] A storehouse of merchandise.
His understanding is only the warehouse of other mens lumber, I mean false and unconcluding reasonings rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.
She had never more ships at sea, greater quantities of merchandise in her warehouse, than at present. Addison.

She the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson's Autumn.
WA'RELESS, adj. [from ware.] Uncautious; unwary. Spens.
WA'RELY, adv. [from ware.] Warily; cautiously; timorously.
They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did warchly keep. Fairy Queen.

WARFARE, n. f. [from war and fare.] Military service; military life.
In the wilderness
He shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Faithful hath been your warfare, and of God
Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause. Milton.
Tully, when he read the Tactics, was thinking on the bar which was his field of battle: the knowledge of warfare is thrown away on a general who does not make use of what he knows. Dryden.

The state of Christians, even when they are not actually persecuted, is a perpetual state of warfare and voluntary sufferings. Atterbury's Sermons.
The scripture has directed us to refer these miscarriages in our Christian warfare to the power of three enemies. Rovers.

To WA'REFARE, v. n. [from the noun.] To lead a military life.
That was the only amulet in that credulous warfare age to escape dangers in battles. Camden's R. mains.

WARHABLE, adj. [from war and habile, from habilis, Lat. or able.]
Military; fit for war.
The weary Britons, whose warhable youth
Was by Maximilian lately led away,
With wretched miseries and woeful ruth,
Were to those pagans made an open prey. Fairy Queen.

WA'RILY, adv. [from warly.] Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wife forethought.
The charge thereof unto a courteous spirit
Commended was, who thereby did attend,
And warily awaited day and night,
From other covetous fends it to defend. Fairy Queen.

The change of laws, especially concerning matters of religion, must be warily proceeded in. Hooker.
It will concern a man to treat conscience awfully and warily, by still observ'ng what it commands, but especially what it forbids. South's Sermons.

They searched diligently and concluded warily. Sprat.
WA'RINESS, n. f. [from warly.] Caution; prudent forethought;
timorous scrupulousness.
For your own conscience he gives innocence,
But for your fame a discreet wariness. Donne.

To determine what are little things in religion, great wariness is to be used. Sprat's Sermons.
The path was so very slippery, the shade so exceeding gloomy, and the whole wood so full of echoes, that they were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection and silence. Addison's Great Ister.

Most men have so much of ill nature, or of wariness, as not to looth the vanity of the ambitious man. Addison.
I look upon it to be a most clear truth; and exprest it with more wariness and reserve than was necessary. Atterbury.

WARKE, n. f. [Anciently used for work; whence butwork.]
Building.
Thou findest fault where any's to be found,
And buildest strong work upon a weak ground. Spenser.

WARLIKE, n. f. [from war and like.]
1. Fit for war; disposed to war.
She using so strange, and yet so well succeeding a temper, made her people by peace warlike. Sidney.
Old Steward with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
When a warlike state grows soft and effeminate, they may be sure of a war. Bacon.

O imprudent Gauls,
Relying on false hopes, thus to incense
The warlike English. Philips.
2. Military; relating to war.
The great arch-angel from his warlike roll Surceas'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

WARLING, n. f. [from war.] This word is I believe only found in the following adage, and seems to mean one often quarrelled with. Better.

WAR

Better be an old man's darling than a young man's warring.
WARRLOCK. } n. f. [wardlock,] Ilandick, a charm; penloz.
WARRLOCK. } Saxon, an evil spirit. This etymology was communicated by Mr. Wile. A male witch; a wizzard.
WARRLOCK. } In Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar suppose to be conversant with spirits, as a woman who carries on the same commerce is called a witch: he is supposed to have the invulnerable quality which Dryden mentions, who did not understand the word.
He was no warrlock, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron free or lead free.
WARM. adj. [warm, Gothick; warm, Sax. warm, Dutch.]
1. Not cold, though not hot; heated to a small degree.
He stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm.
Main ocean flow'd, not idle, but with warm
Prolifick humour, foaming all her globe.
2. Zealous; ardent.
I never thought myself so warm in any party's cause as to deserve their money.
Scaliger in his poetries is very warm against it.
3. Violent; furious; vehement.
Welcome day-light; we shall have warm work on't:
The Moor will gage
His utmost forces on his next assault,
To win a queen and kingdom.
4. Busy in action.
I hate the ling'ring summons to attend,
Death all at once would be a nobler end;
Fate is unkind: methinks a general
Should warm, and at the head of armies fall.
5. Fanciful; enthusiastic.
If there be a fiber and a wife man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant fancy in the world? If there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively.
To WARM. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.
It shall be for a man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself.
There shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to it before it.
The mounted sun
Shot down direct his fervid rays to warm
Earth's inmost womb.
These soft fires with kindly heat
Of various influence, foment and warm.
2. To heat mentally; to make vehement.
The action of Homer being more full of vigour than that of Virgil, is more pleasing to the reader: one warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire all at once, and never in-termits his heat.
WARMING. n. f. [warm and pan.] A covered bras pan for warming a bed by means of hot coals.
WARMINGSTONE. n. f. [warm and stone.] To these useful stones add the warming-stone, digged in Cornwall, which being once well heated at the fire retains its warmth a great while, and hath been found to give ease in the internal hæmorrhoids.
WARMLY. adv. [from warm.]
1. With gentle heat.
There the warming sun first warmly smote
The open field.
2. Eagerly; ardently.
Now I have two right honest wives
One to Atides I will send,
And t'other to my Trojan friend;
Each prince shall thus with honour have
What both so warmly seem to crave.
The ancients expect you should do them right in the account you intend to write of their characters: I hope you think more warmly than ever of that design.
WARMNESS. } n. f. [from warm.]
WARMTH. }
1. Gentle heat.
Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal; from the loathed warmth wherewith deliver me.
Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun increasing than the hot herbs have; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot.
He vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth
Throughout the fluid mass.
Here kindly warmth their mounting juice ferments
To nobler tastes, and more exalted scents.
2. Zeal; passion; fervour of mind.
What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

WAR

Our duties towards God and man, we should perform with that unfeigned integrity which belongs to Christian piety; dence and charity; with that warmth and affection which agrees with Christian zeal.
Your opinion that it is entirely to be neglected, would have been my own, had it been my own case; but I felt more warmth here than I did when first I saw his book against myself.
3. Fancifulness; enthusiasm.
The same warmth of head disposes men to both.
To WARN. v. a. [warnian, Saxon; warnen, Dutch; warnia, Swedish; varna, Ilandick.]
1. To caution against any fault or danger; to give previous notice of ill.
What do'st thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?
And footh the devil that I warn thee from?
Our first parents had been warn'd.
The coming of their secret foe, and 'scap'd
His mortal snare.
The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen; so that it warns while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie to close and low, that though you have ears to hear yet you shall not hear.
Juturna warns the Daunian chief.
Of Lausus' danger, urging swift relief.
If we consider the mistakes in mens disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations; this we are the more carefully to be warn'd of, because the arts of improving it have been made the business of mens study.
The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son,
The bad examples which he ought to shun Describ'd.
When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
Perhaps he seem'd above the critic's law,
And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw.
2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.
Cornelius was warn'd from God by an holy angel to fend for thee.
He had chidden the rebellious winds for obeying the command of their usurping master: he had warn'd them from the seas; he had beaten down the billows.
3. To notify previously good or bad.
He wonders to what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before.
He charg'd the soldiers with preventing care,
Their flags to follow, and their arms prepare.
Warn'd of the ensuing fight, and bade 'em hope the war.
Man, who knows not hearts, should make examples,
Which like a warning-piece must be shot off,
To fright the rest from crimes.
WARRING. n. f. [from warn.]
1. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.
I will thank the Lord for giving me warning in the night.
He groaning from the bottom of his breast,
This warning in these mournful words express'd.
Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Could warning make the world more just or wise.
You have fairer warning than others who are unexpectedly cut off, and so have a better opportunity, as well as greater engagements to provide for your latter end.
A true and plain relation of my misfortunes may be of use and warning to credulous maids, never to put too much trust in deceitful men.
2. Previous notice: in a sense indifferent.
Death called up an old man, and bade him come; the man excus'd himself, that it was a great journey to take upon so short a warning.
I saw with some disdain, more nonsense than either I or as bad a poet could have crammed into it at a month's warning;
in which time it was wholly written.
WARP. n. f. [warp, Saxon; warp, Dutch.] That order of thread in a thing woven that crosses the woof.
The fourteenth is the placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as it is in the warp and the woof of texture, more inward or more outward.
To WARP. v. n. [warpian, Saxon; warpen, Dutch; to throw; whence we sometimes say, the work casts.] To change from the true situation by intestine motion; to change the position of one part to another.
This fellow will but join you together as they join waincoats, then one of you will prove a shunk-pannel, and like green timber warp.
They clasp one piece of wood to the end of another piece, to keep it from casting or warping.

2. To lose its proper course or direction.
There's our commission
From which we would not have you warp.
This is strange! methinks
My favour here begins to warp.
All attest this doctrine, that the pope can give away the right of any sovereign, if he shall never so little warp.
This we should do as directly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible.
3. To turn.
The potent rod
Of Amram's son in Egypt's evil day
Wav'd round the coasts, up call'd a pitchy cloud
Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung Like night.
To WARP. v. d.
1. To contract; to shrivel.
2. To turn aside from the true direction.
This first avow'd, not folly warp'd my mind;
Nor the frail texture of the female kind Betray'd my virtue.
Not foreign or domestic treachery
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree.
A great argument of the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of the word of God.
I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy, since my first entering upon it.
Not warp'd by passion, aw'd by rumour,
Not grave through pride, or gay through folly;
An equal mixture of good humour,
And sensible soft melancholy.
A constant watchfulness against all those prejudices that might warp the judgment aside from truth.
3. It is used by Shakespeare to express the effect of frost, Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
Thou dost not bite so high
As benefits forgot.
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As fiends remember'd not.
To WARRANT. v. n. [gerantir, French.]
1. To support or maintain; to assert.
She needed not dilate any service, though never so mean,
which was warrant'd by the sacred name of father.
He that readeth unto us the Scriptures delivereth all the mysteries of faith, and not any thing amongst them all more than the mouth of the Lord doth warrant.
If this internal light be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it, and we may safely receive it for true.
2. To give authority.
Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warrant'd quarrel.
3. To justify.
How can any one warrant himself in the use of those things against such suspicions, but in the truth he has in the common honesty and truth of men in general?
True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants and that wisdom guides;
All else is rowing freerzy and distraction.
4. To exempt; to privilege; to secure.
If my coming, whom, she said, he feared, as soon as he knew me by the armour, had not warrant'd her from that near approaching cruelty.
These thoughts cannot, in this your loneliness, warrant you from suspicion in others, nor defend you from melancholy in yourself.
I'll warrant him from drowning.
In a place
Less warrant'd than this, or less secure,
I cannot be, that I should fear to change it.
5. To declare upon fairly.
What a gall'd neck have we here! Look ye, mine's as smooth as silk, I warrant ye.
The Moor's King
Is safe enough, I warrant him for one.
WARRANT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A writ conferring some right or authority.
Are you now going to dispatch this deed?
We are, my lord, and come to have the warrant.
That we may be admitted where he is.
He sent him a warrant for one thousand pounds a year pension for his life.
2. A writ giving the officer of justice the power of caption.
There was a damnd design, cries one, no doubt;
For warrants are already fitted out.
3. A justificatory commission or testimony.
His promise is our plain warrant, that in his name what we ask we shall receive.

WAR

Is this a warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as have been and are put in use for the establishment of that cause?
The place of Paradise might be seen unto Moses, and unto the prophets which succeeded him; both which I take for my warrant to guide me in this discovery.
His warrant does the Christian faith defend;
On that relying, all their quarrels end.
The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore, that this might so enter as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of Omnipotence.
4. Right; legality. Obsolete.
I attach thee
For an abuser of the world, a practicer
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant.
Therefore to horse,
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away: there's warrant in that theft,
Which steals itself when there's no mercy left.
WARRANTABLE. adj. [from warrant.] Justifiable; defensible.
To purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know.
His meals are coarse and short, his employment warrant-able, his sleep certain and refreshing.
If I can mend my condition by any warrantable industry, the way is fair and open; and that's a privilege every reasonable creature has in his commission.
WARRANTABLENESS. n. f. [from warrantable.] Justififiableness.
By the foil thereof you may see the nobleness of my desire to you, and the warrantableness of your favour to me.
WARRANTABLY. adv. [from warrantable.] Justifiably.
The faith which God requires is only this, that he will certainly reward all those that believe in him, and obey his commandments; but for the particular application of this faith to ourselves, that deserves no more of our assent, nor can indeed warrantably have it, than what is founded upon the serious consideration of our own performances.
WARRANTER. n. f. [from warrant.]
1. One who gives authority.
2. One who gives security.
WARRANTISE. n. f. [warrantise, law Latin; from warrant.]
Authority; security.
There's none protector of the realm but I:
Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantise.
WARRANTY. n. f. [warrantia, law Latin; garantie, garant, French.]
1. [In the common law.] A promise made in a deed by one man unto another for himself and his heirs, to secure him and his heirs against all men, for the enjoying of any thing agreed of between them.
2. Authority; justificatory mandate.
Her obsequies have been so far enlarg'd
As we have warranty: her death was doubtful;
And but that great command o'erwrote the order,
She should in ground unsanctify'd have lodg'd
'Till the last trumpet.
In the use of those epithets we have the warranty and consent of all the churches, since they ever had a liturgy.
3. Security.
Every one cannot distinguish between fine and mixed silver;
those who have had the care and government of politick societies, introduced coinage as a remedy: the stamp was a warranty of the publick, that under such a denomination they should receive a piece of such a weight and fineness.
To WARRA'Y. v. a. [from war.] To make war upon.
But Ebranc salved both their infancies
With noble deeds, and warraid on Brunchild
In Hainault, where yet of his victories
Brave monuments remain, which yet that land envys.
Of these a mighty people shortly grew,
And puissant kings, which all the world warraid,
And to themselves all nations did subdue.
This continual, cruel, civil war,
The which myself against myself do make,
Whilst my weak powers of passions warraid are,
No skill can flint, nor reason can assuage.
Six years were run since first in martial guise
The Christian lords warraid the eastern land.
WARRE. adj. [warpian, Saxon.] Worse. Obsolete.
They say the world is warre than it wont,
All for her shepherds is beastly and blount:
Others faine, but how truly I note,
All for they holden theme of their cote.
WARREN. n. f. [warrendis, Dutch; warrene, French.] A kind of park for rabbits.
I found him here, as melancholy as a lodge in a warren.
The coney convenes a whole warren, tells her story, and advises upon a revenge.

Men should set snares in their warrens to catch polecats and foxes. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
WARRENER, n. f. [from warren.] The keeper of a warren.
WARRIOR, n. f. [from war.] A soldier; a military man.

I came from Corinth,
 Brought to this town by that most famous warrior,
 Duke Menaphon. Shakspeare, Comedy of Errors.
 Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds,
 In ranks and squadrons and right form of war,
 Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.
 I sing the warrior and his mighty deeds. Lauderdale.
 The warrior horses ty'd in order fed. Dryden's En.
 The mute walls relate the warrior's fame,
 And Trojan chiefs the Tyrians pity claim. Dryden's En.
 Camilla led her troops, a warrior dame;
 Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd,
 She chose the nobler Pallas of the field. Dryden's En.

WART, n. f. [pears, Saxon; warte, Dutch.] A cornuous excrescence; a small protuberance on the flesh.
 If thou prate of mountains, let them throw Millions of acres on us, till our ground,
 Singeing his pate against the burning fun,
 Make Ossa like a wart. Shak. Hamlet.
 In old statues of stone, which have been put in cellars, the feet of them being bound with leaden bands, there it appeared the lead did swell, inasmuch as it hanged upon the stone like warts. Bacon's Natural History.

Like vile stones lying in saffron'd tin,
 Or warts, or weals, it hangs upon her skin. Donne.
 In painting, the warts and moles, adding a likeness to the face, are not to be omitted. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 He is taken with those warts and moles, and hard features, by those who represent him on the stage, or he is no more Achilles. Dryden.
 Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, doth demonstrate that all such warts, tumours and excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited or raised up by some venenose liquors, which with their eggs such insects feed; or boring with their terebræ, insin into the very pulp of such buds. Ray on the Creation.

WARTWORT, n. f. [wart and wort.] Spurge.
WARTY, adj. [from wart.] Grown over with warts.
WARWORN, adj. [war and worn.] Worn with war.

In vest in lank lean cheeks and warworn coats,
 Presented them unto the gazing moon
 So many horrid ghosts. Shakspeare, Henry V.
WARY, adj. [wary, Saxon.] Cautious; scrupulous; timorously prudent.
 He is above, and we upon earth; and therefore it behoveth our words to be wary and few. Hooker.
 Lcontius, their bishop, although an enemy to the better part, yet wary and subtle, as all the heads of the Arrians faction were, could at no time be plainly heard to use either term. Hooker.

Good cause he had to hasten thence away;
 For on a day his wary dwarf had spy'd,
 Where in a dungeon deep huge numbers lay,
 Of captive wretched thralls that wailed night and day. F. 2.
 Each thing feigned ought more wary be. Hutch. Tale.
 Each warns a warrior carriage in the thing.
 Left blind presumption work their ruin.
 Others grow wary in their praises of one, who sets too great a value on them, lest they should raise him too high in his own imagination. Addison's Spectator.

WAS, n. f. [wase, Saxon.] The pretence of To Be.
 Enoch walked with God, and was not; for God took him. Gen. v. 24.

TO WASH, v. a. [parcan, Saxon; wasschen, Dutch.]

1. To cleanse by ablution.
 How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands
 Of this most grievous guilty murder done! Shakspeare, R. III.
 Look, how she rubs her hands.
 —It is an accustom'd action with her to seem thus washing her hands. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
 Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin. Pf. li. 2.
 Thou didst wash thyself.
 Shall he that gives fire to the train pretend to wash his hands of the hurt that is done by the playing of the mine? L'Estrange's Fables.

2. To moisten.
 3. To affect by ablution.
 Be baptized, and wash away thy sins. Acts xxii. 16.
 Sins of irreligion must still be so accounted for as to crave pardon, and be washed off by repentance. Taylor.
 Recollect the things you have heard, that they may not be washed all away from the mind by a torrent of other engagements. Wat's Improvement of the Mind.

4. To colour by washing.
 To wash over a coarse or insignificant meaning, is to counterfeited nature's coin. Collier of the Aspid.
TO WASH, v. n. [from wash.] To perform the act of ablution.
 I will go wash;
 And when my face is fair, you shall perceive. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
 Whether I blush or no. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
 Wash and be clean. 2 Kings v. 13.
 Are not the rivers of Damascus better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them? 2 Kings v. 12.
 Let each be calm his troubled breast.
 Wash and partake serene the friendly feast. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To cleanse cloths.
 She can wash and scour.
 —A special virtue; for then the need not be washed and scoured. Shak. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

WASH, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Alluvion; any thing collected by water.

The wash of pastures, fields, commons, and roads, where rain-water hath a long time settled, is of great advantage to all land. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A bog; a marsh; a fen; a quagmire.

Full thirty times hath Phœbus car gone round Neptune's salt wash, and Tellus' orb'd ground. Shakspeare.

The best part of my power
 Were in the washes all unwarily Devoured by the unexpected flood. Shakspeare, King John.

4. A medical or cosmetic lotion.

Try whether children may not have some wash to make their teeth better and stronger. Bacon's Natural History.

They paint and patch their imperfections
 Of intellectual complexion;
 And daub their tempers o'er with washes,
 As artificial as their faces. Hadfield.

He tried all manner of washes to bring him to a better complexion; but there was no good to be done. L'Estrange.

None are welcome to such, but those who speak paint and wash; for that is the thing they love; and no wonder, since it is the thing they need. South's Sermon.

To steal from rainbows, ere they drop in show'rs,
 A brighter wash. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

Here gallypots and vials plac'd,
 Some fill'd with washes, some with paste. Swift.

5. A superficial stain or colour.

Imagination stamps signification upon his face, and tells the people he is to go for so much, who oftentimes, being deceived by the wash, never examine the metal, but take him upon content. Collier.

6. The feed of hogs gathered from washed dishes.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
 That spoil'd your summer-fields and fruitful vines,
 Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough
 In your embowell'd bowels. Shakspeare, Richard III.

7. The act of washing the cloths of a family; the linen washed at once.

WASHBALL, n. f. [wash and ball.] Ball made of soap.

I asked a poor man how he did; he said he was like a wash-ball, always in decay. Swift.

WASHER, n. f. [from wash.] One that washes.

Quickly is his laundress, his washer, and his wringer. Shak.

WASHER, adj. [from wash.] Watery; damp.

On the washy ouze deep channels wore,
 Easy, ere God had bid the ground be dry. Milton.

2. Weak; not solid.

A polish of clearness, evenly and smoothly spread, not over-thin and washy, but of a pretty solid consistence. Newton.

WASP, n. f. [wasp, Saxon; wespa, Latin; guêpe, French.] A brisk stinging insect, in form resembling a bee.

More wasps, that buzz about his nose,
 Will make this sting the sooner. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Encountering with a wasp,
 He in his arms the fly doth clasp. Drayton.

Why, what a wasp-tongue'd and impatient
 Art thou, to break into this woman's mood, Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own? Shak. El. IV.

WASPISH, adj. [from wasp.] Peevish; malignant; irritable; irascible.

I'll use you for my laughter,
 When you are waspish. Shakspeare, Julius Cæsar.

Come, you wasp, you are too angry.
 —If I be waspish, best beware my sting. Shakspeare.

By the stern brow and waspish action,
 Which the did use as the was writing of it,
 It bears an angry tenour. Shak. As you like it.

The tailor's wife was only a good hearty throw, under the impotency of an unruly waspish humour: she would have her will. L'Estrange.

Upon this gross mistake the poor waspish creature runs on for many leaves. Stillingfleet.

Much do I suffer, much, to keep in peace
 This jealous, waspish, wrong-head, rhiming race. Pope.

WASPISHLY, adv. [from waspish.] Peevishly.

WASPISHNESS, n. f. [from waspish.] Peevishness; irritability.

WASSAIL, n. f. [from per Joel, your health, Saxon.]

1. A liquor made of apples, figs, and ale, anciently much used by English goodfellowes.

2. A drunken bout.

The king doth wake to-night, and takes his route, Keeps wassail, and the swagg ring upspring reels. Shakspeare.

WASSAILER, n. f. [from wassail.] A toper; a drunkard.

I'm loth to meet the rudeness, and swill'd insolence
 Of such late wassailers. Milton.

WASTE, v. a. [waste, Saxon; wastelen, Dutch; guastare, Italian; wastare, Latin.]

1. To diminish.

The fire that mounts the liquor 'till it run o'er,
 Seeming t' augment it, wastes it. Shakspeare, H. VIII.

First vegetive, then feels, and reasons last;
 Rich of three souls, and lives all three to waste. Dryden.

Could sighs furnish new breath, or draw life and spirits from the wasting of your's, your friends would encourage your passion. Temple.

2. To destroy wantonly and luxuriously; to squander.

The people's praying after the minister, they say, wastes time. Hooker.

There must be providence used, that our ship-timber be not wasted. Bacon.

No ways and means their cabinet employ,
 But their dark hours they waste in barren joy. Garth.

3. To destroy; to desolate.

He only their provisions wastes and burns. Daniel.

Peace to corrupt, no less than war to waste. Milton.

The Tyber
 Insults our walls, and wastes our fruitful grounds. Dryden.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
 And added woes have bow'd me to the ground;
 Yet by the stubble you may guess the grain,
 And mark the ruins of no vulgar man. Broom.

4. To wear out.

Here condemn'd
 To waste eternal days in woe and pain. Milton.

5. To spend; to consume.

O were I able
 To waste it all myself, and leave you none. Milton.

TO WASTE, v. n. To dwindle; to be in a state of consumption.

Man dieth and wastes away. Job xiv. 10.

Their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and destruction are in their paths. Is. lix. 7.

The latter watch of wasting night,
 And setting stars to kindly sleep invite. Dryden.

WASTE, adj. [from the verb.]

1. Destroyed; ruined.

Sophi leaves all waste in his retreat. Milton.

The multiplication and obliquity of disputes, which have so laid waste the intellectual world, is owing to nothing more than to the ill use of words. Locke.

When thus the gather'd storms of wretched love,
 In my swollen bosom, with long war had strove,
 Laid all the civil bonds of manhood waste,
 And scatter'd ruin as the torrent past. Prior.

2. Desolate; uncultivated.

There be very waste countries and wildernesses; but we find not mention whether any do inhabit there. Abbot.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deut. xxxii. 10.

3. Superfluous; exuberant; lost for want of occupiers.

Quite furchard with her own weight,
 And strang'd with her waste fertility. Milton.

4. Worthless; that of which none but vile uses can be made.

5. That of which no account is taken, or value found.

It may be published as well as printed, that so much skill in Hebrew derivations may not lie for waste paper. Dryden.

WASTE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Wanton or luxurious destruction; the act of squandering; consumption; loss.

Reasons induce us to think it a good work, which they, in their care for well bellowing of time, account waste. Hooker.

Thin air is better pierced, but thick air preferreth the found better from waste. Bacon's Natural History.

Freedom who loves, must first be wife and good;
 But from that mark how far they rove we feel,
 For all this waste of wealth, and loss of blood. Milton.

It was providently designed to repair the waste daily made by the frequent attrition in malification. Ray on the Creation.

2. Useless expence.

Useless expence, the perishing good, runs on too fast,
 And unenjoy'd it spends itself to waste; Dryden.

Few know the use of life before 'tis past.

Secure the workings of your soul from running to waste, and even your looser moments will turn to happy account. Watts.

3. Desolate or uncultivated ground.

Land that is left wholly to nature, that hath no improvement of pasturage, tillage, or planting, is called waste. Locke.

Lifted aloft he can to mount up higher,
 And, like fresh eagle, made his hardy flight
 Thro' all that great wide waste, yet wanting light. Spenser.

4. Ground, place, or space unoccupied.

These gentlemen, on their watch,
 In the dead waste and middle of the night,
 Had been thus encountered. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Forty days Elijah, without food,
 Wander'd this barren waste. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Lords of the world's great waste, the ocean, we Whole forests tend to reign upon the sea. Waller.

From that dire deluge, through the wat'ry waste,
 Such length of years, such various perils past,
 Thee I pursue, oh great ill-fated youth!
 Through the dismal waste of gloomy death. Smith.

See the man who spacious regions gave,
 A waste for beasts, himself deny'd a grave. Pope.

5. Region ruined and deserted.

All the leafy nation sinks at last,
 And Vulcan rides in triumph o'er the waste. Dryden's En.

6. Mischief; destruction.

The spirit of wantonness is sure scarce out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again. Shakspeare.

WASTEFUL, adj. [waste and full.]

1. Destructive; ruinous.

The folly of man
 Let in these wasteful furies. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Wantonly or dissolutely consumptive.

To smoothe the ice, or add another hue
 Unto the rainbow, or with taper light
 To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish, Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakspeare, K. John.

In such cases they set them off more with wit and activity, than with costly and wasteful expences. Bacon.

3. Lavish; prodigal; luxuriantly liberal.

How has kind heav'n adorn'd the happy land,
 And scatter'd blessings with a wasteful hand! Addison.

4. Desolate; uncultivated; unoccupied.

In wilderness and wasteful deserts stray'd,
 To seek her knight. Fairy Queen.

Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild. Milton.

WASTEFULLY, adv. [from wasteful.] With vain and dissolute consumption.

Never any man would think our labour mis-spent, or the time wastefully consumed. Hooker.

To her new-made favourite, Morat,
 Her lavish hand is wastefully profuse. Dryden's Aureng.

WASTEFULNESS, n. f. [from wasteful.] Prodigality.

WATCH, n. f. [wæcce, Saxon.]

1. Forbearance of sleep.

Attendance without sleep.

All the long night their mournful watch they keep,
 And all the day stand round the tomb and weep. Addison.

3. Attention; close observation.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
 I shot his fellow, of the self-same flight,
 The self-same way, with more advised watch,
 To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
 I oft found both. Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.

4. Guard; vigilant keep.

Still, when the slept, he kept both watch and ward. F. 2.

He, these to thy charge;
 Use careful watch, chafe trusty censurers. Shakspeare, R. III.

Love can find entrance not only into an open heart, but also into a heart well fortified, if watch be not well kept. Bacon.

5. Watchman; men set to guard. It is used in a collective sense.

Before her gate, high God did sweat ordain,
 And wakeful watches ever to abide. Fairy Queen.

 WATER. n. f. [waeter, Dutch; percep, Saxon.] Shaksp. Macbeth.
 Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all flavour or taste; and it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal diameters, and of equal specific gravities, as Dr. Cheyne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious on all sides. Their smoothness accounts for their sliding easily over one another's surfaces; their sphericity keeps them also from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their frictions in sliding over one another, is rendered the least possible. Their hardness accounts for the incompressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The porosity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion. Shaksp. Macbeth.

I warrant thee no body hears. Shaksp. Mer. Wives of Wind.
9. Course; regular progression.
But give me leave to seize my destin'd prey,
And let eternal justice take the way. Dryden.
10. Situation where a thing may probably be found.
These inquiries are never without barrenness, and very often useless to the curious inquirer. For men stand upon their guards against them, taying all their counsels and secrets out of their way. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
11. A situation or course obstructive and obviating.
The imagination being naturally tumultuous, interpoleth itself without asking leave, casting thoughts in our way, and forcing the understanding to reflect upon them. Duppa.
12. Tendency to any meaning, or act.
There is nothing in the words that founds that way, or points particularly at persecution. Atterbury.
13. Accels; means of admittance.
Being once at liberty, 'twas said, having made my way with some foreign prince, I would turn pirate. Raleigh.
14. Sphere of observation.
The general officers, and the publick ministers that fell in my way, were generally subject to the gout. Temple.
15. Means; mediate instrument; intermediate step.
By noble ways we conquest will prepare;
First offer peace, and that refus'd, make war. Dryden.
What conceivable ways are there, whereby we should come to be assured that there is such a being as God? Tillotson.
A child his mother so well instructed this way in geography, that he knew the limits of the four parts of the world. Locke.
It is not impossible to God to make a creature with more ways to convey into the understanding the notice of corporeal things, than those five he has given to man. Locke.
16. Method; scheme of management.
He durst not take open way against them, and as hard it was to take a secret, they being to continually followed by the best, and every way ablest of that region. Sidney, b. ii.
Will not my yielded crown redeem my breath?
Still am I fear'd? is there no way but death? Daniel.
As by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to himself in the way of flattery; so by calling good evil, he is misrepresented to others, in the way of slander. South's Sermons.
Now what impious ways my wishes took?
How they the monarch, and the man forsook? Prior.
The senate, forced to yield to the tribunes of the people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to the time. Swift.

WAY

17. Private determination.
He was of an high mind, and loved his own will and his way,
as one that revered himself, and would reign indeed. Bacon.
If I had my way, I had sing'd his furs by this time. B. Johnson's Catiline.
18. Manner; mode.
She with a calm carelesness let every thing slide, as we do by their speeches, who neither in matter nor person do any way belong unto us. Staines.
God hath so many times and ways spoken to men. Hooker.
Few writers make an extraordinary figure, who have not something in their way of thinking or expressing, that is entirely their own. Spectator, N° 160.
His way of expressing and applying them, not his invention of them, is what we admire. Addison.
19. Method; manner of practice.
Having left the way of nobleness, he strove to climb to the height of terribleness. Sidney.
Matter of mirth,
She could devise, and thousand ways invent,
To feed her foolish humour, and vain jolliment. Spenser.
Taught
To live th' easiest way, not with perplexing thoughts. Milton.
20. Method or plan of life, conduct, or action.
A physician, unacquainted with your body, may put you in a way for a present cure, but overthroweth your health in some other kind. Bacon.
To attain
The height and depth of thy eternal ways,
All human thought comes short. Milton.
When a man sees the prodigious expanse our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles they would have left us, had they only been instructed in the right way. Addison on Italy.
21. Right method to act or know.
We are quite out of the way, when we think that things contain within themselves the qualities that appear to us in them. La.
They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under the conduct of a guide that will mislead them, than he that has not yet taken a step, and is likelier to enquire after the right way. Locke.
By me, they offer all that you can ask,
And point an easy way to happiness. Rowe.
22. General scheme of acting.
Men who go out of the way to hint free things, must be guilty of absurdity, or rudeness. Clarissa.
23. By the way. Without any necessary connection with the main design; en passant.
Note, by the way, that unity of continuance is easier to procure, than unity of species. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Will Honeycomb, now on the verge of threescore, asked me, in his most serious look, whether I would advise him to marry lady Betty Single, who, by the way, is one of the greatest fortunes about town. Spectator, N° 475.
24. To go or come one's way, or ways; to come along, or depart.
A familiar phrase.
Nay, come your ways;
This is his majesty, say your mind to him. Shakspere.
To a boy fast asleep upon the brink of a river, thought came and wak'd him; prithe get up, and go thy ways, thou'll tumble in and be drown'd else. L'Estrange.
25. Way and ways, are now often used corruptly for wife.
But if he shall any ways make them void after he hath heard them, then he shall bear her iniquity. Numb. xxx. 15.
They erect conclusions no way inferible from their pre-misses. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Being sent to reduce Paros, he mistook a great hire at a distance for the fleet, and being no ways a match for them, set sail for Athens. Swift.
'Tis no way the interest even of priesthood. Pope.
WAYBEAD. n. s. A plant. Ainslie.
WAYFARER. n. s. [way and fare, to go.] Passenger; traveller.
Howsoever, many wayfarers make themselves glad, by putting the inhabitants in mind of this privilege; who again, especially the women, forsworn not to bairn them. Carver.
WAYFARING. adj. Travelling; passing; being on a journey.
They to whom all this is revealed, if they will not be directed into a path so plain and smoothened, that the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein, must needs acknowledge themselves in the number of the blind, that will not enter into God's rest. Hammond's Fundamentals.
WAYFARING TREE. n. s. [solivarium, Lat.] A plant.
The flower consists of one leaf, which is divided into five parts, and expands in a circular order; these are collected into the form of an umbrella: the ovary, which is placed on the upper part of the flower, becomes a soft berry, full of juice, which contains one stony compressed furrowed seed. Müller.
To WAYLAY. v. a. [way and lay.] To watch indiduously in the way; to beset by ambush. I will

WEA

- I will waylay thee going home, where if it be thy chance to kill me,—thou kill'lt me like a rogue and a villain. Shaksp.
The employment of money is chiefly merchandizing or purchasing; and usury waylays both: it dulls and damps all industries. Bacon.
How thou lurk'lt
In valley or green meadow to waylay
Some beauty rare. Milton's Paradise Regained.
Now on their coasts our conquering navy rides,
Waylays their merchants, and their land belets,
Each day new wealth without their care provides,
They lay asleep with prizes in their nets. Dryden.
Like hunted castors, conscious of their store,
Their waylaid wealth to Norway's coasts they bring. Dryd.
WAYLAYER. n. s. [from waylay.] One who waits in ambush
for another.
WAYLESS. adj. [from way.] Pathless; untracked.
When on upon my wayless walk,
As my desires me draw,
I, like a madman fell to talk
With every thing I saw. Dryden's Queen of Cynthia.
WAYMARK. n. s. [way and mark.] Mark to guide in travelling.
Set thee up waymarks, make thee high heaps. Jer. xxxi. 21.
To WAYMENT. v. a. [way, Saxon.] To lament, or grieve.
Obsolete.
What boots it to weep and to wayment,
When ill is chance'd, but doth the ill increase,
And the weak mind with double woe torment. Fairy Queen.
WAYWARD. adj. [pa way, and weard, Saxon.] Froward;
peevish; morose; vexatious.
That night the elder it was, the more wayward it shewed itself towards them. Sidney.
How wayward is this foolish love,
That, like a resty babe, will scratch the nurse,
And presently all humbled, kiss the rod. Shakspere.
Wayward beauty doth not fancy move,
A frown forbids, a smile engend'reth love. Fairfax.
To mischief bent,
He seldom does a good with good intent;
Wayward, but wise; by long experience taught
To please both parties, for ill ends he fought. Dryden.
WAYWARDLY. adv. [from wayward.] Frowardly; per-versely.
Waywardly proud; and therefore bold: because extremely faultry. Sidney.
Howsoever, some will still be waywardly disposed; yet if such as be in authority will still be waywardly disposed; yet if convenient discipline be kept within the bounds of modesty, or else removed. Whitgift.
WAYWARDNESS. n. f. [from wayward.] Frowardness; perverseness.
Such the behaviour of ladies, as builded their chastity not upon waywardness, but choice of worthiness. Sidney.
The best of his time hath been but rash; then must we look from his age to receive not alone the imperfections of long en-grafted condition; but the unruly waywardness; that infirm and choleric years bring. Shakspere.
A child will have as much wit as he hath waywardness.
Watson on Education.
We. pronoun. [See I.]
The plural of I.
Retire we to our chamber,
A little water clears us of this deed. Shakspere.
Fair and noble hostels,
We are your guests to night. Shakspere's Macbeth.
Notwithstanding animals had nothing like the use of reason, we find in them all the lower parts of our nature, in the greatest strength. Addison.
2. Improperly and ungrammatically for the oblique case, us.
To poor we,
Thine enemy's most capital. Shakspere.
WEAK. adj. [pæc, Saxon; weak, Dutch.]
1. Feeble; not strong.
He is weary and weak handed. 2 Sam. xvii. 2.
Here only weak,
Against the charm of beauty's powerful glance. Milton.
Wer't thou not weak with hunger, mad with love,
My hand should force thee. Dryden.
Fame and reputation are weak ties: many have not the least sense of them: powerful men are only awed by them as children, being by the course of nature born weak, and unable to provide for themselves, they have, by the appointment of God, a right to be maintained by their parents. Locke.
2. Infirm; not healthy.
Here I stand your brave,
A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man. Shakspere.
3. Soft; pliant; not stiff.
Low of found.
A voice not soft, weak, piping and womanish; but audible, strong and manlike. Afcham.

WEA

5. Feeble of mind; wanting spirit; wanting discernment.
As the case stands with this present age, full of tongue and weak of brain, we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker.
This murder'd prince, though weak he was,
He was not ill, nor yet so weak, but that He shew'd much martial valour in his place. Daniel.
She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton.
That Portugal hath yet no more than a suspension of arms, they may thank the Whigs, whose false representations they were so weak to believe. Swift.
6. Not much impregnated with any ingredient: as a weak tincture, weak beer.
7. Not powerful; not potent.
I must make fair weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong. Shakspere.
The weak, by thinking themselves strong, are induced to venture and proclaim war against that which ruins them; and the strong, by conceiting themselves weak, are thereby rendered unactive and useless. South's Sermons.
If the poor found the rich disposed to supply their wants, or if the weak might always find protection from the mighty,
they could none of them lament their own condition. Swift.
8. Not well supported by argument.
A case for weak and feeble hath been much persifled in. Hook.
9. Unfortified.
To quell the tyrant love, and guard thy heart
On this weak side, where most our nature fails,
Would be a conquest worthy Cato's son. Addison's Cato.
To WEAKEN. v. a. To debilitate; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength.
The first which weakened them was their security. Hooker.
Their hands shall be weakened from the work that it be not done. Neb. vi. 9.
Intestine broils,
Weakening the scepter of old night. Milton.
Every violence offered to the body weakens and impairs it, and renders it less durable. Roy on the Creativ.
Let us not weaken still the weaker side
By our divisions. Addison's Cato.
Solemn impressions that seem to weaken the mind, may, by proper reflection, be made to strengthen it. Clarissa.
WEAKLY. n. s. [from weak.] A feeble creature.
Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight;
And, weakling, Warwick takes his gift again,
And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject. Shakspere.
Æscop begged his companions not to overcharge him; they found him a weakling, and bade him please himself. L'Estrange.
WEAKLY. adv. [from weak.]
1. Feebly; with want of strength.
The motion of gravity worketh weakly, both far from the earth, and also within the earth. Bacon.
Was plighted faith so weakly seal'd above,
That for one error, I must lose your love? Dryden.
2. Indifferently; injudiciously; timorously; with feebleness of mind.
This high gift of strength committed to me,
Under the seal of silence could not keep,
But weakly to a woman must reveal it. Milton.
T'ancred, I neither am dispos'd to make Request for life, nor offer'd life to take;
Much less deny the deed; but best of all Beneath pretended justice weakly fall. Dryden's Fables.
Being old and weakly, twenty years in prison, it was ten to one that ever I should have returned. Raleigh.
WEAKNESS. n. f. [from weak.]
1. Want of strength; want of force; feebleness.
Troy in our weakness lives, not in her strength. Shaksp.
Argument
Of human weakness rather than of strength.
The General's force, as kept alive by fight,
Now, not oppos'd, no longer can pursue:
Lasting till heav'n had done his courage right,
When he had conquer'd, he his weakness knew. Dryden.
New graces yearly like thy works display,
Soft without weakness, without glaring gay.
By such a review we shall discern and strengthen our weaknesses with good resolution, and so order our future conversation as may render us least exposed to falling. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Infirmity; unhealthiness.
Persons in those posts derive a weakness of constitution from the ease and luxury of their ancestors, and the delicacy of their own education. Temple.
3. Want of cogency.
She seems to be conscious of the weakness of those testimonies. Tillotson.
4. Want of judgment; want of resolution; foolishness of mind.
Weakness is thy excuse,
And I believe it; weakness to resist
Philistia gold: if weakness may excuse,
What murderer, what traitor, parricide,
Incestuous, sacrilegious, but may plead it?
All wickedness is weakness. Milton.
4
5. Defect;

WEA

3. Defect; failing.

If you will work on any man, you must know his nature, and so lead him; or his weaknesses and disadvantages, and so awe him. Bacon.

Many find a pleasure in contradicting the common reports of fame, and in spreading abroad the weaknesses of an exalted character. Addison's Spectator.

WEAKSIDE. n. f. [weak and side.] Foible; deficiency; infirmity.

This dog would have fought for his master in any other case; but the love of mutton was his weakside. L'Estrange.

Their application to trade has increased their shipping, which they found to be their weakside in their last attempts. Temple.

I will be married to a wealthy widow,

Ere three days pass. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

My speculations, when fold single, like cherries upon the stick, are delights for the rich and wealthy; after some time they come to market in great quantities, and are every ordinary man's money. Addison's Spectator.

Not Neptune's self from all his floods receives

A wealthier tribute than to thine he gives. Pope.

TO WEAN. v. a. [penan, Saxon.]

1. To put from the breast; to ab lactate.

She was weaned when it did taste the wormwood on the nipple; pretty fool to see it fall out with the dug. Shakespeare.

I have behaved as a child that is weaned of his mother. Pf.

In weaning young creatures, the best way is never to let them suck the paps at all; for then they will drink up milk without any difficulty. Ray on the Creation.

A fortnight before you wean calves from milk, let water be mixed with it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To withdraw from any habit or desire.

Here the place whose pleasant sight,

From other shades have wean'd my wand'ring mind;

Tell me what wants me here. Spenser.

I the rather wean me from despair,

For love of Edward's offspring in my womb. Shakespeare.

Seriously reflect on the happy state he shall most certainly arrive to, if he but wean himself from these worldly impediments here that clog his soul's flight. Digby.

Children newly weaned from their parents, put out their hands towards them in their dreams, as if they were still present. Stillingfleet.

There the coarse cake, and homely hulks of beans,

From pamp'ring riot the young stomach weans. Dryden.

They were intended by the Author of our being, to wean us gradually from our fondness of life, the nearer we approach to the end of it. Swift.

WEA

WEANING. n. f. [from wean.]

1. An animal newly weaned.

Though when as Lowder was far away,

This wolfish sheep would catch his prey;

A lamb, or a kid, or a weanet waf;

With that to the wood would he speed haste. Spenser.

To gorge the flesh of lambs and weaning kids,

On hills where flocks are fed, flies tow'rd the springs

Of Ganges or Hydaspes. Milton's Parad. Lost.

2. A child newly weaned.

WEAPON. n. f. [peapon, Saxon.] Instrument of offence; something with which one is armed to hurt another.

The giant

Down let fall his arm, and soft withdrew

His weapon huge, that heaved was on high,

For to have slain the man that on the ground did ly. Fa. 2.

The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;

For I have laden me with many spoils,

Using no other weapon but his name. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Take this weapon

Which I have here recover'd from the Moor. Shakespeare's Othello.

Touch me with noble anger;

O let not women weapons, water drops,

Stain my man's cheeks. Shakespeare's King Lear.

His foes, who came to bring him death,

Bring him a weapon that before had none. Daniel.

With his full force he whirl'd it first around,

Imperial Juno turn'd the course before;

And fix'd the wand'ring weapon in the door. Dryden's Æn.

WEAPONED. adj. [from weapon.] Armed for offence; furnished with arms.

Left his ground-nest, high tow'ring to defy

The Morn's approach, and greet her with his song. Milton.

3. To pass by degrees.

If passion causes a present terror, yet it soon wears off; and inclination will easily learn to fight such Caucasians. Lake.

The difficulty will every day grow less and wear off, and obedience become easy and familiar. Rever's Sermons.

WEAR. n. f. [from wear.]

1. The act of wearing; the thing worn.

It was th' enchantment of her riches

That made m' apply t' your cronny witches;

That in return would pay th' expence,

The wear and tear of conscience. Hudibras.

2. [pen, Saxon, a few; wär, German, a wound.] A dam to shut up and raise the water; often written weir or wier.

They will force themselves through flood gates, or over wears, hedges or tops in the water. Walter's Angler.

WEAR. n. f. Weard, whether initial or final, signifies watchfulness or care, from the Saxon weardan, to ward or keep. Gib.

WEARER. n. f. [from wear.] One who has any thing appendant to his person.

The celestial habits, and the reverence

Of the grave wearer. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Were I the wearer of Antonio's beard,

I would not have't to-day. Shakespeare's Act. and Cleopatra.

Cowls, hoods and habits with their wearers tost,

And fluster'd into rags. Milton.

Armour bears off insults, and preserves the wearer in the day of battle; but the danger once repelled, it is laid aside, as being too rough for civil conversation. Dryden.

We ought to leave room for the humour of the artist or wearer. Addison on Italy.

WEARING. n. f. [from wear.] Cloaths.

It was his bidding;

Give me my nightly wearing and adieu. Shakespeare.

WEARINESS. n. f. [from weary.]

1. Lassitude; state of being spent with labour.

Come, our stomachs

Will make what's homely favour; weariness

Can snore upon the flint, when resty sloth

Finds the down pillow hard. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Water-fowls supply the weariness of a long flight by taking water. Hale.

Heaven, when the creature lies prostrate in the weakness of sleep and weariness, spreads the covering of night and darkness to conceal it. South's Sermons.

To full bowls each other they provoke;

At length, with weariness and wine oppress'd,

They rise from table, and withdraw to rest. Dryden.

2. Fatigue; cause of lassitude.

The more remained out of the weariness and fatigue of their late marches. Clarendon.

3. Impatience of any thing.

Tediousness.

WEARISH. adj. [I believe from pen, Saxon; a quagmire.]

Boggy; watery.

A garment over-rich and wide for many of their wearish and ill disposed bodies. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

WEARISOME. adj. [from weary.] Troublesome; tedious; causing weariness.

The soul preferreth rest in ignorance before wearisome labour to know. Hooker.

These high wild hills, and rough uneven ways

Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome. Shakespeare.

Troops came to the army the day before, harassed with a long and wearisome march. Bacon.

Costly I reckon not them alone which charge the purse, but which are wearisome and importune in suits. Bacon.

4. Causing weariness; tirefome.
Their gates to all were open evermore
That by the weary way were travelling,
And one fat waiting ever them before
To call in comers by that needy were and poor. Fa. Queen.
The weary and most loathed life
That age, ach, penury, imprisonment,
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death. Shakespeare.
Put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your fellows; I'd have it come to question. Shak.
WEASEL. n. f. [pejel, Saxon; weasel, Dutch; mustela, Latin.]
A small animal that eats corn and kills mice.
Ready in gybes, quick-answer'd, faucey, and
As quarrelsome as the weasel. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
A weasel once made shift to sink
In at a corn loft through a chink. Pope.
WEASAND. n. f. [wejen, Saxon.] This word is very variously written; but this orthography is nearest to the original word.
The windpipe; the passage through which the breath is drawn and emitted.
Marry Diggon, what should him affray,
To take his own where-ever it lay;
For had his weasand been a little wider,
He would have devoured both hisder and shudder. Spenser.
Cut his weasand with thy knife. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Matter to be discharged by expectoration must first pass into the lungs, then into the alpera arteria, or weasand, and from thence be coughed up and spit out by the mouth. W. Sem.
The shaft that slightly was impreis'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight encreas'd,
Drove through his neck allant; he spurns the ground,
And the foul issues through the weasand's wound. Dryden.
The unerring steel descended while he spoke,
Pierc'd his wide mouth, and through his weasand broke. Dryden.
WEATHER. n. f. [wejen, Saxon.]
1. State of air, respecting either cold or heat, wet or drincls.
Who's there, besides foul weather?—One mended like the weather, most unquietly. Shakespeare, King Lear.
I am far better born than is the king;
But I must make fair weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong. Shakespeare.
Men must content themselves to travel in all weathers, and through all difficulties. L'Estrange.
The sun
Foretells the change of weather in the skies,
Through mists he shoots his fullen beams,
Suspect a drifling day. Dryden.
2. The change of the state of the air.
It is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle not in decay;
how much more to behold an ancient family, which have stood against the waves and weathers of time? Bacon.
3. Tempest; storm.
What gusts of weather from that gathering cloud,
My thoughts preface. Dryden's Virgil.
To WEATHER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To expose to the air.
He perch'd on some branch thereby,
To weather him and his moist wings to dry. Spenser.
Mustard-seed gather for being too ripe,
And weather it wel, yet ye give it a stripe. Tusser.
2. To pass with difficulty.
He weather'd fell Charibdis; but ere long,
The skies were darkened, and the tempests strong. Garth.
Could they weather and stand the flock of an eternal duration, and yet be at any time subject to a dissolution. Hale.
3. To WEATHER a point. To gain a point against the wind;
to accomplish against opposition.
We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weather'd our point; a stretch or two more will do the work. Addison.
4. To WEATHER out. To endure.
When we have pass'd these gloomy hours,
And weather'd out the storm that beats upon us. Addison.
WEATHERBEATEN. adj. Harassed and seasoned by hard weather.
They perceived an aged man and a young, both poorly arrayed, extremely weatherbeaten, the old man blind, the young man leading him. Sidney.
She enjoys sure peace for evermore,
As weatherbeaten ship arrived on happy shore. Fairy Queen.
Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And fandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him bootless home, and weatherbeaten back. Shak. H. IV.
I hope when you know the world, you will at once leap into the river, and swim through handfomely, and not weatherbeaten with the divers blasts of irresolution, stand thivering upon the brink. Suckling.
A weatherbeaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.

- Dido received his weatherbeaten troops. Dryden's Virgil.
The old weatherbeaten foldier carries in his hand the Roman eagle.
WEATHERBOARD, or Weatherbow. n. f. In the sea language, that side of a ship that is to the windward. Addison.
WEATHERCOCK. n. f. [weather and cock.]
1. An artificial cock set on the top of a spire, which by turning shows the point from which the wind blows.
But alas! the sun keeps his light, though thy faith be darkened; the rocks stand still, though thou change like a weathercock. Sidney.
A kingfisher hanged by the bill, converting the breast to that point of the horizon from whence the wind doth blow, is a very strange introducing of natural weathercocks. Brown.
2. Anything fickle and inconstant.
Where had you this pretty weathercock?—I cannot tell what his name is my husband had him of. Shakespeare.
He break my promise and abolve my vow!
The word which I have given shall stand like fate,
Not like the king's that weathercock of state. Dryden.
WEATHERDRIVEN. part. Forced by storms or contrary winds.
Philip, during his voyage towards Spain, was weather-driven into Weymouth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
WEATHERGAZE. n. f. [weather and gaze.] Any thing that shows the weather.
To vere and tack, and steer a cause,
Against the weathergaze of laws. Hudibras.
WEATHERGLASS. n. f. [weather and glass.] A barometer.
As in some weatherglass my love I hold,
Which falls or rises with the heat or cold,
I will be constant yet. Dryden.
John's temper depended very much upon the air; his spirits rose and fell with the weatherglass. Arbutnot.
We shall hardly wish for a perpetual equinox to have the charges of weatherglass; for the two equinoxes of our year are the most windy and tempestuous. Bentley's Sermons.
WEATHERSPY. n. f. [weather and spy.] A star-gazer; an astrologer; one that foretells the weather.
And sooner may a gulling weather-spy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Dennis.
WEATHERWISE. n. f. [weather and wise.] Skillful in foretelling the weather.
WEATHERWISER. n. f. [weather and wiser, Dutch; to show.]
Any thing that foretells the weather.
Most vegetables expand their flowers and down in warm sun shiny weather, and again close them toward the evening, or in rain, as is in the flowers of pimpernel, the opening and shutting of which are the countryman's weatherwis-er. Darham's Physico-Theology.
To WEAVE. v. a. Preterite wove, woven, part. pass. wove, woven; [wejan, Saxon; weven, Dutch.]
1. To form by texture; to form by inserting one part of the materials within another.
Here in her hairs
The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
A golden mesh to intrap the hearts of men, Faster than gnats in cobwebs. Shakespeare.
The women wove hangings for the grove. 2 Kings xxiii. 7.
White seem'd her robes, yet wove so they were,
As snow and gold together had been wrought. Dryden.
These purple vests were wove'd by Dardan dames. Dryden.
Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has wove'd
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours; gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress:
And Venus shall the texture bless. Prior.
2. To unite by intermixture.
When religion was woven into the civil government, and flourished under the protection of the emperors, mens thoughts and discourses were full of secular affairs; but in the three first centuries of christianity, men who embraced this religion had given up all their interests in this world, and lived in a perpetual preparation for the next. Addison.
3. To interpose; to insert.
The duke be here to-night! the better! best!
This weaver itself perforce into my business. Shakespeare.
To WEAVE. v. n. To work with a loom.
WEAVER. n. f. [from wave.] One who makes threads into cloth.
Upon these taxations,
The clothiers all not able to maintain,
The many to them longing, have put off
The spinners, carders, fullers, weavers. Shak. Hen. VIII.
My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope. Job vi. 6.

- The weaver may cast religion upon what loom he please. How.
Her flag aloft spreads ruffling to the wind,
And languine streamers seem the flood to fire:
The weaver charm'd with what his loom design'd,
Goes on to see, and knows not to retire. Dryden.
WEAVERFISH. n. f. [varanus piscis, Latin.] A fish. Ainsworth.
WEB. n. f. [webba, Saxon.]
1. Texture; any thing woven.
Penelope, for her Ulysses' sake,
Devil'd a web her woovers to deceive;
In which the work that the all day did make,
The same at night she did again unweave.
Spiders touch'd, seek their web's inmost part. Spenser.
By day the web and loom, Davies.
And homely household talk shall be her doom. Dryden.
Where was when they this happy web have spun,
Shall bless the sacred clue and bid it smoothly run. Dryden.
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours. Prior.
2. Some part of a sword. Obsolete.
The sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pommel, rich stone; hilt, gold, approv'd by touch. Fairf.
3. A kind of dusky film that hinders the sight; suffusion.
This is the foul fibertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hairlip. Shakespeare.
WEDED. adj. [from web.] Joined by a film.
Such as are whole-footed, or whose toes are wedded together, their legs are generally short, the most convenient size for swimming. Darham's Physico-Theology.
WEED. n. f. [weod and fœt.] Palmipedous; having films between the toes.
Weed-footed fowls do not live constantly upon the land, nor fear to enter the water. Ray on the Creation.
WE'ETER. n. f. [webyter, Saxon; a woman-weaver.] A weaver. Obsolete.
After local names, the most in number have been derived from occupations; as Taylor, Welter, Wheeler. Canden.
To WED. v. a. [wejan, Saxon.]
1. To marry; to take for husband or wife.
If one by one you wedded all the world,
Or from the all that are, took something good
To make a perfect woman; she you kill'd
Would be unparelleld. Shakespeare.
Never did thy beauty, since the day
I saw thee first, and wedded thee, adorn'd
With all perfection, fo inflame my senses.
Close, blind to wit and worth,
Wad the rich dullness of some son of earth. Pope.
2. To join in marriage.
In Syracuse was I born, and wed Unto a woman happy but for me. Shakespeare.
Then I shall be no more;
And Adam, wedded to another Eve, Shall live with her. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The woman in us still prosecutes a deceit like that begun in the garden; and our underhandings are wedded to an Eve, as fatal as the mother of their miseries. Glanville.
3. To unite for ever.
Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
4. To take for ever.
Though the principal men of the house of commons were again elected to serve in this parliament, yet they were far from wedding the war, or taking themselves to be concerned to make good any declaration made by the former. Clarendon.
They positively and concernedly wedded his cause. Clarendon.
5. To unite by love or fondness.
Men are wedded to their lusts, and resolved upon a wicked course; and so it becomes their interest to with there were no God. Tillotson's Sermons.
To WED. v. n. To contract matrimony.
When I shall wed,
That lord whose hand shall take my plight, shall carry Half my love with him, half my care and duty. Shakespeare.
To love, to wed,
For Hymen's rites, and for the marriage bed
You were ordain'd.
Nor took I Guiscard, by blind fancy led,
Or hasty choice as many women wed;
But with deliberate care. Dryden.
WEDDING. n. f. [from wed.] Marriage; nuptials; the nuptial ceremony.
Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day. Shakespeare.
I will dance and eat plums at your wedding. Shakespeare.
Let her beauty be her wedding-dower;
For me and my possessions the esteems not. Shakespeare.
When my son was entered into his wedding-chamber, he fell down and died. 2 Esdr. x. 1.
These three country bills agree, that each wedding produces four children. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

- His friends were invited to come and make merry with him;
and this was to be the wedding-feast. L'Estrange.
If she affirmed herself to be a virgin, she must on her wedding-day, and in her wedding cloaths perform the ceremony of going alone into the den, and stay an hour with the lion. Swift.
A woman seldom asks advice before she has bought her wedding-cloaths. Spectator.
WEDGE. n. f. [wegge, Danish; wegge, Dutch.]
1. A body, which having a sharp edge, continually growing thicker, is used to cleave timber; one of the mechanical powers.
A barbarous troop of clownish fone,
The honour of these noble bows down threw;
Under the wedge I heard the trunk to groan. Spenser.
The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in the cleaving of wood. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
He left his wedge within the cloven oak
To whet their courage. Dryden's Aeneid.
The oak let many a heavy groan, when he was cleft with a wedge of his own timber. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
2. A mass of metal.
As sparkles from the anvil used to fly,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid. Fa. Qy.
When I saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them. Job. vii.
3. Any thing in the form of a wedge.
In warlike multiers they appear,
In rhombs and wedges and half-moons and wings. Milton.
To WEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fasten with wedges; to straiten with wedges; to cleave with wedges; to stop; to obstruct.
My heart,
As wedged with a sigh would rive in twain,
Left Hector, or my father, should perceive me. Shakespeare.
Where have you been broiling?—
—Among the crowd? the abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead. Shakespeare.
Part
In common, rang'd in figure wedge their way;
Intelligent of seasons. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Sergefthus in the centaur, soon he pass'd,
Wedge'd in the rocky shoals and flicking fast. Dryden.
Wedge on the keenest cythes,
And give us steeds that front against the foe. A. Phillips.
What impulse can be propagated from one particle, entomb'd and wedged in the very center of the earth, to another in the center of Saturn. Bentley's Sermons.
WEDLOCK. n. f. [web and lae, Sax. marriage and gift.] Marriage; matrimony.
She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shakespeare.
Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him;
And if she did play false, the fault was her's. Shakespeare.
Can wedlock know so great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse. Cleaveland.
He his happiest choice too late,
Shall meet already link'd, and wedlock-bound
To a fell adversary. Milton's Paradise Lost.
May not a prison or a grave,
Like wedlock, honour's tide have? Denham.
One thought the sex's prime felicity
Was from the bonds of wedlock to be free;
And uncontroll'd to give account to none. Dryden.
A man determined about the fiftieth year of his age to enter upon wedlock. Addison.
WEDNESDAY. n. f. [robenweag, Saxon; adensday, Swedish;
wonen/day, Dutch; won/day, Islandick.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothick nations from Woden or Odin.
Where is the honour of him that died on wednesday. Shak.
WEE. adj. [A Saxon word of the same root with weaving, Dutch;
wenig, German.] Little; small: whence the word weasel or weasel is used for little; as a weasel face. In Scotland it denotes small or little; as wee ane, a little one, or child; a wee bit, a little bit.
Does he not wear a great round beard, like a Glover's pa-ring knife?—No, forsooth; he hath but a little wee face with a little yellow beard. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
WEECHERM. n. f. [This is often written weitch elm.] A species of elm.
A cion of a weechelm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the brim of a hat. Bacon.
WEED. n. f. [weod, Saxon, tares.]
1. An herb noxious or useless.
If he had an immoderate ambition; which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon.
He

- He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds. Sandys.
Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds;
While fests, like locusts, did destroy the feeds. Denham.
Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. Mare.
When they are cut, let them lie, if weedy, to kill the weeds. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed,
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some tincture of the man. Prior.
2. [Weeda, Saxon; weed, Dutch.] A garment; cloaths; habit; drefs. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds, the mourning drefs of a widow.
My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney.
Neither is it any man's business to cloath all his servants with one weed; nor theirs to cloath themselves so, if left to their own judgments. Hecker.
They meet upon the way
An aged fire, in long black weeds yclad;
His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray,
And by his belt his book he hanging had. Fairy Queen.
Livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears, so called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. Spenser.
The snake throws her enamell'd skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in. Shakespeare.
Throng'd of knights and barons bold,
In weeds of peace high triumphs hold,
With flow'rs of ladies. Milton.
Lately your fair hand in woman's weed
Wrapp'd my glad head. Waller.
To WEED. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To rid of noxious plants.
When you sow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed giveth them shade. Bacon.
Your seedlings having flood 'till June, bestow a weeding on a slight howing upon them. Mortimer.
2. To take away noxious plants.
Oh Marcius,
Each word thou'lt spoke hath weeded from my heart
A root of ancient envy. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.
He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Elaiana, and manumiz'd it from that most dangerous confederacy.
Howel's Vocal Forest.
Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, fill so many pages of our controversial writings, that, were those weeded out, many volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper. Decay of Piety.
4. To root out vice.
Wife fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children ill things, as they were before in weeding in them learning. Alcham's Schoolmaster.
One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any signs that ever they had been there. Lake.
WEEDER. n. f. [from weed.] One that takes away any thing noxious.
A weeder out of his proud adversaries.
A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakespeare, Richard III.
WEEDHOOK. n. f. [weed and hook.] A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.
In May get a weedhook, a crotch, and a glove,
And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love. Tusser.
WEEDLESS. adj. [from weed.] Free from weeds; free from any thing useles or noxious.
So many weedless paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin. Dante.
A crystal brook,
When troubled most it does the bottom show;
'Tis weedless all above, and rockless all below. Dryden.
WEEDY. adj. [from weed.]
1. Consisting of weeds.
There on the pendant boughs, her coronet weed
Clambring to hang, an envious silver broke,
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
2. Abounding with weeds.
Hid in a weedy lake all night I lay,
Secure of safety. Dryden's En.
If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground. Mortimer.
WEEK. n. f. [pece, Saxon; weke, Dutch; wecka, Swedish.]
The space of seven days.
Fulfill her week, and we will give thee this also. Gen. xxix.
WEEKDAY. n. f. [week and day.] Any day not Sunday.
One solid dish his weekday meal affords,
An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's. Pope.
WEEKLY. adj. [from week.] Happening, produced, or done once a week; hebdomadary.

WEE

- The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses. Hecker.
So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with heirs their weekly bill. Dryden.
Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers, than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-church, and then loading the latter with calumny. Swift.
WEEKLY. adv. [from week.] Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.
These are obliged to perform divine worship in their turns weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal carions. Asyl.
WEEK. n. f. [peel, Saxon.]
1. A whirlpool.
2. A twigg'en snare or trap for fish. [perhaps from wiggen]
To WEEN. v. n. [penan, Saxon; weanen, Dutch.] To think;
to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.
Ah lady dear, quoth then the gentle knight,
Well may I ween your grief is wondrous great. Spenser.
So well it her befecms, that ye would ween
Some angel she had been. Spenser's Epithalamium.
When weening to return, whence they did stray,
They cannot find that path which first was shown;
But wander to and fro in ways unknown,
Furthert from end then, when they nearest ween. Fa. Queen.
Thy father, in pity of my hard distress,
Levy'd an army, weening to redeem
And reinstate me in the diadem. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Ween you of better luck,
I mean, in perjur'd witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, while here he liv'd Upon this naughty earth. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
They ween'd
That self-same day, by fight or by surprize,
To win the mount of God; and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.
To WEEP. v. n. preter. and part. pass. wept, weep'd. [weepan,
Saxon.]
1. To show sorrow by tears.
In that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not hence exhale,
That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping. Shakespeare.
I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. Shakespeare.
The days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.
Deut. xxxiv. 8.
Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it? Taylor.
Away, with women weep, and leave me here,
Fix'd, like a man, to die without a tear,
Or faste, or slay us both. Dryden.
A corpse it was, but whose it was, unknown;
Yet mov'd, how'er, the made the case her own;
Took the bad omen of a shipwreck'd man,
As for a stranger wept. Dryden.
When Darius wept over his army, that within a single age not a man of all that confluence would be left alive, Artabanus improved his meditation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with so many evils, that every one should wish himself dead long before. Waller's Preparation for Death.
This lovely weeping fair cannot be dearer to thee,
Than thou art to thy faithful Scordid. Rass.
2. To shed tears from any passion.
Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung. Shakespeare, King Lear.
3. To lament; to complain.
They weep unto me, saying, give us flesh that we may eat, Num.
To WEEP. v. a.
1. To lament with tears; to bewail; to bemoan.
If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes. Shakespeare.
Nor was I near to close his dying eyes,
To wash his wounds, to weep his obsequies. Dryden.
We wand'ring go Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe. Pope.
2. To shed moisture.
Thus was this place
A happy rural seat of various view,
Groves whose rich trees wept od'rous gums and balm. Mil.
Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber or the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms command'd which those trees adorn. Pope.
3. To abound with wet.
Rey-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds. Mortimer.
WEEPER. n. f. [from weep.]
1. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bewailer; a mourner.
If you have serv'd God in a holy life, send away the women

WEI

- men and the weepers: tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much: if thou art alone, or with fitting company, die as thou should'st; but do not die impudently, and like a fox caught in a trap. Taylor.
Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,
What store of brine supply'd the weeper's eyes. Dryden.
2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.
WEIRISH. adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Ascham in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tastes, it means insipid; applied to the body, weak and watery: here it seems to mean sour; surly.
A voice not soft, weak, piping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a countenance not weersish and crabbed, but fair and comely. Alcham's Schoolmaster.
To WEET. v. n. preterite wet, or wete. [wican, Saxon; weten, Dutch.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge.
Obsolete.
Him the prince with gentle court did board;
Sir knight, mought I of you this country read,
To wiet why on your shield, so goodly fcor'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head? Spenser.
I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weet
We stand up peerless. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
But well I wiet thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's song. Prior.
WEITLESS. adj. [from wiet.] Unknown. Spenser.
WE'VEIL. n. f. [wevel, Saxon; wevel, Dutch.] A grub.
A worm called a weevil, bred under ground, feedeth upon roots; as parsnips and carrots. Bacon's Natural History.
Corn is so innocent from breeding of mice, that it doth not produce the very weevils that live in it and consume it. Bentley.
WEZEL. n. f. [See WEASEL.]
I luck melancholy out of a fong, as a weazel sucks eggs. Shakespeare.
The corn-devouring weazel here abides,
And the wise ant. Dryden's Georg.
WEFT. The old preterite and part. pass. from to weave. Spenser.
WEFT. n. f. [guates, French; weft, to wander, Islandick;
weft, Latin.]
1. That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manour.
His horse, it is the herald's weft;
No, 'tis a mare. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
2. It is in Bacon for weft, a gentle blast.
The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest sort of smells are best in a weft air off. Bacon.
WEFT. n. f. [pepca, Saxon.] The woof of cloth.
WEFTAGE. n. f. [from weft.] Texture.
The whole mufcles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grew's Musaeum.
To WEIGH. v. a. [wegan, Saxon; wighen, Dutch.]
1. To examine by the balance.
Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved, so as not to be wet nor washed, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous,
'till the river cometh to its height. Bacon's Natural History.
Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton.
2. To be equivalent to in weight.
By the exsuction of the air out of a glass-vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.
3. To pay, allot, or take by weight.
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my comforts are, far hence. Shakespeare.
They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Zech. xi.
4. To raise; to take up the anchor.
Barbarossa, using this exceeding cheerfulness of his soldiers, weighed up the fourteen gallees he had sunk. Kneller.
Here he left me, ling'ring here delay'd
His parting kiss, and there his anchor weigh'd. Dryden.
5. To examine; to balance in the mind.
Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hoster.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences. Shakespeare, H. IV.
The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed. Bacon.
His majesty's speedy march left that design to be better weighed and digested. Clarendon.
You chose a retreat, and not 'till you had maturely weighed the advantages of rising higher, with the hazards of the fall. Dryden.
All grant him prudent; prudence interest weighs,
And interest bids him seek your love and praise. Dryden.
The mind, having the power to suspend the satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to examine them on all sides, and weigh them with others. Lacke.

WEI

- He is the only proper judge of our perfections, who weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions.
Addison's Spectator.
6. To WEIGH down. To overbalance.
Fear weighs down faith with shame. Daniel's Civ. War.
7. To WEIGH down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.
The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overladen, weigh down. Bacon.
In thy blood will reign
A melancholy damp of cold and drey,
To weigh thy spirits down. Milton.
Her father's crimes
Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers;
A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd,
His children murder'd. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks
The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep. Addison's Cato.
Excellent persons, weigh'd down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach. Addison.
To WEIGH. v. n.
1. To have weight.
Exactly weighing and frangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter. Brown.
2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.
This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Lacke.
A wise man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition. Addison.
3. To raise the anchor.
When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys, he cries. Dry.
4. To bear heavily; to press hard.
Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
WEIGHED. adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.
In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters. Bacon.
WEIGHED. n. f. [from weigh.] He who weighs.
WEIGHT. n. f. [wigh, Saxon.]
1. Quantity measured by the balance.
Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon's Natural History.
Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer;
Nature's too kind, and justice too severe:
Speak for us both, and to the balance bring;
On either side, the father and the king:
Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee;
Make it but feign; weigh, and leave the rest to me. Dryd.
Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.
Just balances, just weights shall ye have. Lev. xix. 36.
Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money. Arbutnot on Coins.
When the balance is intirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run intirely into one. Swift.
3. Ponderous mass.
A man leapech better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the finews by contracting them; otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth: as we see in horseraces, men are curious to forcee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force. Bacon's Natural History.
Wolsey, who from his own great store might have A palace or a college for his grave,
Lies here interr'd:
Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weight
Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit:
If thus thou lie'st neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee? Bp. Corbet.
All their confidence
Under the weight of mountains bury'd deep. Milton.
Pride, like a gulf, swallows us up; our very virtues, when so leavened, becoming weights and plummetts to sink us to the deeper ruin. Government of the Tongue.

What well-appointed leader fronts us here? Shakefp.
*Well-*apparel'd April on the heel
 Of limping winter treads. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.
 The pow'r of wisdom march'd before,
 And ere the sacrificing throng he join'd, Admonish'd thus his well-attending mind. Pope.
 Such music
 Before was never made,
 But when of old the sons of morning sung,
 Whilst the Creator great
 His constellations set.
 And the well-balanc'd world on hinges hung. Milton.
 Learners must at first be believers, and their master's rules Having been once made axioms to them, they mislead those who think it sufficient to excuse them, if they go out of their way in a well-beaten track. Locke.
 He chose a thousand horse, the flow'r of all
 His warlike troops, to wait the funeral:
 To bear him back, and share Evander's grief;
 A well-becoming, but a weak relief. Dryden.
 Those oppos'd files,
 Which lately met in the intestine shock,
 And furious close of civil butchery,
 Shall now, in mutual well-becoming rank,
 March all one way. Shakefp. Hen. IV.
 O'er the Elean plains, thy well-breath'd horse
 Impels the flying car, and wins the course.
 More dismal than the loud dislodged roar
 Of brazen enginery, that ceaseless storms
 The bastion of a well-built city. Philips.
 He conducted his course among the same well-chosen friendships and alliances with which he began it. Addison.
 My son corrupts a well-derived nature
 With his inducement. Shakefp.
 If good accrue, 'tis conferr'd most commonly on the base and infamous; and only happening sometimes to well-de-servers. Dryden.
 It grieves me he should desperately adventure the loss of his well-deserving life. Sidney, b. ii.
 What a pleasure is well-directed study in the search of truth! Locke.
 A certain spark of honour, which rose in her well-disposed mind, made her fear to be alone with him, with whom alone
 she desired to be. Sidney, b. ii.
 The unprepossessed, the well-disposed, who both together make much the major part of the world, are affected with a due fear of these things. South's Sermons.
 A clear idea is that, whereof the mind hath such a full and evident perception, as it does receive from an outward object, operating duly on a well-disposed organ. Locke.
 Amid the main, two mighty fleets engage;
 Aërium furveys the well-disputed prize. Dryden.
 The ways of well-doing are in number even as many, as are the kinds of voluntary actions: so that whatsoever we do in this world, and may do it ill, we shew ourselves therein by well-doing to be wise. Hooker, b. ii.
 The conscience of well-doing may pass for a recompence. L'Estrange.
 God will judge every man according to his works; to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing, endure through the heat and burden of the day, he will give the reward of their labour. Rogers's Sermons.
 As far the spear I throw,
 As flies an arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope.
 Fair nymphs and well-drest'd youths around her throne,
 But ev'ry eye was fixt on her alone. Pope.
 Such a doctrine in St. James's air, Shou'd chance to make the well-drest rabble flare. Pope.
 The desire of esteem, riches, or power, makes men espouse
 the well-endowed opinions in fashion. Locke.
 We ought to stand firm in well-established principles, and not be tempted to change for every difficulty. Watts.
 Echenus sage, a venerable man!
 Whose well-taught mind the present age surpass'd. Pope.
 Some reliques of the true antiquity, though disguised, a well-eyed man may happily discover. Spenser on Ireland.
 How sweet the products of a peaceful reign?
 The heaven-taught poet, and enchanting strain:
 The well-fill'd palace, the perpetual feast;
 A land rejoicing, and a people blest. Pope.
 Turkish blood did his young hands imbue.
 From thence returning with deserv'd applause,
 Against the Moors his well-bless'd sword he draws. Dryden.
 Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
 Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.
 A rational soul can be no more deceived in a well-formed, than ill-shaped infant. Locke.
 A well-formed proposition is sufficient to communicate the knowledge of a subject. Watts.
 Oh! that I'd dy'd before the well-fought wall!
 Had some distinguish'd day renown'd my fall,
 All Greece had paid my solemn funerals. Pope.
 Good men have a well-grounded hope in another life; and are as certain of a future recompence, as of the being of God. Alterbury.

 Let firm, well-hammer'd soles protect thy feet.
 Through freezing snows. Gay's Trivia.
 The camp of the heathen was strong, and well-harnessed, and compass'd round with horsemen. Idem, iv. 7.
 Among the Romans, those who saved the life of a citizen were dress'd in an oaken garland; but among us, this has been a mark of such well-intentioned persons as would betray their country. Addison.
 He, full of fraudulent arts,
 This well-invented tale for truth imparts. Dryden.
 He, by enquiry, got to the well-known house of Kalander. Sidney.
 Soon as thy letters trembling I unclose,
 That well-known name awakens all my woes.
 Where proud Athens rears her tow'ry head,
 With opening streets, and shining structures spread,
 She past, delighted, with the well-known seats. Pope.
 From a confin'd well-manag'd store,
 You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.
 A noble soul is better pleas'd with a zealous vindicator of liberty, than with a temporizing poet, or well-manner'd court-slave, and one who is ever decent, because he is naturally fer-vile. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
 Well-means think no harm; but for the rest,
 Things fac'd they pervert, and silence is the best. Dryden.
 By craft they may prevail on the weakness of some well-meaning men to engage in their designs. Rogers's Sermons.
 He examines that well-meant, but unfortunate, lie of the conquest of France. Arbutnot.
 A critic supposes he has done his part, if he proves a writer to have fail'd in an expression; and can it be wonder'd at, if the poets seem resolv'd not to own themselves in any error? for as long as one side despises a well-meant endeavour, the other will not be satisfied with a moderate appa-ration. Pope's Preface to his Works.
 Many sober, well-minded men, who were real lovers of the peace of the kingdom, were impo'd upon. Clarendon.
 Jarring inter'ests of themselves create
 Th' intended music of a well-mix'd state. Pope.
 When the blast of winter blows,
 Into the naked wood he goes;
 And seeks the tusk'd boar to rear,
 With well-mouth'd bounds, and pointed spear. Dryden.
 The applause that other people's reason gives to virtuous and well-ordered actions, is the proper guide of children, till they grow able to judge for themselves. Locke.
 The fruits of unity, next unto the well-pleasing of God, which is all in all, are towards those that are without the church; the other toward those that are within. Bacon.
 The exercise of the offices of charity is always well-pleasing to God, and honourable among men. Alterbury.
 My voice shall sound, as you do prompt mine ear;
 And I will stoop, and humble my intents
 To your well-practis'd wife directions. Shakefp. Hen. VI.
 The well-proportion'd shape, and beauteous face,
 Shall never more be seen by mortal eyes. Dryden.
 'Twas not the hasty product of a day,
 But the well-ripen'd fruit of wise delay. Dryden.
 Procure those that are fresh gathered, strait, smooth, and well-rooted. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 If I should instruct them to make well-running verses, they want genius to give them strength. Dryden.
 The eating of a well-season'd dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end. Locke.
 Instead of well-let hair, baldness. Idem, iii. 24.
 Abraham and Sarah were old, and well-tricken in age. Genesi.
 Many well-shaped innocent virgins are waddling like big-bellied women. Spectator, N. 127.
 We never see beautiful and well-tasted fruits from a tree
 choaked with thorns and briars. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 The well-tim'd oars
 With founding strokes divide the sparkling waves. Smith.
 Wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat. Pope.
 As hard a science to the fair as great.
 Mean time we thank you for your well-took labour.
 Go to your rest. Shakefp. Hamlet.
 Oh you are well-tun'd now; but I'll let down the pegs

 Ah, welladay! I'm flent with baneful smart. Gay.
 WELLBEING. n. f. [well and be.] Happiness; prosperity.
 Man is not to depend upon the uncertain dispositions of men for his wellbeing, but only on God and his own spirit. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 For whose wellbeing
 So amply, and with hands so liberal. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
 Thou hast provided ties of duty are founded upon gratitude:
 The most sacred ties of duty are founded upon gratitude:
 such as the duties of a child to his parent, and of a subject to his sovereign. From the former there is required love and honour, in recompence of being; and from the latter obedience and subjection, in recompence of protection and well-being. South's Sermons.
 All things are subservient to the beauty, order, and well-being of the whole. L'Estrange.
 He who does not co-operate with this holy spirit, receives none of those advantages which are perfecting of his nature, and necessary to his wellbeing. Spectator, N. 571.
 WELLBORN. n. f. Not meanly descended.
 One whose extraction from an ancient line,
 Gives hope again that wellborn men may shine. Waller.
 Heav'n, that wellborn souls inspires,
 Prompts me, through lifted swords, and rising fires,
 To rush undaunted to defend the walls. Dryden.
 WELLBRE'D. adj. [well and bred.] Elegant of manners; polite.
 None have been with admiration read,
 But who, besides their learning, were wellbred. Roscom.
 Both the poets were wellbred and well-natur'd. Dryden.
 Wellbred Spanish civility delight,
 In mumbling of the game they dare not bite. Pope.
 WELLNAT'UR'D. adj. [well and nature.] Good-natur'd;

 WELLDO'NE. interj. A word of praise.
 Welldone, thou good and faithful servant. Matt. xxv. 21.
 WELLFAVOUR'D. adj. [well and favour.] Beautiful; pleasing to the eye.
 His wife seems to be wellfavoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer. Shakefp.
 WELLME'T. interj. [well and meet.] A term of salutation.
 Once more to-day wellmet, distemper'd lords;
 The king by me requests your presence straight. Shakefp.
 On their life no grievous burthen lies,
 Who are wellnatur'd, temperate and wise:
 But an inhuman and ill-temper'd mind,
 Not any easy part in life can find. Denham.
 The manners of the poets were not unlike; both of them were well-bred, wellnatur'd, amorous, and libertine at least in their writings; it may be also in their lives. Dryden.
 Still with esteem no less convers'd than read;
 With wit wellnatur'd, and with books well-bred. Pope.
 WELLNIGH. adv. [well and nigh.] Almost.
 The fame to fore annoy'd has the knight,
 That wellnigh choaked with the deadly think,
 His forces fall. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 My feet were almost gone: my steps had wellnigh slippt. Pf.
 England was wellnigh ruined by the rebellion of the barons, and Ireland utterly neglected. Davies.
 Whoever shall read over St. Paul's enumeration of the duties incumbent upon it, might conclude, that wellnigh the whole of christianity is laid on the shoulders of charity alone. Sprat's Sermons.
 Notwithstanding a small diversity of positions, the whole aggregate of matter, as long as it retained the nature of a chaos, would retain wellnigh an uniform tenacity of texture. Bentley.
 WELLSPENT. adj. Passed with virtue.
 They are to lie down without any thing to support them in their age, but the conscience of a wellspent youth. L'Estrange.
 What a refreshment then will it be to look back upon a wellspent life? Calamy's Sermons.
 The constant tenour of their wellspent days,
 No less deserv'd a just return of praise. Pope.
 WELLSRING. n. f. [wellspring, Saxon.] Fountain; source.
 The fountain and wellspring of impiety, is a resolved purpose of mind to reap in this world, what sensual profit or sensual pleasure forever the world yieldeth. Hooker.
 Understanding is a wellspring of life. Prov. xvi. 22.
 WELLYLLER. n. f. [well and willer.] One who means kindly.
 Disarming all his own countrymen, that no man might shew himself a wellwiler of mine. Sidney, b. ii.
 There are fit occasions ministered for men to purchase to themselves wellwillers by the colour, under which they oftentimes prosecute quarrels of envy. Hooker.
 WELLWISH. n. f. [well and wish.] A wish of happiness.
 Let it not enter into the heart of any one that hath a well-wish for his friends or posterity, to think of a peace with France, till the Spanish monarchy be entirely torn from it. Add.
 WELLWISHER. n. f. [from wellwish.] One who wishes the good of another.

WEN

The actual traitor is guilty of perjury in the eye of the law; the secret wellwisher of the cause is so before the tribunal of conscience. Addison's Freeholder, N. 6.
 Betray not any of your wellwishes into the like inconveniences. Spectator, N. 271.
 No man is more your sincere wellwisher, than myself, or more the sincere wellwisher of your family. Pope.
 WELT. n. f. A border; a guard; an edging.
 Little low hedges made round like welts, with some pretty pyramids, I like well. Bacon.
 Certain icoli, or smatterers, are busy in the skirts and outsides of learning, and have scarce any thing of solid literature to recommend them. They may have some edging or trimming of a scholar, a welt, or so; but no more. B. Johnson.
 To WELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To sew any thing with a border.
 To WELTER. v. n. [peakan, Saxon; welteren, Dutch; wela-tari, Lat.]
 1. To roll in water or mire.
 He must not float upon his watry bier
 Unweep'd, nor welter to the parching winds. Milton.
 The companions of his fall o'erwhelm'd
 He soon discerns; and well'ring by his side
 The next himself. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
 The gushing head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood. Dryden.
 He sung Darius, great and good,
 By too severe a fate,
 Fallen from his high estate,
 And well'ring in his blood. Dryden's St. Cecilia.
 2. To roll voluntarily; to wallow.
 If a man inglut himself with vanity, or welter in filthiness like a swine, all learning, all goodness is soon forgotten. Ajcham.
 WEMM. n. f. [sem, Saxon.] A spot; a scar.
 Although the wound be healed, yet the wemme or scar still remaineth. Brewer's on Languages.
 WEN. n. f. [pen, Saxon.] A fleshy or callous excrescence, or protuberance.
 Warts are said to be destroy'd by the rubbing them with a green elder stick, and then burying the stick to rot in muck.
 It would be tried with corns and wens, and such other excrescences. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Mountains seem but so many wens; and unnatural protuberances upon the face of the earth. Mor.
 The poet rejects all incidents which are foreign to his poem: they are wens; and other excrescences, which belong not to the body. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 A promontory wens with grievly grace,
 Stood high upon the handle of his face. Dryden.
 WENCH. n. f. [penche, Saxon.]
 1. A young woman.
 What do I, silly wench, know what love hath prepared for me? Sidney, b. ii.
 Now—how dost thou look now? Oh ill-star'd wench!
 Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at court,
 This look of thine will hurl my soul from heav'n,
 And fends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl, Ev'n like thy chastity. Shakefp. Othello.
 Thou wouldst periwade her to a worse offence
 Than that, whereof thou dost accuse her wench. Donne.
 2. A young woman in contempt; a strumpet.
 But the rude wench her answer'd nought at all. Spenser.
 Do not play in wench-like words with that Which is so serious. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
 Men have these ambitious fancies,
 And wanton wenchies read romances. Prior.
 3. A strumpet.
 It is not a digression to talk of bawds in a discourse upon wenches. Spectator, N. 266.
 WENCHER. n. f. [from wench.] A fornicator.
 He must be no great eater, drinker, or sleeper; no gamester, wench, or top. Grew's Cosmology.
 To WEND. v. n. [penban, Saxon.]
 1. To go; to pass to or from. This word is now obsolete, but its preterite went, is still in use.
 Back to Athens shall the lovers wend. Shakefp.
 With league, whose date till death shall never end. Shakefp.
 They went on, and inferred, that if the world were a living creature, it had a soul. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Then Rome shall wend to Benevento. Arbutnot.
 Great feats shall he achieve.
 2. To turn round. It seems to be an old sea term.
 A ship of 600 tons will carry as good ordnance as a ship of 1200 tons; and though the greater have double the number, the lesser will turn her broadsides twice, before the greater can wend once. Raleigh.
 WENNEL. n. f. [a corrupted word for wending.] An animal newly taken from the dam.
 Pinch never thy wench of water or meat. Tusser.
 WENNY. adj. [from wen.] Having the nature of a wen.
 Some persons, so deformed with these, have suspected them to be wenny. Wenham's Surgery.
 39. WENT. v. a. [from wend.] To go; to pass to or from.

 What cook would lose her time in picking larks, wheatears, and other small birds. Swift.
 WHEA'TPLUM. n. f. A sort of plum. Answorth.
 TO WHEEDLE. v. a. [Of this word I can find no etymology, though used by good writers, and Locke seems to mention it as a cant word.] To entice by soft words; to flatter; to persuade by kind words.
 His bus'ness was to pump and wheedle,
 And men with their own keys unriddle,
 To make them to themselves give answers,
 For which they pay the necromancers. Hudibras.
 A fox flood licking of his lips at the cock, and wheedling him to get him down. L'Estrange.
 His fire,
 From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's schools
 To learn the unlucky art of wheedling fools. Dryden.
 He that first brought the word tham, or wheedle, in use, put together as he thought fit, ideas he made it stand for. Locke.
 A laughing, toying, wheedling, whim'ring the,
 Shall make him amble on a gossip's mellée. Rowe.
 The world has never been prepared for these trifles by practices, wheedled or troubled with exiles. Pope.

Johnny wheel'd, threaten'd, fawn'd,
Till Phillis all her trinkets pawn'd.
Swift.
WHEEL. n. f. [Dutch; wiel, Dutch; huel, Islandick.]
1. A circular body that turns round upon an axis.
Carnality within raises all the combustions without: this is the great wheel to which the clock owes its motion. Dec. P.
The gaping charioteer beneath the wheel.
Of his own car. Dryden.
Fortune fits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate so weighty, that it stops her wheel. Dryden.
Some watches are made with four wheels, others with five.
Locke.
A wheel-plough is one of the best and easiest draughts.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. A circular body.
Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it. Shakespeare's King Lear.
3. A carriage that runs upon wheels.
The star that rose at evening bright,
Towards heav'n's descent had stopp'd his westerling wheel.
Milton.
Through the proud direct he moves the public gaze,
The turning wheel before the palace stays.
4. An instrument on which criminals are tortured.
Let them pull all about mine ears, present me
Death on the wheel, or at wild horfes heels. Shakespeare.
Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound Upon a wheel of fire. Shakespeare's King Lear.
For all the torments of her wheel.
May you as many pleasures share. Waller.
His examination is like that which is made by the rack and wheel. Addison.
5. The instrument of spinning.
Verse sweetens care, however rude the sound,
All at her work the village maiden sings;
Nor as the turns the giddy wheel around,
Revolves the sad vicissitudes of things. Giffard.
6. Rotation; revolution.
Look not too long upon these turning wheels of vicissitude, lest we become giddy. Bacon.
According to the common vicissitude and wheel of things, the proud and the insolent, after long trampling upon others, come at length to be trampled upon themselves. South's Sermons.
7. A compass about; a tract approaching to circularity.
He throws his flight in many an airy wheel. Milton.
To WHEEL. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To move on wheels.
The moon carried about the earth always shews the same face to us, not once wheeling upon her own center. Bentley.
2. To revolve; to have a rotatory motion.
3. To turn; to have vicissitudes.
4. To fetch a compass.
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel.
Three or four miles about. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
You my Myrmidons,
Mark what I say, attend me where I wheel. Shakespeare.
Continually wheeling about, he kept them in so strait, that no man could, without great danger, go to water his horse. Knol.
He at hand provokes
His rage, and plies him with redoubled strokes;
Wheeler as he wheeled. Dryden.
Half these draw off, and coast the south
With strictest watch: these other wheel the north:
Our circuit meets full west; as flame they part,
Half wheeling to the shield, half to the spear.
Now smoothly steers through air his rapid flight,
Then wheeling down the steep of heav'n he flies
And draws a radiant circle o'er the skies.
6. To roll forward.
The course of justice wheel'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time. Shakespeare.
Thunder
Must wheel on the earth, devouring where it rolls. Milton.
To WHEEL. v. a. To put into a rotatory motion; to make to whirl round.
Heav'n rowl'd
Her motions, as the great first Mover's hand
First wheels their course. Milton's Paradise Lost.
WHEELBARROW. n. f. [wheel and barrow.] A carriage driving forward on one wheel.
Carry bottles in a wheelbarrow upon rough ground, but not filled full, but leave some air.
Pippins did in wheelbarrows abound.
WHEELER. n. f. [from wheel.] A maker of wheels.
After local names, the most have been derived from occupations, as Potter, Smith, Braiser, Wheeler, Wright. Camden.
WHEELWRIGHT. n. f. [wheel and wright.] A maker of wheel-carriages.
It is a tough wood, and all heart, being good for the wheelwrights. Mortimer.

W H E

WHEEL'LY. adj. [from wheel.] Circular; suitable to rotation.
Hinds exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheel'ly form
To the expected grinder.
To WHEEZE. v. n. [Dutch; wiezen, Saxon.] To breathe with noise.
Take their advantage when and how they list. Daniel.
At what particular time.
His feed, when is not set, shall bruise my head. Milton.
7. WHEN. adv. At the time when; what time.
[This when at Guyon saw, he 'gan enquire What meant that peace about that lady's throne. Fa. Queen.
When as sacred light began to dawn
In Eden on the humid flow'rs, that breath'd
Their morning incense, came the human pair. Milton.
WHENCE. adv. [Formed from where by the same analogy with
hence from here.]
1. From what place.
2. From what person.
3. Whence, feeble nature! shall we summon aid,
If by our pity and our pride betray'd?
4. From which premises.
5. Their practice was to look no farther before them than the next line; whence it will follow, that they can drive to no certain point. Dryden.
6. From which place or person.
7. Grateful to acknowledge whence his good defends. Milt.
8. For which cause.
Recent urine, distilled with a fixed alkali, is turned into an alkaline nature; whence alkaline salts, taken into a human body, have the power of turning its benign salts into fiery and volatile. Arbutnot on Aliments.
9. From what source.
I have shewn whence the understanding may get all the ideas
it has. Locke.
10. From WHENCE. A vitious mode of speech.
From whence he views, with his black-lidded eyes,
Whatso the heaven in his wide vault contains. Spenser.
To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion, and his titles, in a place
From whence himself does fly. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
11. Of WHENCE. Another barbarism.
He ask'd his guide,
What and of whence was he who press'd the hero's side?
Whence ever? Whence alkaline salts, taken into a human

3. Concerning which.
The greatness of all actions is measured by the worthiness of the subject from which they proceed, and the object where- about they are conversant: we must of necessity, in both respects, acknowledge that this present world affordeth not any thing comparable unto the duties of religion. Hooker.
WHEREAS. adv. [where and as.]
1. When on the contrary.
Are not those found to be the greatest zealots who are most notoriously ignorant? whereas true zeal should always begin with true knowledge. Spaul's Sermons.
The aliment of plants is nearly one uniform juice; whereas animals live upon very different sorts of substances. Arbutnot.
2. At which place. Obsolete.
They came to fiery flood of Phlegeton,
Whereas the damned ghosts in torments fry. Fa. Queen.
Prepare to ride unto St. Alban's,
Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk. Shak. H. VI.
3. The thing being so that. Always referred to something different.
Whereas we read of many of them so much commended, some for their mild and merciful disposition, some for their virtuous severity, some for integrity of life; all these were the fruits of true and infallible principles delivered unto us in the word of God. Hooker.
Whereas all bodies seem to work by the communication of their natures, and impressions of their motions; the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former,
and the species audible of the latter. Bacon.
Whereas wars are generally causes of poverty, the special nature of this war with Spain, if made by sea, is like to be a lucrative war. Bacon.
Whereas seeing requires light, a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark, immured, and by curve lines. Hobbes's Elements of Speech.
Whereas at first we had only three of these principles, their number is already swollen to five. Baker on Learning.
One imagines that the terrestrial matter, which is showered down with rain, enlarges the bulk of the earth: another fancies that the earth will ere long all be washed away by rains, and the waters of the ocean turned forth to overwhelm the dry land: whereas, by this distribution of matter, continual provision is every where made for the supply of bodies. Woodward.
WHEREAT. adv. [where and at.] At which.
This he thought would be the fittest resting place, 'till we might go further from his mother's fury; whereat he was no less angry, and aflamed, than desirous to obey Zelmane. Sidon.
This is in man's conversion unto God, the first stage whereat of his race towards heaven beginneth. Hooker.
Whereat I wak'd, and found
Before mine eyes all real, as the dream
Had lively shadow'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
WHEREBY. adv. [where and by.] By which.
But even that, you must confess, you have received of her, and so are rather gratefully to thank her, than to press any further, 'till you bring something of your own, whereby to claim it. Stiney.
Prevent those evils whereby the hearts of men are lost. Hooker.
You take my life.
When you do take the means whereby I live. Shakespeare.
If an enemy hath taken all that from a prince whereby he was a king, he may refresh himself by considering all that is left him, whereby he is a man. Taylor.
This is the most rational and most profitable way of learning languages, and whereby we may best hope to give account to God of our youth spent herein. Milton.
This delight they take in doing of mischief, whereby I mean the pleasure they take to put any thing in pain that is capable of it, is no other than a foreign and introduced disposition. Locke.
WHERE'VER. adv. [where and ever.] At whatsoever place.
Which to avenge on him they dearly vow'd,
Where'ever that on ground they mought him find. Fa. Queen.
Him serve, and fear!
Of other creatures, as him pleases best,
Where'ever plac'd, let him dispose. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Not only to the sons of Abraham's loins
Salvation shall be preach'd; but to the sons
Of Abraham's faith, where'ever through the world. Milton.
Where'er thy navy spreads her canvas wings,
Homage to thee, and peace to all the bringings. Waller.
The climate, about thirty degrees, may pass for the Hesperides of our age, whatever where'er the other was. Tongue.
He cannot but love virtue, where'er it is. F. Alibury.
Where'er he hath recoiled from the Mosaic account of the earth, he hath recoiled from nature and matter of fact. Woodward.
Where'er Shakespeare has invented, he is greatly below the novelists; since the incidents he has added are neither necessary nor probable. Shakespeare Illustrated.
WHEREFORE. adv. [where and for.]
1. For which reason.
The ox and the ass desire their food, neither purpose they unto themselves any end wherefore. Hooker.

It is sometimes an interrogative; as, which is the man.
Two fair twins.
The puzzled strangers which is which enquire.
Ticket.

Whichsoever, pron. [which and sever.] Whether one or the other.
Whichsoever of these he takes, and how often soever he doubles it, he finds that he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out.
Locke.

Whiff, n. f. [chwyth, Welsh.] A blast; a puff of wind.
Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword,
Th' unnerved father falls.
Shakespeare.
Hamlet.

Who,
If some unsway'd whiff betray the crime,

Dryden.

Three pipes after dinner he constantly smokes,
And seasons his whiff with impertinent jokes.
Nick pulled out a boatwain's whistle: upon the first whiff the tradesmen came jumping in.
Arbutnot.

To whiff, v. n. [from whiff.]
To move incontinently, as if driven by a puff of wind.
Nothing is more familiar than for a whiffing fog, that has not one grain of the sense of a man of honour, to play the hero.
L'Estrange.

A person of a whiffing and unsteady turn of mind cannot keep close to a point of controversy, but wanders from it perpetually.
Was our reason given, to be thus puff'd about,
Like a dry leaf, an idle straw, a feather,
The sport of every whiffing blast that blows?
Rousseau.

Whiffer, n. f. [from whiffle.]
1. One that blows strongly.
The beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys,
Whole shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea,
Which, like a mighty whiffer, fore the king,
Seems to prepare his way.
Shakespeare.
Henry V.

2. One of no consequence; one moved with a whiff or puff.
Our fine young ladies retain in their service a great number of supernumerary and insignificant fellows, which they use like whiffers, and commonly call shoeing-horns.
Speclator.

Every whiffer in a laced coat, who frequents the chocolate-house, shall talk of the constitution.
Swift.

Whig, n. f. [Dutch, Saxony, witten, Dutch.]
1. Whey.
2. The name of a faction.

The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year; and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the Summer to buy at Leith the fores that come from the north; and from a word, whiggans, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamors, and shorter the whiggs.
Now in that year before the news came down of duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching on the head of their parishes with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The marquis of Argyll and his party came and headed them, they being about six thousand. This was called the whiggamor's inroad; and ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called whiggs; and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of distinction.
Burnet.

Whoever has a true value for church and state, should avoid the extremes of whig for the sake of the former, and the extremes of tory on the account of the latter.
Swift.

Whiggish, adj. [from whig.] Relating to the whigs.
She'll prove herself a tory plain,
From principles the whigs maintain;
And, to defend the whiggish cause,
Her topics from the Tories draws.
Swift.

Whiggism, n. f. [from whig.] The notions of a whig.
I could quote passages from fifty pamphlets, wholly made up of whiggism and atheism.
Swift.

Whig, n. f. [whit, German; ppile, Saxon.] Time; space of time.

WHIM. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from a thing turning round; nor can I find any etymology more probable.] A freak; an odd fancy; a caprice; an irregular motion of desire.
All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female garment's pace. Swift.
TO WHIMPER. v. n. [whimern, German.] To cry without any long life.
The father by his authority should always stop this sort of crying, and silence their whimpering. Locke.
Laughing, toying, wheedling, whim'ring fits, Rowe.
Shall make him amble on a gossip's melfare.
In peals of thunder now the roars, and now
She gently whimpering like a lowing cow. Swift.
WHIMPER. adj. [I suppose from whimper.] This word seems to mean distorted with crying.
This whimpt, whiming, purling, wayward boy,
This signior Junio's giant dwarf, Dan Cupid,
Regent of love-himors, lord of folded arms,
Th' anointed sovereign of sighs and groans. Shakspeare.
WHIMSEY. n. f. [Only another form of the word whim.] A freak; a caprice; an odd fancy; a whim.

WHINE. n. f. [from the verb.] Plaintive noise; mean or affected complaint.

The favourable opinion of men comes oftentimes by a few demure looks and affected whines, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces. South.

Thy hateful whine of woe
Breaks in upon my sorrows, and distracts
My jarring senses with thy beggar's cry. Rowe's 7. Shore.

To WHINNY. v. n. [binnis, Lat. from the found.] To make a whinny like a horse or colt.

WHINYARD. n. f. [Jinnan and ape, to gain honour, Saxon;
shinner.] I know not whether this word was ever used fertiously, and therefore perhaps it might be denominated in contempt from whin, a tool to cut whins. A fword, in contempt.

He snatch'd his whinnyard up, that fled
When he was falling off his steed. Hudibras.

To WHIPP. v. n. [lycapan, Saxon; swippen, Dutch.]
1. To strike with any thing tough and flexible.

He took

3. To drive with lashes. This unbarbed fawncels, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war; these pigny arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shak. King John.
Let's whip these dragglers o'er the seas again;
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shak. ep. Richard III.
Since I 'twack geefe, play'd truant, and whips too, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten till later. Shak. ep. v.
If ordered every day to whip his top, so long as to make him weary, he will with for his book, if you promise it him as a reward of having whipp'd his top lustily quite out. Locke.
4. To correct with lashes.
I'll leave you to the hearing of the cause,
Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all. Shak. Lear.
Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Lett you should chance to whip your information. Shak. ep.
Hourly we fee some raw pin-feather'd thing
Attempt to mount, and fights and heres flings,
Who for false quantities was whipp'd at school
But other day, and breaking grammar-rule. Dryden.
How did he return this haughty brave,
Who whipp'd the winds, and made the sea his slave? Dryden.
This requires more than letting children at a task, and whipping them without any more ado, if it be not done to their

Oh chain me! whip me! let me be the scorn
Of fordid rables and insulting crowds!
Give me but life. Smith's Phœdra and Hippol.
Heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and are not able to bear the pain and indignity of whipping. Swift.
5. To lash with farcain.
They would whip me with their fine wits, 'till I was as creft fallen as a dried pear. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.
6. To inwrap.
Is fring hath both ends neatly lapt over with another about three inches in length, and so is firmly whipp'd about with finall gut, that it may the easier move in the edge of the rowler.
Maxon's Mech. Exerc.
To WHIP. v. a. To take any thing nimble.
In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries a rat!
And in this brainfiit apprehension kills
The unseen good old man. Shak. Hamlet.
She in a hurry whips up her darling under her arm. L'Estr.
Raise yourself upon your hinder legs, and then stretch out your head: I can easily whip up to your horns, and so out of the well. L'Estrange.
To WHIP. v. n. To dress Susan whips her linen from the rope, Whilst the first drizzling thaw's his born aloope. Swift.
Thus disposed, it lies ready for you to whip it out in a moment. Swift.
To WHIP. v. n. To move nimble.
Two friends travelling together met a bear upon the way;
The one whips up a tree, and the other throws himself flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.
The fimple 'quire made a sudden start to follow; but the justice of the quorum whipped between. Fatler.
WHIP. n. f. [hpeoc, Saxon.] An instrument of correction worked and plant.
There fat infernal pain,
And fast beside him fat tumultuous frife;
The one in hand an iron whip did train,
The other brandish'd a bloody knife. Fairy Queen.
Put in ev'ry honest hand a whip,
To lash the rascal naked through the world. Shak. Othello.
Love is merely madmen, and deserves as well a dark-hood, and a whip as madmen do. Shak. Lear.
A whip for the horse, a bridle for the ass. Prov. xxvi. 3.
High on her-head he rears two twisted fanks,
And chain the rattles, and her whip he shakes. Dryden.
In his right hand he holds the whip, with which he is supposed to drive the fanks of the fun. Addison.
Came whip and spur, and dash'd thro' thin and thick. Dunce.
WHIPCORD. n. f. [whip and cord.] Cord of which lashes are made. Rowley.
In Raphael's first works are many small foldings, often repeated, which look like to many whipp'd. Dryden.
WHIPGRAFTING. n. f. [In gardening.]
Whipgrafting is done two ways: first, cut off the head of the stock, and smooth it; then cut the graft from a knot or bud on one side flopping, about an inch and a half long, with a shoulder, but not deep, that it may rest on the top of the stock: the graft must be cut from the shouldering smooth and even, flopping by degrees, that the lower end be thin: place the shoulder on the head of the stock, and make

W H I

the length of the cut part of the graft, and with your knife cut away so much of the stock as the graft did cover, but not any of the wood of the stock: place both together, that the cut part of both may join, and the sap unite the one to the other; and bind them close together, and defend them from the rain with tempered clay or wax, as before. The other way of whitgrafting is, where the grafts and the stocks are of an equal size: the stock must be cut sloping upwards from one side to the other, and the graft after the same manner from the shoulder downwards, that the graft may exactly join with the stock in every part, and so bind, and clay or wax them as before.

Martinez's Husbandry.

WHIP/HAND. n. f. [whip and hand.] Advantage over.

The archangel, when discord was reſtitute and would not be drawn from her beloved monarchy with fair words, has the whip-band of her, and drags her out with many stripes. Dryden.

WHIP/PLASH. n. f. The lash or small end of a whip.

Have whipplash well knotted and cartpoe enough. Tassers.

WHIP/PERR. n. f. [from whip.] One who punishes with whipping.

Love is meerly a madnes, and deserves as well a dark-house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished is, that the whippers are in love too. Shakspeare.

WHIP/POST. n. f. [whip and post.] A pillar to which criminals are bound when they are lashed.

Could not the whippings prevail,

With all this rhet'rick, nor the jail,

To keep from flaying fcoage thy skin,

And anckle free from iron gait? Hudibras.

WHIP/LAW. n. f. [whip and law.]

The whiplaw is used by joiners to saw such great pieces of stuff that the hand saw will not easily reach through. Moxon.

WHIP/STAFF. n. f. [On shipboard.] A piece of wood fastened to the helm, which the fleetboard holds in his hand to move the helm and turn the ship. Balley.

WHIP/STER. n. f. [from whip.] A nimble fellow.

I am not vallant neither;

But ev'ry puny whipster gets my sword. Shakspeare, Othello.

Give that whipster but his errand,

He takes my lord obdij' justice' warrant. Prior.

WHIP/TS. for whiplashes.

Bravely number be stript,

Lesse worthe than theefe to be whipt. Tassers.

To WHIRL, v. a. [whirryan, Saxon; wirbelen, Dutch.] To turn round rapidly.

Five moons were seen to-night,

Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about

The other four in world's round motion. Shakspeare, King John.

My thoughts are whirled like a potters' wheel:

I know not where I am, nor what I do. Shakspeare, Henry VI.

He whirls his sword around without delay,

And hews through adverse foes an ample way. Dryden.

With his full force he whirl'd it first around;

But the soft yielding air receiv'd the wound. Dryden.

With what a whirling force his lance he tof'd!

Heav'n's what a spring was in his arm to throw! Dryden.

The Stygian flood,

Falling from on high, with bowelling found,

Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around. Addison.

With impetuous motion whirl'd apace,

This magick wheel still moves, yet keeps its place, Gravett.

They have ever been taught by their fables, that the sun, with all the planets and the fixed stars, are whirled round this little globe.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To WHIRL, v. n. To run round rapidly.

He, rap't with whirling wheels, inflames the skyen,

With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenſer.

As young triplings whip the top for sport

On the smooth pavement of an empty court,

The wooden engine flies and whirls about,

Admiring with clamorous of the beardless rout. Dryden.

She what he favours regards no more

Than the deaf rocks when the loud billows roar;

But whirl'd away, to thun his hateful light,

Hid in the forest. Dryden's En.

Wild and distracted with their fears,

They juddling plunge amid the founding deeps,

The flood away, the thruggling frigidon sweeps,

And men and arms, and horses whirling bears. Smith.

WHIRL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion; rapid circumvolution.

'Twere well your judgments but in plays did range;

But ev'n your follies and debauches change

With such a whirl, the poets of your age

Are tir'd, and cannot coere them on the stage. Dryden.

Wings rafe my feet; I'm pleas'd to mount on high,

Trace all the mazes of the liquid sky;

Their various turnings and their whirls declare,

And live in the vast regions of the air. Creech's Manilius.

W H I

Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years can waste. Cræch.
I have been watching what thoughts came up in the whirl of fancy, that were worth communicating. Pope.

How the car rattles, how its kindling wheels
Smoke in the whirl: the circling sand ascends,
And in the noble dust the chariot's loft. Smith.

2. Any thing moved with rapid rotation.
Though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not flow to hear,
Nor impotent to save. Addison's Spectator.

WHIRL. n. f. [whirl and bat.] Any thing moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by the poets for the ancient cestus.

At whirlbat he had slain many, and was now himself slain
by Pollux. L'Estrange.

The whirlbat's falling blow they nimbly shun,
And win the race ere they begin to run. Cræch's Manil.
The guardian angels of kingdoms he rejected, as Dares did the whirlbats of Eryx, when they were thrown before him by Entellus. Dryden.

The whirlbat and the rapid race shall be Reserv'd for Cæsar, and ordain'd by me. Dryden's Virgil.

WHIRLIGIG. n. f. [whirl and gig.] A toy which children spin round.

He found that marbles taught him percussion, and whirligigs
the axis in peritrochio. Arbutn. and Pope's Mart. Scribl.

That since they gave things their beginnings,
And set this whirligig a spinning. Prior.

WHIRLPOOL. n. f. [whirl and pool.] A place where the water moves circularly, and draws whatever comes within the circle towards its center; a vortex.

Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath led through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire. Shak. King Lear.

In the fathomless profound Down sunk they, like a falling stone,
By raging whirlpools overthrown. Sandys.

This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unfeign'd whirlpool draws you fall,
And in a moment sinks you. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Send forth, ye wife! send forth your lab'ring thought:
Let it return with empty notions fraught,
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke. Prior.

In the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms must be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there conspire one another into great solid bodies. Bentley.

WHIRLWIND. n. f. [whirlwind, German.] A stormy wind moving circularly.

In the very torrent and whirlwind of your passion, beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shaksp. Hamlet.

With whirlwinds from beneath the toils'd the ship,
And bare expos'd the bottom of the deep. Dryden's En.

WHIRRING. adj. A word formed in imitation of the sound expressed by it.

From the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings. Pope.

WHISK. n. f. [wischen, to wipe, German.]
1. A small becom, or brush.

The white of an egg, though in part transparent, yet, being long agitated with a whisk or spoon, loses its transparency. Boyle.

If you break any china with the top of the whisk on the mantle-tree, gather up the fragments. Swift.

2. A part of a woman's dress.
An easy means to prevent being one farthing the worse for the abatement of interest, is wearing a lawn whisk instead of a point de Venice. Child of Trade.

TO WHISK. v. a. [wischen, to wipe, German.]
1. To sweep with a small becom.

2. To move nimbly, as when one sweeps.
Cardan believ'd great states depend Upon the tip o' th' bear's tail's end;
That as the whisk'd it t'wards the sun,
Strow'd mighty empires up and down. Hudibras.

WHISKER. n. f. [whisk.] The hair growing on the cheek unshaven; the mustachio.

A sacrifice to fall of state,
Whose thread of life the fatal sisters
Did twist together with its whiskers. Hudibras.

Behold four kings in majesty rever'd,
With hoary whiskers and a forked beard.
A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison.

TO WHISPER. v. n. [whisperen, Dutch.] To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker.

He sometime with fearful countenance would desire the king to look to himself; for that all the court and city were full of whisperings and expectation of some sudden change. Sidney.

W H I

All that hate me whisper together against me. Pf. xli. 7.
In speech of man, the whispering or fusus, whether louder or softer, is an interior sound; but the speaking out is an exterior sound, and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing in whispering; but in speech you may. Bacon.

The king Accetis calls;
Then softly whisper'd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear. Pope.

It is as offensive to speak wit in a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it: he is displeased at both, because he is ignorant of what is said.

He comes and whispers in his ear. Pope.
The hollow whispering breeze, the pliant rills
Purle down amid the twisted roots. Thompson.

TO WHISPER. v. a.
1. To address in a low voice.

When they talk of him they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear. Shak. King John.

Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break. Shaksp.

He first whispers the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a card. Bacon's Natural History.

The steward whispered the young Templar, that's true to my knowledge. Taiter.

2. To utter in a low voice.
You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments. Shaksp.

They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitly withdrawing from the apostles, noise it about the city. Bent.

3. To prompt secretly.
Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 'twas indeed his colour, but he came To whisper Wolley, here makes visitation. Shak. H. VIII.

WHISPER. n. f. [whisper.] A low soft voice.
The extension is more in tones than in speech; therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.

Strictly observe the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will keep conscience quick and vigilant. Saunders.

Soft whispers through th' assembly went.
He uncall'd, his patron to controul,
Divulg'd the secret whispers of his soul. Dryden.

WHISPERER. n. f. [whisperer.]
1. One that speaks low.

2. A private talker.
Kings trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spies and good whisperers than good magistrates. Bacon.

WHIST. [This word is called by Skinner, who seldom errs, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used; but Shakspere uses it as a verb, and Addison as an adjective.]
1. Are silent.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Curt'sied when you have, and kiss,
The wild waves whist. Shakspere's Tempest.

2. Still; silent.
The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd,
Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton.

3. Be still.
WHIST. n. f. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence.

The clergyman used to play at whist and swobbers. Swift.

Whist awhile
Walks his grave round, beneath a cloud of smoke, Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe. Thompson's Autumn.

TO WHISTLE. v. n. [whystelen, Saxon; flatus, Latin.]
1. To form a kind of musical sound by an inarticulate modulation of the breath.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. Shaksp.

His big manly voice
Changing again toward childish treble pipes,
He whistles in his found. Shakspere.

Let one whistle at the end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike so sharp as you can scarce endure it. Bacon's Natural History.

While the plowman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.

Should Bertran found his trumpets,
And Torrismond but whistle through his fingers,
He draws his army off. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

The ploughman leaves the talk of day,
And trudging homeward whistles on the way. Gay.

2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.
3. To sound shrill.
Soft whispers run along the leafy woods, Dryden.
And mountains whistle to the murm'ring floods. Rhætus.

W H I

Rhætus from the hearth a burning brand
Selects, and whirling waves; 'till from his hand
The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the right
On fair Charaxus' temples, near the light. Dryden.

Then whistling past came on.
When winged deaths in whistling arrows fly,
Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day? Prior.

The wild winds whistle, and the billows roar,
The splitting raft the furious tempest tore. Pope.

TO WHISTLE. v. a. To call by a whistle.
Whistle them backwards and forwards, 'till he is weary.

He chanced to miss his dog: we stood still 'till he had whistled him up. Addison.

When simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May dance by dance be whistled off my hands! Pope.

WHISTLE. n. f. [whystele, Saxon.]
1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.

My fire in caves contrains the wind,
Can with a breath their clam'rous rage appease;
They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas. Dryden.

2. A sound made by a small wind instrument.
3. The mouth; the organ of whistling.

Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts. Walton's Angler.

4. A small wind instrument.
The masters and pilots were so astonished that they knew not how to direct; and if they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistle. Sidney.

Behold,
Upon the hempen tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus'd. Shaksp. Henry V.

Small whistles, or shepherds' oaten pipes, give a sound, because of their extreme slenderness, whereby the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon's Natural History.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she gingle'd, and the whistle blew. Pope.

5. The noise of winds.
6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.

Madam, here comes my lord.
—I have been worth the whistle. Shaksp. King Lear.

The knight, pursuing this epistle,
Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle. Hudibras.

WHISTLER. n. f. [whistler.] One who whistles.
The prize was a guinea to be conferred upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearest, and go through his time without laughing. Addison.

WHIT. n. f. [whit, a thing; aplit, any thing, Saxon.] A point; a jot.

We love, and are no whit regarded. Sidney.
The motive cause of doing it is not in ourselves, but carrieth us as if the wind should drive a feather in the air; we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven, Hooker.

Her sacred book with blood ywrit,
That none could read, except she did him teach;
She unto him disclosed every whit,
And heavenly documents thereof did preach. Fairy Queen.

Although the lord became the king's tenant, his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism. Davies on Ireland.

Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous, even proportion,
And the no whit encumber'd with her store. Milton.

In account of ancient times it ought to satisfy any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit near one another. Tillotson.

It is every whit as honourable to assist a good minister, as to oppose a bad one. Addison's Freeholder, N°. 48.

WHITELY. adj. [whit, Saxon; wit, Dutch.]
1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours; showy.

When the paper was held nearer to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approached nearest;
but when it was equally, or almost equally distant from all the colours, so that it might be equally illuminated by them all, it appeared whitely. Newton's Opticks.

Why round our coaches crowd the whitely-glow'd beaus?
Ulysses cut a piece from the chine of the whitely-tooth'd boar, round which there was much fat. Broome.

2. Having the colour of fear; pale.
My hand will
That multitudinous sea incarnadine, Making the green one red. —
—My hands are of your colour, but I shame
To wear a heart so whitely. Shaksp. Macbeth.

3. Having the colour appropriated to happiness and innocence.
Welcome, pure-eyed faith, whitely-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity. Milton.

W H I

Wert thou that sweet-smiling youth?
Or that crown'd matron, fage, whitely-robed truth? Milton.
Let this auspicious morning be express'd
With a whitely stone, distinguish'd from the rest;
Whitely as thy fame, and as thy honour clear,
And let new joys attend on thy new-added year. Dryden.

To faithful mirth be this whitely hour assign'd,
And sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Pope.

Peace o'er the world her olive-wand extend,
And whitely-rob'd innocence from heav'n descend. Pope.

Grey with age.
I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd,
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and whitely as this. Shakspere's K. Lear.

So minutes, hours, and days, weeks, months and years
Pass over, to the end they were created,
Would bring whitely hairs unto a quiet grave. Shakspere.

5. Pure; unblemish'd.
Unhappy Dryden! in all Charles's days,
Rare common only boasts unpotted lays:
And in our own, excuse some courtly stains,
No whitely page than Addison's remains. Pope.

WHITE. n. f.
1. Whiteness; any thing white; white colour.

A friend coming to visit me, I stopp'd him at the door, and before I told him what the colours were, or what I was doing, I asked him which of the two whites were the best, and wherein they differed? and after he had at that distance view'd them well, he answer'd, that they were both good whites, and that he could not say which was best, nor wherein their colours differ'd. Newton's Opticks.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attired in a robe of white. Shakspere.

2. The mark at which an arrow is shot.
If a mark be set up for an archer at a great distance, let him aim as exactly as he can, the least wind shall take his arrow, and divert it from the white. Dryden.

Remove him then, and all your plots fly sure Point blank, and level to the very white
Of your designs. Southern.

3. The albuginous part of eggs.
I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs
To apply to's bleeding face. Shakspere.

The strongest repellents are the whites of new-laid eggs beaten to a froth, with alum. Wise's Surgery.

What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to fashion a chick? Boyle.

The two in most regions represent the yolk and the membrane that lies next above it; so the exterior region of the earth is as the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. The white part of the eye.
Our general himself
Sanctifies himself with's hands,
And turns up the white o' th' eye to his discourse. Shaksp.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye, doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up as a hillock, above its convexity. Ray.

TO WHITE. v. a. [whiten, from the adjective.] To make white; to dealbate.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can whiten them. Mar. ix. 3.

Like unto whitened sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones. Matt. xxiii.

WHITELEAD. n. f.
Whitelead is made by taking sheet-lead, and having cut it into long and narrow slips, they make it up into rolls, but so that a small distance may remain between every spiral revolution. These rolls are put into earthen pots, so ordered that the lead may not sink down above half way, or some small matter more in them: these pots have each of them very sharp vinegar in the bottom, so full as almost to touch the lead. When the vinegar and lead have both been put into the pot, it is covered up close, and so left for a certain time; in which space the corrosive fumes of the vinegar will reduce the surface of the lead into a more white coal, which they separate by knocking it with a hammer. There are two sorts of this sold at the colour shops, the one called ceruse, which is the most pure part, and the other is called white lead. Quincy.

WHITELY. adj. [whitely.] Coming near to white.
A whitely wanton, with a velvet brow,
With two pitch-balls stuck in her face for eyes. Shaksp.

Now, governor, I see I must blush
Quite through this veil of night a whitely shame,
To think I could design to make thole tree,
Who were by nature slaves. Southern's Oronoko.

W H I

WHITMEAT. n. f. [white and meat.] Food made of milk. Much saltiness in whitmeat is ill for the stone. Tusser.
The Irish banished into the mountains, lived only upon whitmeats. Spenser.
To WHITEN. v. a. [from white.] To make white.
The smoke of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanies. Brown.
Flax, the soil and climate are proper for whitening, by the frequency of brooks, and also of winds. Temple.
Women of my complexion ought to be more modest, especially since our faces debar us from all artificial whitenings. Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 61.
Striking her cliff, the storm confirms her pow'r;
The waves but whiten her triumphant shore. Prior.
Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write;
In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the mint,
Like Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print. Pope.
To WHITEN. v. n. To grow white.
The bark expects its freight;
The loofen'd canvas trembles with the wind,
And the sea whitens with auspicious gales. Smith.
WHITENESS. n. f. [from white.] On whom makes anything white.
1. The state of being white; freedom from colour.
This doth lead me to her hand,
Of my first love the fatal band,
Where whiteness doth for ever sit;
Nature herself enamell'd it. Sidney, b. ii.
Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having disposed itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton's Opticks.
2. Paleness.
Thou tremblest, and the whiteness of thy cheek,
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Shakespeare.
3. Purity; cleanness.

Tell who loves who; what favours some partake,
And who is jilted. Dryden.
We are still as much at a loss, who civil power belongs to. Locke.
2. As who should say, elliptically for as one who should say.
Hope throws a generous contempt upon ill usage, and looks like a handsome defiance of a misfortune: as who should say, you are somewhat troublesome now, but I shall conquer you. Collier against Despair.
3. Who is the genitive of which, as well as of who, and is applied to things.
*Who*soever sins ye remit, they are remitted; and *who*soever sins ye retain, they are retained. John xx. 23.
The question *who*se solution I require,
Is what the sex of women most desire. Dryden.
Is there any other doctrine, *who*se followers are punished? Add.
4. It has sometimes a disjunctive sense.
There thou tell'st of kings, and who aspire;
Who fall, who rise, who triumphs, who do moan. Daniel.
WHOEVER. pron. [who and ever.] Any one, without limitation or exception.
Whoever doth to temperance apply
His steadfast life, and all his actions frame,
Trust me, shall find no greater enemy,
Than stubborn perturbation to the same. Fairy Queen.
I think myself beholden, whoever shews me my mistakes. Luci.

she in it. Sidney.

WIL

Religion is matter of our free choice; and if men will obstinately and wilfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy. Tillotson's Sermon.

2. By design; on purpose. That will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, through all difficulties. Hammond.

If you do not wilfully pass over any of your greater offences, but confess particularly, and repent seriously of them, God will more easily pass by your lesser infirmities. By Teyl.
This let him know;
Left, wilfully offending, he pretend Surprised.

WILFULNESS. n. f. [from wilful.] Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness. Milton.

So full of wilfulness and self-hiking is our nature, that without some definitive sentence, which being given, may stand, small hope there is that strifes will end. Hooker.

Thy causeless ruth repels;
He that his sorrow sought through wilfulness,
And his foe fetter'd would release again,
Deserves to taste his folly's fruit. Fairy Queen.

Never hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his feat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakespeare.

A stiff and stubborn obstinacy, is not so much firmness and resolution, as wilfulness. L'Estrange.

That is not hastily to be interpreted obstinacy or wilfulness, which is the natural product of their age. Locke.

WILLI. adv. [from wily.] By stratagem; fraudulently.

They did work willy, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors. Jes.

WILINESS. n. f. [from wily.] Cunning; guile.

The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor; let them be taken in the crafty wiling's that they have imagined. Plalm x. 2.

She supplied the weakness of force by wiling's of art, and advantage of treaty. Hou. Voc. Forest.

WILL. n. f. [pilla, Saxon; wille, Dutch.]

1. Choice; arbitrary determination. Will is the power, which the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa. Locke's Works.

Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards any end, is termed choice. Hooker, b. i.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?

If nature, then the may it mend with skill;
If will, then the at will may forego. Spenser.

These things have a shew of wisdom in will worship and humility. Col. ii. 23.

Will holds the sceptre in the soul,
And on the passions of the heart doth reign. Sir J. Dav.

The truth is, such a man understands by his will, and believes a thing true or false, merely as it agrees or disagrees with a violent inclination; and therefore, whilst that inclination lasts in its strength, he discovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.

2. Discretion; choice. Go then the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.

3. Command; direction. At his first sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the fourth wind bloweth. Ecclef. xliii. 16.

4. Disposition; inclination; desire. I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation. Your welcome; what's your will? Shakespeare.

He hath a will, he hath a power to perform. Drummond.

He said, and with so good a will to die,
Did to his breast the fatal point apply,
It found his heart. Dryden.

5. Power; government. Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies. Psal.

He had the will of his maid before he could go; he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained? Locke.

6. Divine determination. I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground. The wills above be done; but I would fain die a dry death. Shakespeare.

7. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects. Another branch of their revenue still Remains, beyond their boundless right to kill,
Their father yet alive, impower'd to make a will. Dryd.

Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only? Stephen's Sermons.

8. Good-will. Favour; kindness. I'll to the doctor, he hath my good-will,
And none but he to marry with Nan Page. Shakespeare.

9. Good-will. Right intention. Some preach Christ of envy, and some of good will. Phil. i. 15.

WIL

10. Ill-will. Malice; malignity.

11. [Contracted from William.] Will with a will. Jack with a lantern.

Will with the will of a round figure, in bigness like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle; at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed near at hand, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth; and are more frequent in places that are uncultivated, mouldy, marshy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying places, places of execution, dunghills. They commonly appear in summer, and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six feet from the ground. Now they dilate themselves, and now contract. Now they go on like waves, and rain as it were sparks of fire; but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them. Some that have been caught were observed to consist of a shining, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only shining; so that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from putrid plants or carcasses by the heat of the sun; which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Mitch.

Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns,
O'er hills and sinking bogs. Gay.

To WILL. v. a. [wilians, Gothic; pillan, Saxon; willen, Dutch.]

1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done. To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they see to be good. Hooker.

Let Richard be restored to his blood,
As will the rest; do wills Wincheiter. Shakespeare.

I speak not of God's determining his own will, but his pre-determining the acts of our will. There is as great difference betwixt these two, as betwixt my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Whoever wills the doing of a thing, if the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it; and whoever does not do that thing, which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.

A man that fits still, is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To be inclined or resolved to have. She's too rough for me; There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shakespeare.

3. To command; to direct. St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat on the Sunday, and to relieve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was will'd to love his enemies. Shakespeare.

Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armours all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakespeare.

He will'd him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should win. Kneller.

If they had any business, his Majesty will'd that they should attend. Cavendish.

'Tis your's, O queen! to will
The work, which duty binds me to fulfil. Dryden.

4. It has a loose and slight signification. Let the circumstances of life be what, or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement. Watts.

5. It is one of the signs of the future tense; of which it is difficult to show or limit the signification. I will come. I am determined to come; importing choice. Thou wilt come. It must be so that thou must come; importing necessity. Will thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice. He will come. He is resolved to come; or it must be that he must come, importing either choice or necessity. It will come. It must be so that it must come; importing necessity.

The plural follows the analogy of the singular. WILL and Will, among the English Saxons, as vide at this day among the Germans, signified many. So willen is the defender of many; willfred, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polymachus, Poly-crates, and Polyphilus. Gib. Cand.

WILLING. adj. [from will.] He willing to please one in authority, forced all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion. Wisd.

Some other able, and as willing, pays
The rigid satisfaction. Milton.

Can any man trust a better support under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him? Bentley.

WIL

2. Pleas'd; desirous. 3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing. As many as were willing hearted brought bracelets and ear-rings. Ex. xxxv. 22.

4. Ready; complying. Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with confidence, inferiors for confidence like the willing to obey. Hooker.

We've willing dames enough. Shakespeare.

He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet. Milt.

5. Chosen. They're held with his melodious harmony,
In willing chains, and sweet captivity. Milton.

6. Spontaneous. Forbear, if thou hast pity,
These groans proceed not from a senseless plant,
No spouts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryden.

7. Consenting. How can hearts not free serve willing. Milton.

WILLINGLY. adv. [from will.] 1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance. That preservation of peace and unity amongst Christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them. Hooker.

I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your matter wed me to. Shakespeare.

This ransom, if my whole inheritance
May compass, it shall willingly be paid. Milton.

2. By one's own desire. The condition of that people is not so much to be envied as some would willingly represent it. Addison.

WILLINGNESS. n. f. [from willing.] Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance. We praise the things we hear with much more willingness, than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. Ben. Johnson.

It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner, that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good as far as our power reacheth. Calamy.

Force never yet a generous mind did gain;
We yield on parley; but are form'd in vain;
Constrain't, in all things, makes the pleasure less,
Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden.

WILLOW. n. f. [pelie, Saxon; willow, Lat. salix, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers. It hath amantaceous flowers consisting of several stamina, which are collected into a spike but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Mil.

I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken, to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt. Shakespeare.

In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks. Shakespeare.

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake. Shakespeare.

When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marishes he resorts, obscur'd with reeds,
And hoary willows, which the moisture feeds. Sandys.

Afflicted Israel shall fit weeping down,
Their harps upon the neighbouring willows hung,
Nor joyous hymn encouraging their tongue. Prior.

WILLOWISH. adj. [from willow.] Resembling the colour of willow. Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour. Walters.

WILLOWWORT. n. f. A plant. The flower consists of several leaves, produced from the inclosures of the flower-cup, placed circularly, and expanded like a rose; from the centre of the flower-cup rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit of two cells, full of small seeds, wrapped up in the flower-cup. Miller.

WILY. adj. [from wile.] Cunning; sly; full of stratagem; fraudulent. They are so cautious and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and shifts. Spenser.

In the wily snake
Whatever flights, none would fusions mark
As from his wit, and native subtilty Proceeding. Milton's Par. Lost.

Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind, is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleas'd, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Cains. South's Sermon.

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound;
'Tis love laid the Dryden.

WIMBLE. n. f. [wimpe], old Dutch, from wimelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

WIN

At harvest-home, trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fears to broach:
He says the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirty servants but a smack. Dryd.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep-piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.

The trepan is like a wimble, used by joiners. Sharp.

WIMBLE. adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched:
Therewith afraid I ran away;
But he that erst seem'd but to play,
A shaft in earnest snatched. Spenser.

WIMPLE. n. f. [wimple, Fr.] A hood; a veil. It is printed in Spenser perhaps by mistake wimble.

So fair and fresh, as fairest flower in May,
For the had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow-like sad wimple thrown away. Fairy Q.

The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins. Isaiah ii. 22.

To WIMPLE. v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil. The same did hide, Under a veil that wimple was full low. Fairy Q.

WIN. Whether initial or final in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from pin, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people; from the Saxon pine, i. e. dear, beloved. In the name of places it implies a battle fought there. Gibbs.

To WIN. v. a. [Pret. won and won; part. pass. won, pinna, Saxon; winnen, Dutch.] 1. To gain by conquest. The town of Gaza where the enemy lay encamped, was not so strong but it might be won. Kneller.

His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win. Milton.

Follow cheerful to the trembling town;
Presb but an entrance, and presume it won. Dryden.

2. To gain the victory in a contest. Loyalty is still the same Whether it wins or lose the game:
True as the dial to the sun,
Altho' it be not shin'd upon. Hudibras, b. iii.

I five years at Tarentum wan
The questorship, and then our love began. Danbam.

Thy well breath'd horse
Impels the flying car and wins the course. Dryd.

3. To gain something withheld. Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way,
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray. Pope.

4. To obtain. Thy virtue wan me; with virtue preserve me. Dost thou love me? Keep me then still worthy to be beloved. Sidney.

When you see my son, tell him, that his sword can never win the honour that he loses. Shakespeare.

Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath fought to win me. Shak.

5. To gain by play. He had given a disagreeable vote in parliament, for which reason not a man would have so much correspondence with him as to win his money. Addison.

6. To gain by persuasion. They win great numbers to receive
With joy the tidings brought from heav'n. Milton.

7. To gain by courtship. She's beautiful; and therefore to be woo'd:
She is a woman, therefore to be won. Shakespeare.

That flood witness'd his inconstant flame,
When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame. Gay.

To WIN. v. u. 1. To gain the victory. Nor is it ought but just,
That he who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.

2. To gain influence or favour. You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your master, and not upon his affections only. Bacon.

You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others. Dryden.

Thy words like musick every breast controul;
Steal thro' the air, and win upon the soul. Pope.

3. To gain ground. The rabble will in time win upon power. Shakespeare.

4. To be conqueror or gainer at play. Charles I will play no more to night;
My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.
—Sir, I did never win of you before.
—But little, Charles;
Nor shall not when my fancy's on my play. Shak.

WIN

To WINCE. v. n. [guingis, Welsh.] To kick as impatient of a rider, or of pain.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word.
Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince.
The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his sense.

WINCH. n. f. [guincher, French, to twist.] A windlass; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.

Put a winch with the wheel.
To WINCH. v. a. [The same with wince, or perhaps from guincher, French, to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.

We who have free souls,
It touches not, let the gall'd jade wince;
Our withers are unwringing.
Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled!

Nor did I ever wince or grudge it.
This last allusion gall'd the panther more;
Yet seem'd she not to wince, tho' fiercely pain'd.
Their consciences are gall'd, and this makes them wince and fling, as if they had some mettle.

WYNCOPE. n. f.
There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the wyncope; which if it open in the morning, you may be sure, a fair day will follow.

WIND. n. f. [pinb, Saxon; wind, Dutch; gwynt, Welsh.]
1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other, with an impetus that is sensible to us, wherefore it was not ill called by the antients, a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of air.

The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken.

Love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides than the fun beams,
Driving back shadows over lowering hills.
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love;
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Falmouth lieth farther out in the trade way, and so offereth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth. Carew.
Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction, more in one place than another, by the fun-beams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions.

2. Direction of the blast from a particular point. As eastward;
westward.

I'll give thee a wind.
I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow;
All the quarters that they know
T' th' shipman's card.

3. Breath; power or act of respiration.
If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent.

His wind he never took whilst the cup was at his mouth,
but justly observ'd the rule of drinking with one breath.
The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in purly old men, seems to agree most with the orange.

It stop'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd.

4. Air caused by any action.
On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool.

In an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the found-board breathes.

5. Breath modulated by an instrument.
Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create found;
as in pipes and wind instruments.

Their instruments were various in their kind,
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind.

6. Air impregnated with scent.
A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,
By often shifting into distant grounds,
Till finding all his artifices vain,
To save his life, he leap'd into the main.

But there, alas! he could no safety find,
A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind.

7. Flatulence; windiness.
It turns
Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind.

WIN

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.
Think not with wind of airy threats to awe.

9. Down the WIND. To decay.
A man that had a great veneration for an image in his house, found that the more he prayed to it to prosper him in the world, the more he went down the wind till. L'Estrange.

10. To take or have the WIND. To gain or have the upper-hand.
Let a king in council beware how he opens his own inclinations too much, for else counsellors will but take the wind of him; instead of giving free counsel.

To WIND. v. a. [pinban, Sax. winden, Dutch. from the noun.]
1. To blow; to sound by inflation.

The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the cattle wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall.

Every Triton's horn is winding,
Welcome to the wat'ry plain.

Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.

2. To turn round; to twist.
Nero could touch and time the harp well; but in government sometimes he used to wind the pins too high, and sometimes let them down too low.

The figure of a sturdy woman done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloaths, in which act she wings out the water that made the fountain.

Wind the wood-bine round this arbour.
3. To regulate in action.

He vaulted with such ease into his feat,
As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.

In a commonwealth or realm,
The government is call'd the helm;
With which, like vessels under sail,
They're turn'd and winded by the tail.

4. To noie; to follow by scent.
To turn by shifts or expedients.
Whence turning of religion's made
The means to turn and wind a trade.

5. To introduce by insinuation.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all feaon'd offices, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical.

Edmund, seek him out, wind me into him, frame the business after your own wisdom.
Little arts and dexterities they have to wind in such things into discourse.

6. To change.
Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy.

7. To entwine; to enfold; to encircle.
Sleep thou and I will wind thee in my arms.
You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance.

Sometime am I
All wound with adders who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness.

8. To extricate.
When he found himself dangerously embarked he bethought himself of all possible ways to disentangle himself, and to wind himself out of the labyrinth he was in.

9. To WIND up. To bring to a small compass, as a bottom of thread.
Without solemnly winding up one argument, and intimating that he began another, he lets his thoughts, which were fully possessed of the matter, run in one continued strain.

10. To WIND up. [Used of a watch] To convolve the spring; to put in order to a certain end.
I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel.

Fate seem'd to wind him up for fourscore years,
Yet freshly ran he on, ten winters more:
Till like a clock worn out with calling time,
The wheels of weary life at last stood still.

Will not the author of the universe, having made an automaton, which can wind up itself, see whether it hath stood still, or gone true.

11. To WIND up. To raise by degrees.
There he did lo wind up to his purpose that they withdrew from the court.

When they could not coolly convince him, they railed, and called him an heretic: thus they wound up his temper to a pitch, and treacherously made use of that infirmity.

12. To WIND up. To strain a string by turning that on which it is rolled; to put in tune.
Hylas! why fit we mute,
Now that each bird faluteth the spring?

Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute,
Never canst thou want matter to sing.

WIN

Your lute may wind its strings but little higher
To tune their notes to that immortal quire.

13. To WIND up. To put in order for regular action: from a watch.
O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach of his abused nature;
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child changed father.

The weyrd sisters, hand in hand,
Potters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine:

Peace, the charm's wound up.

To WIND. v. n.
1. To turn; to change.
So swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast our fleetest wits a mile behind.

2. To turn; to be convolved.
Some plants can support themselves, and some others creep along the ground, or wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves.

Status of a solid newel spread only upon one small newel, as the several folds of fans spread about their center; but these, because they sometimes wind, and sometimes fly off from that winding, take more room up in the stair-case.

3. To move round.
If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still,
But wind about, till thou hast topp'd the hill.

4. To proceed in flexures.
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
As rob me of so rich a bottom here.

He winds with ease
Through the pure marble air his oblique way,
Amongst innumerable stars.

It was a rock winding with one ascent.
The silver Thames, her own domestick flood,
Shall bear her vessels, like a sweeping train;

And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
With longing eyes to meet her face again.

You that can search those many corner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds,
Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the palfies open, wind along.

Swift ascending from the azure wave,
He took the path that winded to the cave.

5. To be extricated; to be disentangled.
Long lab'ring underneath, ere they could wind
Out of such prison.

WINDBOUND. adj. [wind and bound.] Confined by contrary winds.
Yet not for this the windbound navy weigh'd;
Slack were their sails, and Neptune disobey'd.

When I bestir myself, it is high sea in his house; and when I sit still, his affairs forsooth are windbound.

Is it reasonable that our English fleet, which used to be the terror of the ocean, should be windbound?

WINDGEG. n. f. An egg not impregnated; an egg that does not contain the principles of life.
Sound eggs sink, and such as are added swim; as do also those termed hypenemia, or windgegg. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

WINDER. n. f. [from wind.]
1. An instrument or person by which any thing is turned round.

To keep troublesome servants out of the kitchen, leave the winder sticking on the jack to fall on their heads.

2. A plant that twists itself round others.
Plants that put forth their sap hastily, have their bodies not proportionable to their length; and therefore they are winders and creepers, as ivy and bryony.

WINDFALL. n. f. [wind and fall.] Fruit blown down from the tree.
Gather now, if ripe, your Winter fruits, as apples, to prevent their falling by the great winds; also gather your windfalls.

WINDFLOWER. n. f. The anemone. A flower.
WINDGALL. n. f. [wind and gall.]

Windgalls are soft, yielding, flatulent tumours or bladders, full of corrupt jelly, which grow upon each side of the settled joints, and are so painful in hot weather and hard ways, that they make a horse to halt. They are caused by violent straining, or by a horse's standing on a sloping floor, or from extreme labour and heat, or by blows.

His horse infected with the fashion, full of windgalls, and sped with favins.

WINDGUN. n. f. [wind and gun.] Gun which discharges the bullet by means of wind compressed.

The windgun is charged by the forcible compression of air, being injected through a syringe; the fire and distention of the imprisoned air forcing, by the help of little falls or flutes within, to stop and keep close the vents by which it was admitted.

WINDY. adj. [from wind.]
1. To furnish with windows.
Between these half columns above, the whole room was windward round.

With pert flat eyes she windward well its head,
A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead.

2. To place at a window.
Wouldst thou be wind-w'd in great Rome, and see Thy master thus with placht arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd
To penetrative thame?

Forc'd from windguns, lead itself can fly,
And wond'rous flugs cut swiftly through the sky.

WINDINESS. n. f. [from windy.]
1. Fulness of wind; flatulence.
A windiness and puffing up of your stomach after dinner,
and in the morning.

Orifices are prepared for the letting forth of the rarefied spirits in ructus, or windings, the common effects of all fermented liquors.

2. Tendency to generate wind.
Sena lofeth somewhat of its windings by decocting; and,
generally, subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation.

3. Tumour; puffiness.
From this his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling windings of much knowledge, issued this.

WINDING. n. f. [from wind.] Flexure; meander.
It was the pleasantest voyage in the world to follow the windings of this river Inn, through such a variety of pleasing scenes as the course of it naturally led us.

The ways of heav'n are dark and intricate;
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends.

WINDINGSHEET. n. f. [wind and sheet.] A sheet in which the dead are enwrapped.
These arms of mine shall be thy windingsheet.

My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre;
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.

The great windingsheet, that bury all things in oblivion, are deluges and earthquakes.

The chaste Penelope, having, as she thought, lost Ulysses at sea, employed her time in preparing a windingsheet for Laertes, the father of her husband.

WINDLASS. n. f. [wind and lace.]
1. A handle by which a rope or lace is wrapped together round a cylinder.

2. A handle by which any thing is turned.
Thus do we of wisdom and of reach,
With windlasses, and with assays of byas,
By indirections find directions out.

WINDLE. n. f. [from To wind.] A spindle.

WINDMILL. n. f. [wind and mill.] A mill turned by the wind.
We like Don Quixote do advance
Against a windmill our vain lance.

Such a falling chariot might be more conveniently framed with moveable sails, whose force may be impelled from their motion, equivalent to those in a windmill.

Windmills grind twice the quantity in an hour that water-mills do.

His fancy has made a giant of a windmill, and he's now engaging it.

WINDOW. n. f. [windue, Danish. Skinner thinks it originally wind-door.]
1. An aperture in a building by which air and light are intromitted.

Being one day at my window all alone,
Many strange things happened me to see.

A fair view her window yields,
The town, the river, and the fields.

He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light;
But ev'n that glimmering serv'd him to desirey
Th' inevitable charms of Emily.

When you leave the window open for air, leave books on the window-seat, that they may get air too.

2. The frame of glass or any other materials that covers the aperture.
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the window of mine eyes:

Sleeping or waking, oh defend me still!
In the sun's light, let into my darkened chamber through a small round hole in my window-shutter, at about ten or twelve feet from the window, I placed a lens.

Lines crossing each other.
The fav'rite, that just begins to prattle,
Is very humorfome, and makes great clutter,
'Till he has wind-wos on his bread and butter.

4. An aperture resembling a window.
To WINDOW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with windows.

Between these half columns above, the whole room was windward round.

With pert flat eyes she windward well its head,
A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead.

2. To place at a window.

3. To break into openings.
Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? Shak. King Lear.

WINDPIPE. n. f. [wind and pipe.] The passage for the breath;
the aspera arteria.

Let gallows gape for dogs, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shak. H. V.
The wezzon, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part intervient to voice and respiration: thereby the air descendeth unto the lungs, and is communicated unto the heart. Brown.

The quacks of government, who fat
At th' unregarded helm of state,
Consider d' timely how t' withdraw,
And save their windpipes from the law. Hudibras.
Because continual respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with annular cartilages. Ray.
The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia: these end in small air-bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbutnot on Aliments.

WINDWARD. adv. [from wind.] Towards the wind.

WINDY. adj. [from wind.]

1. Consisting of wind.
See what flowers arise,
Blown with the windy tempest of my soul
Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eyes and heart. Shak. H. V.
Subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation. Bacon.

2. Next the wind.
Lady, you have a merry heart.
— Yes, my lord, I thank it, poor fool,
It keeps on the windy side of care. Shak. H. V.

3. Empty; airy.
Why should calamity be full of words?
— Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Poor breathing orators of miseries. Shak. Rich. III.

What windy joy this day had I conceiv'd,
Hopeful of his deliver, which now proves Abortive as the first-born bloom of Spring, Nipt with the lagging rear of Winter's froit. Milton.
Looks, here's that windy applause, that poor transitory pleasure, for which I was dishonoured. South.

Of ev'ry nation, each illustrious name
Such toys as these have cheated into fame, Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain. Dryden's Juvenal.

4. Tempestuous; molested with wind.
On this windy sea of land the fiend
Walk'd up and down. Milton.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water; and when we see it windy and dusty, the wind does not make but only raise dust. South.

5. Puffy; flatulent.
In such a windy colic, water is the best remedy after a fur-feit of fruit. Arbutnot on Aliments.

WINE. n. f. [pin, Saxon; vinn, Dutch.]

1. The fermented juice of the grape.
The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shak. Macbeth.

Do not fall in love with me;
For I am falser than vows made in wine. Shak. H. V.

The increase of the vineyards for the wine-cellars. Chron.
Be not amongst wine-bibbers, amongst riotous eaters. Prov.
Thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat. Is.
They took old facks upon their asses, and wine-bottles old and rent, and bound up. Jes. ix. 4.

Where the wine-press is hard wrought, it yields a harsh wine that tastes of the grape-stone. Bacon.

His troops on my strong youth like torrents rush;
As in a wine-press, Judah's daughter crush'd. Sandys.

With large wine-offerings pour'd, and sacred feast. Milt.
Shall I, to please another wine-sprung mind,
Lose all mine own? God hath giv'n me a measure,
Short of his canne and body: must I find
A pain in that, wherein he finds a pleasure? Herbert.

The firstlings of the flock are doom'd to die;
Rich fragrant wines the cheering bowl supply. Pope.
If the hoghead falls short, the wine-cooper had not filled it in proper time. Swift's Directions to the Butler.

2. Preparations of vegetables by fermentations, called by the general name of wines, have quite different qualities from the plant; for no fruit, taken crude, has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbutnot.

WING. n. f. [gehping, Saxon; wing, Danish.]

1. The limb of a bird by which he flies.

As Venus' bird, the white swift lovely dove,
Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,
Finding the gripe of falcon fierce not fur. Sidney.

WIN

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shak. H. V.
An eagle stirreth up her nest, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, and beareth them on her wings. Deut. xxxii.

A spleenless wind fo stretch
Her wings to waft us, and fo urg'd our keel. Chapman.
The prince of augurs, Helitherses, rose;
Precient he view'd th' aerial tracts, and drew
A sure presage from ev'ry wing that flew. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A fan to winnow.

Wing, cartnave, and bushel, peck, ready at hand. Taffer.
3. Flight; passage by the wing.

Light thickens, and the crow
Makes wing to th' rooky wood:
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
While night's black agents to their prey do rouse. Shak.

Thy affections hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors. Shak. H. IV.

I have purged thee as love hath purged me, on the wing of all occasions. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.
While passion is upon the wing, and the man fully engaged in the prosecution of some unlawful object, no remedy or controul is to be expected from his reason. South.

You are too young your power to understand;
Lovers take wing upon the least command. Dryden.

And fraights, with in-born vigour, on the wings,
Like mounting larks, to the new morning sing. Dryden.

Then life is on the wing; then most the links,
When most the seems reviv'd. Smith's Phædra and Hippol.

4. The motive of flight.

Fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary:
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king. Shak. R. III.

5. The footmen were Germans, to whom were joined as wings certain companies of Italians. Knales's Hist. of the Turks.

The left wing put to flight,
The chiefs o'erborn, he rushes on the right. Dryden.

6. Any side piece.

The plough most proper for stiff black clays is long, large,
and broad, with a deep head and a square earth-board,
the coulter long and very little bending, with a very large wing.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

To WING. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with wings; to enable to fly.

The speed of gods
Time counts not, tho' with swiftest minutes wing'd. Milt.
Who knows but he, whose hand the lightning forms,
Who heaves old ocean, and who wings the storms,
Pours fierce ambition in a Caesar's mind,
Or turns young Ammon loose to scourge mankind. Pope.

2. To supply with side bodies.

We ourself will follow
In the main battle, which on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse. Shak. R. III.

To WING. v. n. To pass by flight.

I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there
My mate, that's never to be found again,
Lament 'till I am lost. Shak. H. V.

Warm'd with more particles of heav'nly flame,
He wing'd his upward flight, and fear'd to fame;
The rest remain'd below, a crowd without a name. Dryd.

Struck with the horror of the fight,
She turns her head, and wings her flight. Prior.

From the Meotis to the northern sea,
The goddess wings her desperate way. Prior.

WYNGED. adj. [from wing.] Furnished with wings; flying;
swift; rapid.

Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais: grant him there, and there being seen, Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Shak. H. V.

Hie, good fir Michael, bear this sealed brief
With winged haste to the lord marshal. Shak. H. IV.
And shall grace not find means, that finds her way,
The speediest of thy winged messengers,
To visit all thy creatures? Milton's Paradise Lost.

We can fear no force
But winged troops, or Pegasean horse. Waller.

The winged lion's not so fierce in fight,
As Lib'ti's hand presents him to our sight. Waller.

The cockney is surpris'd at many actions of the quadruped and winged animals in the fields. Watin.

WINGEDPEA'. n. f. [cibrus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, for the most part round and cylindrical, filled with roundish seeds.
Miller.

WINGSHELL. n. f. [wing and shell.]

The shell that covers the wing of insects.
The long-shelled goat-chaffer is above an inch long, and the wing-shells of themselves an inch, and half an inch broad; so deep as to come down below the belly on both sides. Grew.

Having wings. Shak. H. V.

They spring together out, and swiftly bear
The flying youth through clouds and yielding air;
With wingy speed out-strip the eastern wind,
And leave the breezes of the morn behind. Addison.

To WINK. v. n. [pinetcan, Saxon; wincken, Dutch.]

1. To shut the eyes.

Let's see thine eyes; wink now, now open them:
In my opinion, yet, thou see'st not well. Shak. Hen. VI.

They're fairies; he that speaks to them shall die:
I'll wink and couch; no man their sports must eye. Shak.

His false cunning
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,
And grew a twenty years removed thing.
While one would wink. Shak. Twelfth Night.

He with great imagination,
Proper to madmen, led his powers to death, Shak. H. IV.

And, winking, leap'd into destruction.
In despite of all this, he runs foolishly into his fin and ruin, merely because he winks hard, and rushes violently like a horse into the battle. Taylor.

The Scripture represents wicked men as without understanding; not that they are destitute of the natural faculty:
they are not blind, but they wink. Tillotson.

If any about them should make them think there is any difference between being in the dark and winking, get it out of their minds. Locke.

2. To hint, or direct by the motion of the eyelids.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you. Shak. H. V.

Send him a spoon when he wants a knife: wink at the footman to leave him without a plate. Swift.

3. To close and exclude the light.

While Hermes pip'd and sung, and told his tale,
The keeper's winking eyes began to fail,
And drowsily slumber on the lids to creep,
'Till all the watchman was at length asleep. Dryden.

When you shoot, and shut one eye,
You cannot think he would deny
To lend the other friendly aid,
Or wink, as coward, and afraid. Prior.

To connive; to seem not to see; to tolerate.

They be better content with one that will wink at their faults, than with him that will reprove them. Whitgift.

I, for winking at your disorders too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

Let not night see my black and deep desires;
The eye wink at the hand! Shak. Macbeth.

The king gave him great gifts, and winked at the great spoil of Bolworth-field, which came almost wholly to this man's hands. Bacon's Henry VII.

Let us not write at a loose rambling rate,
In hope the world will wink at all our faults. Roscommon.

Some faults of course with childhood end;
We therefore wink at wages, when they offend,
And spare the boy, in hopes the man may mend. Dryden.

Obstinacy cannot be winked at, but must be subdued. Locke.

Cato is stern, and awful as a god:
He knows not how to wink at human frailty,
Or pardon weakness that he never felt. Addison's Cato.

5. To be dim.

The fullen tyrant slept not all the night,
But, lonely walking by a winking light,
Sob'd, wept and groan'd, and beat his wither'd breast. Dry.

WINKINGLY. adv. [from winking.] With the eye almost closed.

If one beholdeth the light, he vieweth it winkingly, as those do that are purblind; but if any thing that is black, he looketh upon it with a broad and full eye. Peacham on Drawing.

WINNER. n. f. [from win.] One who wins.

A gamester, having lost all, borroweth of his next fellow-gamester somewhat to maintain play; which he setting unto him again, shortly thereby winneth all from the winner. Spenser.

Go together,
You precious winners all; your exultation Partake to every one. Shak. Winter's Tale.

Behrew the winners; for they play'd me false. Shak. H. V.

Whether the winner laughs or no, the loser will complain; and rather than quarrel with his own skill, will do it at the dice. Temple.

WINKING. participial adj. [from win.] Attractive; charming.

Yet let's fair,
Let's winning soft, let's amiably mild,
Than that smooth wat'ry image. Milton's Paradise Lost.

On her, as queen,
A pomp of winning graces wait'd still;
And from about her hot darts of desire
Into all eyes, to wish her still in sight. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Cato's soul
Shines out in every thing he acts or speaks,
While winning mildness and attractive smiles
Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
Soften the rigour of her father's virtues. Addison's Cato.

WINKING. n. f. [from win.] The fun won.

A simile in one of Congreve's prologues compares a writer to a buttering gamester, that flakes all his winnings upon every cast; so that if he loses the last throw, he is sure to be undone. Addison's Freetholder.

To WINNOW. v. a. [pinetcan, Saxon; evanno, Latin.]

1. To separate by means of the wind; to part the grain from the chaff.

Were our royal faith martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff;
And good from bad find no partition. Shak. H. IV.

In the fun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out and winnow it by day. Dryden's Virgil.

2. To fan; to beat as with wings.

Now on the polar winds, then with quick fan Winnow the buxom air. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To sift; to examine.

Winnow well this thought, and you shall find
'Tis light as chaff that flies before the wind. Dryden.

4. To separate; to part.

Bitter torture shall Winnow the truth from falsehood. Shak. Cymbeline.

To WINNOW. v. n. To part corn from chaff.

Eccles. v. 9.

WINNOWER. n. f. [from winnow.] He who winnows.

WINTER. n. f. [pinetcan, Saxon; winter, Danish, German, and Dutch.] The cold season of the year.

Though he were already steep'd into the winter of his age, he found himself warm in those desires, which were in his son far more excusable. Sidney.

After Summer evermore succeeds
The barren Winter with his nipping cold. Shak. Hen. VI.

Those flaws and flirts Inapostors brow to fear, would well become A woman's story at a Winter's fire. Shak. Macbeth.

He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana: a nun of Win-

WIT

Wit lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance, or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the fancy. Judgment, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another, ideas, wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude. Locke.

Could any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions, and assign such laws?
If the great mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

3. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy.
All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me. The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter, than what I invent, and is invented on me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare.

His works become the frippery of wit. John B. Johnson.
The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdu'd the world. Spratt.

Let a lord once but own the happy lines;
How the wit brightens, and the style refines! Pope.

4. A man of fancy.
Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe; and make themselves the common enemies of mankind. L'Estr.
A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy: even his fools were infected with the disease of their author. Dryden.

To tell them wou'd a hundred tongues require;
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire. Pope.

5. A man of genius.
Searching wits, of more mechanic parts;
Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts;
Those who to worth their bounty did extend,
And those who knew that bounty to commend. Dryden.

How vain that second life in others breath?
Th' estate which wits inherit after death;
Ease, health, and life, for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Dryden.

The great man's curse, without the gain endure;
Be envy'd, wretched; and be flatter'd, poor. Pope.

6. Sense; judgment.
Strong was their plot,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not;
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.

Come, leave the loathed stage,
And this more loathsome age;
Where pride and impudence in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit. John B. Johnson.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.

7. In the plural. Sound mind; intellect not crazed.
If our wits run the wild-goose chase, I have done: for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.

I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life:
The grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain?
Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating; he riseth early, and his wits are with him; but the pain of watching, and choler, and pangs of the belly, are with an unatiable man. Ecclus. xxxi. 20.

Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every finner does more extravagant things than any man that is crazed, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

No man in his wits can seriously think that his own soul hath existed from all eternity. Bentley.

8. Contrivance; stratagem; power of expedients.
How can it chafe but bring the fimple to their wits end? how can it chafe but vex and amaze them? Hooker.

I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me. Shakespeare.

Sleights from his wit and subtlety proceed. Milton.
The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue. L'Estrange.

God, when he gave me strength, to shew withal
How slight the gift was, hung it in my hair. Milton.

Christ had not only an infinite power to work miracles, but also an equal wisdom to know the just force and measure of every argument, to persuade, and withal to look through and through all the dark corners of the soul of man, and to discern what prevails upon them, and what does not. South.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past; 'tis done:
Perish this impious, this detected son!
Perish his fire, and perish I withal,
And let the house's heir, and the hop'd kingdom fall. Dryden.

2. It is sometimes used by writers where we now use with.
Time brings means to furnish him withal;
Let him but wait till' occasions as they fall. Daniel.

It is to know what God loves and delights in, and is pleased withal, and would have us do in order to our happiness. Tillotson.

We owe to christianity the discovery of the most perfect rule of life, that ever the world was acquainted withal. Tillotson.

To WITHDRAW. v. a. [with and draw; from wic, or wic, Saxon, against, and draw.]
1. To take back; to deprive of.
It is not possible they should observe the one, who from the other withdraw unnecessarily obedience. Hooker, b. v.

Impossible it is that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

2. To call away; to make to retire.
Nauicaia is withdrawn, and a whole nation introduced, for a more general praise of Ulysses. Broom.

To WITHDRAW. v. n. To retire; to retreat.
She from her husband soft withdrawn, Milton.

At this excess of courage all amaz'd,
The foremost of his foes a-while withdrawn. Talbot.

With such respect in enter'd Rome they gaz'd,
Who on high chairs the godlike fathers saw. Dryden.

Duunvir has pass'd the noon of life; but cannot withdraw from entertainments, which are pardonable only before that stage of our being. Talbot, No 54.

WITHDRAWING-ROOM. n. f. [withdraw and room.] Room behind another room for retirement. Talbot.

For an ordinary gentleman, a hall, a great parlour, with a withdrawing-room, with a kitchen, butteries, and other conveniences, is sufficient. Mortimer's Husbandry.

WIT

WITHE. n. f.
1. A willow twig.
An Irish rebel put up a petition, that he might be hanged in a with, and not a halter, because it had been so used with former rebels. Bacon.

2. A band, properly a band of twigs; [prede signifies a band.]
These cords and withs will hold men's consciences, when force attends and twists them. K. Charles.

Birch is of use for ox-yokes, hoops, scerews, withs for faggots. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To WITHER. v. n. [wep, Saxon, dry, faded.]
1. To fade; to grow feeble; to dry up.
That which is of God we defend, to the uttermost of that ability which he hath given: that which is otherwise, let it wither even in the root from whence it hath sprung. Hooker.

When I have pluck'd thy rose,
I cannot give it vital growth again;
It needs must wither. Shakespeare. Othello.

It shall wither in all the leaves of her spring. Ezek. xvi. 9.
The foul may sooner leave off to subside, than to love; and like the vine, it withers and dies, if it has nothing to embrace. South's Sermons.

2. To waste, or pine away.
Are there so many left of your own family, that you should desire wholly to reduce it, by suffering the last branch of it to wither away before its time. Temple.

3. To lose, or want animal moisture.
Vain men, how vanishing a bliss we crave,
Now warm in love, now with'ring in the grave. Dryden.

To WITHER. v. a.
1. To make to fade.
The sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth. Ja. i. 11.

2. To make to shrink, decay, or wrinkle, for want of animal moisture.
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale her infinite variety. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up. Shakespeare.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth, Shakespeare's Macbeth.

And yet are on't? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change
To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton.

In Spain our springs, like old men's children be,
Decay'd and wither'd, from their infancy;
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth;
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

WITHEREDNESS. n. f. [from wither'd.] The state of being wither'd; marcidness.
Water them as soon as fet, till they have recovered their witheredness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

WITHERING. n. f. A piece of iron, which is laid under a saddle, about four fingers above the horse's withers, to keep the two pieces of wood tight, that form the bow. Farrier's Dict.

WITHERS. n. f. Is the joining of the shoulder-bones at the bottom of the neck and mane, towards the upper part of the shoulder. Farrier's Dict.

Let the gall'd beast wince;
We are unwring in the withers. Shakespeare.

Rather than let your master take long journeys, contrive that the saddle may pinch the beast in his withers. Swift.

WITHERING. n. f. Withering sometimes is caused by a bite of a horse, or by a saddle being unfit, especially when the bows are too wide; for when they are so, they bruise the flesh against the spines of the second and third vertebrae of the back, which forms that prominence that rises above their shoulders. Farrier's Dict.

To WITHHOLD. v. a. [with and hold.] Withheld, or withheld, pret. and part.
1. To refrain; to keep from action; to hold back.
That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger could cause at first to withhold itself, so neither have any practices, so many, so bloody, following since, been ever able to make weary. Hooker, b. iv.

Sith mine he is, or free or bound;
Withhold, O sovereign prince, your hasty hand. Spenser.

From knitting league with him. Spenser.

The prince
Would fain have come with me to meet your grace;
And by his mother was perforce withheld. Shakespeare.

Be careful to withhold
Your talons from the wretched and the bold;
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;
For though your violence should leave them bare, Dryden.

Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain.
Volition is an act of the mind, knowingly exerting that dominion it takes itself to have over any part of man, by employing it in, or withholding it from any particular action. Locke.

2. To keep back; to refuse.

What difficulties there are, which as yet withhold our assent, till we be further and better satisfied, I hope no indifferent amongst them will scorn or refuse to hear. Hooker.

Soon as Titan 'gan his head exalt,
And soon again as he his light withheld,
Their wicked engines they against it bent. Fairy Queen.

WITHHOLDEN. part. pass. of withhold.
The word keep back, sheweth, that it was a thing formerly due unto God; for we cannot say that any thing is kept back, or withheld, that was not due before. Spelman.

WITHHOLDER. n. f. [from withhold] e who withholds.
WITHIN. prep. [German, Saxon.]

1. In the inner part of.
Who then shall blame
His peffer'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there. Shaksp. Macbeth.

By this means, not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation of men will be bred up, within ourselves, not perverted by any other hopes. Sprat.

'Till this be cur'd by religion, it is as impossible for a man to be happy, that is, pleased and contented within himself, as it is for a sick man to be at ease. Tillotson.

The river is afterwards wholly lost within the waters of the lake, that one discovers nothing like a stream, till within about a quarter of a mile from Geneva. Addison.

2. In the compass of; not beyond; used both of place and time.
Next day we saw, within a kenning before us, thick clouds, which put us in hope of land. Bacon.

Untainted, unexamined, free at liberty. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Within these three hours, Tullus, Alone I fought in your Coriol walls,
And made what work I pleas'd. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

4. Into the reach of.
When on the brink the foaming boar I met,
The desolate savage rush'd within my force,
And bore me headlong with him down the rock. Ottway.

5. In the reach of.
Secure of outward force, within himself
The danger lies, yet lies within his pow'r;
Against his will he can receive no harm. Milton.

I have suffer'd in your woe;
Nor shall be wanting ought within my pow'r
For your relief. Dryden.

Though Aurengzebe return a conqueror,
Both he and she are still within my power. Dryden.

6. Into the heart or confidence of.
When by such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drive him on from one lewdness to another, no wonder if they rejoice to see him guilty of all villainy. South.

7. Not exceeding.
Be inform'd how much your husband's revenue amounts to,
and be so good a computer, as to keep within it. Swift.

8. In the inclosure of.
No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;
But poplar wreaths around his temples spread. Addison.

Sedentary and within-door arts, and delicate manufactures, that require rather the finger than the arm, have a contrariety to a military disposition. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

- WITHIN. adv.
1. In the inner parts; inwardly; internally.
This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design. Within rests more of fear,
More dread of sad event yet undecy'd. Daniel.

Death thou hast seen
In his first shape on man; but many shapes
Of death, and many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave; all dismal! yet to sense
More terrible at th' entrance, than within. Milton.

that feed in the valleys. Bacon.

Infallibility and inerrableness are assumed and inculcated by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to hold it on. Him.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time, when the mind was without those principles; and then they will not be innate, but be derived from some other original. Locke.

4. Beyond; not within the compass of.
Eternity, before the world and after, is without our reach;
but that little spot of ground that lies betwixt those two great oceans, this we are to cultivate. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

5. In the negation, or omission of.
Without the separation of the two monarchies, the most advantageous terms from the French, must end in our destruction. Addison.

6. Not by; not by the use of; not by the help of.
Excess of diet in costly meats and drinks fetched from beyond the seas, would be avoided: wife men will do it without a law; I would there might be a law to refrain fools. Bacon.

7. On the outside of.
Without the gate
Some drive the cars, and some the courtesies rein. Dryden.

Through goodly mixture of complexion's dew.
TO WITHSTAND. v. a. [with and stand.] To gainstand; to oppose; to resist.

The violence of sorrow is not at the first, to be striven withal, being like a mighty beast, sooner tamed with following, than overthrown by withstanding. Sidney.

The wonderful zeal and fervour wherewith ye have withstood the received orders of this church, was the first thing which caused me to enter unto consideration, whether ev'ry christian man fearing God, stand bound to join with you. Hooker.

It is our frailty that in many things we all do amiss; but a virtue that we would do amiss in nothing, and a testimony of that virtue, that when we pray that what occasion of sin we do offer itself, we may be strengthened from above to withstand it. Hooker, l. v.

WIT

They soon set sail; nor now the fates withstand;
Their forces trusted with a foreign hand. Dryden.

When Elymas withstood Paul and Barnabas, and when Paul says of Alexander, he hath greatly withstood our words, do we think the withstanding there was without speaking? Atterb.

WITHSTANDER. n. f. [from withstand.] An opponent; resisting power.

War may be defined the exercise of violence under sove-

WIT. n. f. [from wit.] Willow. A tree.
WITLESS. adj. [from wit.] Wanting understanding.

Why then should witless man so much misween
That nothing is but that which he hath seen? Fairy Queen.

I have ever lov'd the life remov'd;
And held in idle price to haunt assemblies,
Where youth, and cost, and witless brav'ry keeps. Shaksp.

So't pleas'd my destiny,
Guilty of my sin of going, to think me
As vain, as witless, and as false as they
Which dwell in court. Donne.

He kept us slaves, by which we fitly prove That witless pity breedeth fruitless love. Fairfax.

The apple's outward form
Delectable, the witless swain beguiles,
'Till with a withen mouth and spattering noise
He tastes the bitter morsel and rejects. Philips.

WITTING. n. f. [Diminutive of wit.] A pretender to wit;
a man of petty smartness.

You have taken off the senseless ridicule, which for many years the witlings of the town have turned upon their fathers and mothers. Addison's Spectator.

Patience, good lady; wizards know their times. Shakespeare.
He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherited should be. Shakespeare's Richard III.
That damn'd wizard, hid in fly disguise,
For so by certain signs I knew, had met Already, ere my best speed could prevent
The aidless innocent lady his will'd prey. Milton.
The prophecies of wizards old
Increas'd her terror, and her fall foretold.
The wily wizard must be caught.
For, unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for nought. Dryden.
WO. n. f. [Sax. wo.] Grief; sorrow; misery; calamity.
The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenuous feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be fever'd from my griefs;
And woe by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.
So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe weary'd tongue is still.
Her rash hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, Eve pluck'd, she eat:
Earth felt the wound; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton's Paradise Lost.
O'er dreary waffles, they weep each other's woe. Pope.
2. It is often used in denunciations, wo be; or in exclamations of sorrow wo is; anciently wo wurd; pa puny, Sax. wo is me, do try what love can do. Sidney.
Wo is my heart;
That poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whole rags sham'd gilded arms; whole naked breast
Stept before shields of proof, cannot be found. Shakespeare.
Many of our princes, woe the while!
Lie down'd and soak'd in mercenary blood. Shakespeare.
Happy are they which have been my friends; and woe to my lord chief-justice. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
How ye, wo wurd the day. Ezek. xxx. 2.
Wo be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves. Ez.
Wo is me for my hurt, my wound is grievous. Jer. x. 10.
If God be such a being as I have described, wo to the world if it were without him: this would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind than the extinguishing of the sun. Tillotson.
Woe to the vanquish'd, woe!
Dryden's Albion.
3. A denunciation of calamity; a curse.
Can there be a wo or curse in all the stores of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice; of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one universal confusion. South's Sermons.
4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive, and in exclamation an adjective, as particularly in the following lines.
We are we, fit! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

WOODLARK. n. f. A melodious sort of wild lark.
WOODLOUSE. n. f. [wood and louse.] An insect.

The milleps or woodlouse is a small insect of an oblong figure, about half an inch in length, and a fifth of an inch in breadth; of a dark blueish or livid grey colour, and having its back convex or rounded: notwithstanding the appellation of milleps, it has only fourteen pair of short legs; it is a very swift runner, but it can occasionally roll itself up into the form of a ball, which it frequently does, and suffers itself to be taken. They are found in great plenty under old logs of wood or large stones, or between the bark and wood of decayed trees. Millepedes are aperiens, attenuant, and detergent; and the best way of taking them is swallowing them alive, which is easily and conveniently done; and they are immediately destroyed on falling into the stomach.

Wrap thyself up like a woodlouse, and dream revenge.

There is an insect they call a woodlouse,
That folds up itself in itself, for a house,
As round as a ball, without head, without tail, minx's token; and I must take out the work? There, give it your hobbyhorse: wherefore you had it, I'll take out no work out. Shakespeare, Otello.

5. Any fabric or compages of art.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.
6. Action; feat; deed.
The instrumentalness of riches to works of charity, have rendered it necessary in every Christian commonwealth by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.
As to the composition or dissolution of mixt bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intire application of the agents, water hath the principality and excels over earth. Digby.
Nothing lovelier can be found in woman,
Than good works in her husband to promote.
While as the works of bloody Mars employ'd,
The wanton youth inglorious peace enjoy'd. Pope.
7. Any thing made.
Where is that holy fire, which verse is said
To have? Is that enchanting force decay'd?
Verse, that draws nature's works from nature's law,
Thee, her best work, to her work cannot draw. Donne.
O fairest of creation! last and best
Of all God's works! creature, in whom excels
Whatever can to fight or thought be form'd;
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet,
How art thou lost! Milton's Paradise Lost.
8. Management; treatment.
Let him alone; I'll go another way to work with him. Shak.
9. To set on WORK. To employ; to engage.
It setteth those wits on work in better things, which would be else employed in worse. Hooker.
WORKER. n. f. [from work.] One that works.
Ye fair nymphs, which oftentimes have loved
The cruel worker of your kindly smarts, Prepare yourselves, and open wide your hearts. Spenser.

WORKHOUSE. n. f. [from work and house.]
WORKINGHOUSE. n. f. [from work and house.]
1. A place in which any manufacture is carried on.
The quick forge and workinghouse of thought. Shak. H.V.
Protopogen had his workinghouse in a garden out of town, where he was daily finishing those pieces he begun. Dryden.
2. A place where idlers and vagabonds are condemned to labour.
Hast thou suffered at any time by vagabonds and pilferers?
Esteem and promote those useful charities which remove such pests into prisons and workinghouses. Atterbury.
WORKINGDAY. n. f. [work and day.] Day on which labour is permitted; not the sabbath.
How full of briars is this workingday world? Shakespeare.
Will you have me, lady?
—No, my lord, unless I might have another for working- days; your grace is too costly to wear every day. Shakespeare.
WORKMAN. n. f. [work and man.] An artificer; a maker of any thing.
When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness. Shakespeare.
If prudence works, who is a more cunning workman? Wisd.
There was no other cause preceding than his own will, no other matter than his own power, no other work- man than his own word, and no other consideration than his own infinite goodness. Raleigh.
They have inscribed the pedestal, to shew their value for the workman. Addison on Italy.
WORKMANLY. adj. [from workman.] Skilful; well performed; workmanlike.
WORKMANLY. adv. Skilfully; in a manner becoming a workman.
In having but fortie foot workmanly dight,
Take fasson en ough for a lord and a knight. Tusser.
We will fetch thee straight
Daphne roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds,
And at that fight shall sad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn. Shakespeare.
WORKMANSHIP. n. f. [from workman.]
1. Manufacture; something made by any one.
Nor any skill'd in workmanship embold'd,
Nor any skill'd in loops of ring ring fine,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.
By how much Adam exceeded all men in perfection, by being the immediate workmanship of God, by so much did that chosen garden exceed all parts of the world. Raleigh.
He moulded him to his own idea, delighting in the choice of the materials; and afterwards, as great architects use to do, in the workmanship of his regal hand. Watson.
What more reasonable than to think, that if we be God's workmanship, he shall set this mark of himself upon all reasonable creatures?
2. The skill of a worker; the degree of skill discovered in any manufacture.
The Tritonian goddess having heard
Her blazed fame, which all the world had fill'd,
Came down to prove the truth, and due reward
For her praise-worthy workmanship to yield. Spenser.
3. The art of working.
If there were no metals, 'tis a mystery to me how Tubal-cain could ever have taught the workmanship and use of them. Woodward's Natural History.
WORKMASTER. n. f. [work and master.] The performer of any work.
What time this world's great workmaster did cast
To make all things; such as we now behold,
It seems that he before his eyes had plac'd
A goodly pattern, to whose perfect mould
He fashion'd them so comely. Spenser.
Every carpenter and workmaster that laboureth. Ecd. xxxviii.
Desire, which tends to know
The works of God, thereby to glorify
The great workmaster, leads to no excess. Milt. Parad. Lost.
WORKWOMAN. n. f. [work and woman.]
1. A woman skilled in needle-work.
The most fine-finger'd workwoman on ground,
Arachne, by his means was vanquished. Spenser.
2. A woman that works for hire.
WORKYDAY. n. f. [Corrupted from workingday.] The day not the sabbath.
Tell her but a workyday fortune. Shakespeare.
The other days, and thou
Make up one man; whose face thou art,
The workdays are the back part;
The burden of the week lies there. Herbert.

WORLD. n. f. [ponis, Saxon; wereld, Dutch.]
1. System of beings.
2. Begotten before all worlds.
God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his son, by whom he made the world. Hebr. i. 2.
Know how this world
Of heav'n and earth conspicuous first began. Milton.
3. The earth; the terraqueous globe.
He the world
Built on circumfluous waters. Milton's Paradise Lost.
4. Present state of existence.
I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good sometime Accounted dangerous folly. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
I was not come into the world then. L'Estrange.
He wittingly brought evil into the world. More.
Christian fortitude consists in suffering for the love of God, whatever hardships can befall in the world. Dryden.
5. A secular life.
Happy is the that from the world retires,
And carries with her what the world admires.
Thrice happy she, whose young thoughts fixt above,
While she is lovely, does to heav'n make love;
I need not urge your promise, ere you find An entrance here, to leave the world behind? Waller.
By the world, we sometimes understand the things of this world; the variety of pleasures and interests which steal away our affections from God. Sometimes we are to understand the men of the world, with whose solicitations we are so apt to comply. Rogers's Sermons.
6. Public life.
Hence banished, is banish'd from the world;
And world exil'd is death. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
7. Business of life; trouble of life.
Here I'll set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of man's supercilious stars
From this world-worned flesh. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
8. Great multitude.
You a world of curses undergo,
Being the agents, or base second means. Shakespeare.
Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company; Shakespeare.
For you in my respect are all the world.

From thy corporeal prison freed,
Soon hast thou reach'd the goal with mended pace;
A world of woes dispatch'd in little space. Dryden.
Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.
9. Mankind; an hyperbolical expression for many.
This hath bred high terms of separation between such and the rest of the world, whereby the one sort are named the brethren, the golly; the other worldlings, time-servers, pleasers of men more than of God. Hooker.
'Tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Why dost thou shew me thus to th' world?
Bear me to prison. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
He was willing to declare to all the world, that, as he had been brought up in that religion established in the church of England, so he could maintain the same by unanswerable

WORLDLY. adj. [from world.]
1. Secular; relating to this life, in contradistinction to the life to come.
He is divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly suits would he be moved,
To draw him from his holy exercise. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command? Shakespeare.
Tell me, ye toad-swol'n, flinty Pharaoh's, tell;
Can worldly pleasures equal pains of hell? N. Richards.
The fortitude of a christian consists in patience, not in enterprizes which the poets call heroic, and which are commonly the effects of interest, pride, and worldly honour. Dryden.
Compare the happiness of men and beasts no farther than it results from worldly advantages. Atterbury.
2. Bent upon this world; not attentive to a future state.
They'll practise how to live secure,
Will leave them to enjoy. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
3. Human; common; belonging to the world.
Many years it hath continued, standing by no other worldly mean, but that one only hand which erected it. Hooker.
Times and places are approved witnesses of worldly actions. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
WORLDLY. adv. [from world.] With relation to the present life.
It is a token of a worldly wife man, not to contend in vain against the nature of times wherein he liveth. Raleigh.
Subverting worldly strong and worldly wile,
By simply meek. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
'I his cannot be done, if my will be worldly, or voluptuously

 6. Something tormenting.
 The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul. Shaksp.
 The chains of darkness, and th' undying worm. Milton.
 7. Any thing vermiculated, or turned round; any thing spiral.
 The threads of screws, when bigger than can be made in screw-plates, are called worms. The length of a worm begins at the one end of the spindle, and ends at the other; the breadth of the worm is contained between any two grooves on the spindle; the depth of the worm is cut into the diameter of the spindle, viz. the depth between the outside of the worms, and the bottom of the groove.
 To WORM. v. n. [from the noun.] To work slowly, secretly, and gradually.
 When debates and fretting jealousy,
 Did worm and work within you more and more,
 Your colour faded. Herbert.
 To WORM. v. a.
 1. To drive by flow and secret means.
 They find themselves worm'd out of all power, by a new spawn of independents, sprung from your own bowels. Swift.
 2. To deprive a dog of something, nobody knows what, under his tongue, which is said to prevent him, nobody knows why, from running mad.
 Every one that keepeth a dog, should have him worm'd. Mort.
 WORMEATEN. adj. [worm and eaten.]
 1. Gnawed by worms.
 For his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a wormeaten nut. Shaksp. Lear.
 2. Old; worthless.
 His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls,
 And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
 Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls.
 That were all wormeaten, and full of canker holes. Spenser.
 Things among the Greeks, which antiquity had worn out of knowledge, were called ogygia, which we call wormeaten, or of defaced date. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Thine's like wormeaten trunks cloath'd in seal's skin;
 Or grave, that's dust without, and sink within. Donne.
 WORMWOOD. n. f. [from its virtue to kill worms in the body.]
 Wormwood hath an indeterminate stalk, branching out into many small shoots, with spikes of naked flowers hanging downward; the leaves are hoary and bitter. Of this plant there are thirty-two species, one of which, the common wormwood, grows in the roads; but it is also planted in gardens for common use. Great variety of sea wormwoods are found in the salt marshes of England, and sold in the markets for the true Roman wormwood, though they differ greatly. Mill.
 She was wear'd; I had then laid Wormwood to my dug. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
 Pitted Cacoecyia must be corrected by bitters, as wormwood wine. Pleyer on the Humours.
 I ask whether one be not invincibly conscious to himself of a different perception, when he actually tastes wormwood, or only thinks on that favour. Locke.
 WORMY. adj. [from worm.] Full of worms.
 Spirits that in crossways and floods have burial,
 Already to their wormy beds are gone. Shaksp. Lear.
 Yet can I not persuade me thou art dead,
 Or that thy corse corrupts in earth's dark womb,
 Or that thy beauties lie in wormy bed. Milton.
 WORN, part. pass. of wear.
 His is a maiden shield,
 Guiltless of fight; mine batter'd, heav'd and bor'd.
 Worn out of service, must forsake his lord. Dryden.
 What I now offer, is the wretched remainder of a sickly age, worn out with study, and oppress'd by fortune. Dryden.
 The greatest part of mankind are given up to labour, whose lives are worn out only in the provisions for living. Locke.
 Your cold hypocrisy's a stale device,
 A worn-out trick; would'st thou be thought in earnest, Cloath thy feign'd zeal in rage, in fire, in fury. Addison.
 WORMIL. n. f.
 In the backs of cows in the summer, are maggots generated, which in Effex we call wormils, being first only a small knot in the skin. Derham's Physico-Theology.
 To WORRY. v. a. [ponzen, Saxon: whence probably the word worry.]
 1. To tear, or mangle, as a beast tears its prey.
 If we with thrice such powers left at home,
 Cannot defend our own doors from the dogs,
 Let us be worried. Shaksp. Hen. V.
 The fury of the tumults might fly so high as to worry and tear those in pieces, whom as yet they but play'd with in their paws. K. Charles.
 'Tis no new thing for the dogs that are to keep the wolves

 Let them rail,
 And then worry one another at their pleasure. Race.
 Madam, contrive and invent,
 And worry him out, till he gives his consent. Swift.
 WORSE. adj. The comparative of bad: bad, worse, worst.
 [wyr, Saxon.] More bad; more ill.
 Why should he see your faces worse liking than the children of your sort? Daniel.
 Whether this or worse, love not the faithful side. Milton.
 In happiness and misery, the question still remains, how men come often to prefer the worse to the better, and to chuse that, which, by their own confession, has made them miserable. Locke.
 WORSE. adv. In a manner more bad.
 The more one sickens, the worse at ease he is. Shaksp.
 The WORSE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
 1. The loss; not the advantage; not the better.
 Was never man, who most conquets achiev'd,
 But sometimes had the worse, and lost by war. Spenser.
 Judah was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled to their tents. 2 Kings xiv. 12.
 2. Something less good.
 A man, whatever are his professions, always thinks the worse of a woman, who forgives him for making an attempt on her virtue. Clarissa.
 To WORSE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To put to disadvantage. This word, though analogical enough, is not now used.
 Perhaps more valid arms,
 Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
 May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Milton.
 WORSE. adj. A barbarous word, formed by corrupting worse with the usual comparative termination.
 Gods! take my breath from me;
 Let not my worse spirit tempt me again
 To die before you please. Shaksp. Lear.
 A dreadful quiet fell, and worse far
 Than arms, a full interval of war. Dryden.
 WORSHIP. n. f. [worshypp, Saxon.]
 1. Dignity; eminence; excellence.
 Thou madest him lower than the angels, to crown him

 My train are men of choice, and rarest parts,
 That all particulars of duty know;
 And in the most exact regard support
 The worship of their names. Shaksp. King Lear.
 2. A character of honour.
 I belong to worship, and affect
 In honour, honesty. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.
 Dinner is on table; my father desires your worship's company. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 The old Romans freedom did bestow,
 Our princes worship with a blow. Hudibras.
 What lands and lordships for their owner know
 My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.
 3. A term of ironical respect.
 Against your worship, when had I writ?
 Or P—ge pour'd forth the torrent of his wit?
 4. Adoration; religious act of reverence.
 They join their vocal worship to the quire
 Of creatures wanting voice. Milton.
 He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
 Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.
 The worship of God is an eminent part of religion, and prayer is a chief part of religious worship: hence religion is described by seeking God. Tillotson.
 There were several inroads into Germany, particularly a voyage of the Egyptians under Othris up the Danube; from them the Suevi had their worship of Isis. Arbuthnot.

 6. Idolatry of lovers.
 'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
 Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream
 That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shaksp. Lear.
 To WORSHIP. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To adore; to honour or venerate with religious rites.
 Thou shalt worship no other God. Exod. xxxiv. 14.
 Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels. Col. ii. 18.
 Adore and worship God Supreme. Milton.
 First worship God, he that forgets to pray,
 Bids not himself good-morrow nor good-day. T. Randolph.
 On the smooth rind the passenger shall see Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree. Dryden.
 2. To respect; to honour; to treat with civil reverence.
 Our grave,
 Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
 Not worship'd with a waxen epitaph. Shaksp. Henry V.
 To WORSHIP. v. n. To perform acts of adoration.
 I and the lad will go yonder and worship. Gen. xxii. 5.
 The people went to worship before the golden calf. 1 King.
 WORSHIPFUL. adj. [worshipp and full.]
 1. Claiming respect by any character or dignity.
 This is worshipful society, Shaksp. Lear.
 And fits the mounting spirit like myself.
 When old age comes upon him, it comes alone, bringing no other evil with it; but when it comes to wait upon a great and worshipful friend, who for many years has ate well and done ill, it is attended with a long train of rheums. South.
 2. A term of ironical respect.
 Every man would think me an hypocrite indeed; and what excites your most worshipful thought to think so?
 Suppose this worshipful idol be made, yet still it wants sense and motion. Stillingfleet.
 WORSHIPFULLY. adv. [from worshipping.] Respectfully.
 Hailings will lose his head, ere give consent,
 His master's son, as worshipfully he terms it, Shall lose the royalty of England's throne. Shaksp. Lear.
 WORSHIPPER. n. f. [from worship.] Adorer; one that worships.
 What art thou, thou idol ceremony?
 What kind of god art thou that suffer'st more
 Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers. Shaksp. Henry V.
 Those places did not confine the immensity of God, nor give his worshippers a nearer approach to heaven by their height.
South's Sermons.
 If posterity takes its notions of us from our medals, they must fancy one of our kings paid a great devotion to Minerva, that another was a professed worshipper of Apollo. Addison.
 WORST. adj. The superlative of bad, formed from worse: bad, worse, worst. Most bad; most ill.
 If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,
 Thou hadst been knave and flatterer. Shaksp. Lear.
 The pain that any one actually feels is still of all other the worst; and it is with anguish they cry out.
 WORST. n. f. The most calamitous or wicked state; the utmost height or degree of any thing ill.
 Who is't can say, I'm at the worst?
 I'm worse than e'er I was,
 And worse I may be yet: the worst is not,
 So long as we can say, this is the worst. Shaksp. Lear.
 That you may be arm'd against the worst in this unhappy state of affairs in our distressed country, I send you these considerations on the nature and immortality of the soul. Digby.
 Happy the man, and happy he alone,
 He, who can call to-day his own:
 He who secure within can say,
 To-morrow do thy worst, for I have liv'd to day. Dryden.
 Sir Roger gets into the frontiers of his estate, before he beats about in search of a hare, on purpose to spare his own fields, where he is always sure of finding diversion when the worst comes to the worst. Addison's Spectator.
 To WORST. v. a. [from the adjective.] To defeat; to overthrow.
 The calf will be no worse than where two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his word given him gain without further hurt.
 The bear was in a greater fright, than the worsted.
 Beat down and worsted by the knight, Hudibras.
 It is downright madness to contend where we are sure to be worsted. L'Estrange.
 The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army.

 She could have brought the chariot again, when she saw her brother worsted in the duel. Shaksp. Henry V.
 WORSTED. n. f. [from Worsted, a town in Norfolk famous for the woolen manufacture.] Woolen yarn; wool spun.
 A bafe, proud, shallow, beggarly three-futed, hundred pound, filthy worsted-stocking knave. Shaksp. King Lear.
 There Ridpath, Roper cudgel'd might ye view;
 The very worsted still look'd black and blue. Pope.
 WORT. n. f. [wyr, Saxon; wort, Dutch.] To be good.
 1. Originally a general name for an herb; whence it still continues in many, as liverwort, spleenwort, &c.
 2. A plant of the cabbage kind.
 3. [wyr, Saxon.] New beer either unfermented, or in the act of fermentation.
 If in the wort of beer, while it worketh, before it be tunned, the burrage be often changed with fresh, it will make a foreign drink for melancholy. Lacan's Natural History.
 WORTH, or WORTH. v. n. [worthan, Saxon.] To be. This word is only now retained in wo worth, or worth; worth;
wo worth the man.
 That first did teach the cur'd steel to bite, but not
 In his own flesh, and make way to the living spirit. F. 2.
 WORTH. In the termination of the names of places comes from wort, a court or farm, or pond; a street or road. Gilson.
 WORTH. n. f. [worth, Saxon.]
 1. Price; value.
 Your clemency will take in good worth the offer of these my simple and mean labours. Hooker.
 What is worth in any thing, Hudibras.
 But so much money as 'twill bring?
 A common marcasite shall have the colour of gold exactly;
 and yet upon trial yield nothing of worth but vitriol and sulphur. Woodward's Natural History.
 2. Excellence; virtue.
 How can you him unworthy then decree?
 In whole chief part your worth implanted be. Sidney.
 Is there any man of worth and virtue, although not instructed in the school of Christ, that had not rather end the days of this transitory life as Cyrus, than to sink down with them of whom Elihu hath said, memoria mortuorum. Hooker.
 Having from these luck'd all they had of worth,
 And brought thence that faith which you carried forth,
 I throughly love. Donna.
 Her virtue, and the confidence of her worth, Milton.
 That would be wood.
 A nymph of your own train, Hooker.
 Gives us your character in such a strain,
 As none but she, who in that court did dwell, can imitate
 Could know such worth, or worth describe so well. Waller.
 3. Importance; valuable quality.
 Peradventure those things whereupon so much time was then well spent, have since that lost their dignity and worth. Hooker.
 Take a man possessed with a strong desire of any thing, and the worth and excellency of that thing appears much greater than when that desire is quite extinguish'd. South's Ser- WORTH. adj.
 1. Equal in price to, equal in value to.
 Women will love her that she is a woman,
 More worth than any man: men that she is The rarest of all women. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
 Your son and daughter found this trespass worth
 The flame which here it suffers. Shaksp. Lear.
 You have not thought it worth your labour to enter a professed dissent against a philosophy, which the greatest part of the virtuosi of Europe have deserted, as a mere maze of words.
Garrigue's Sceptick.
 As if 'tis nothing worth that lies conceal'd;
 And science is not science till reveal'd? Dryden.
 At Geneva are merchants reckoned worth twenty hundred thousand crowns.
 It is worth while to consider how admirably he has turned the course of his narration, and made his husbandman concerned even in what relates to the battle. Addison.
 2. Deserving of.
 The cattle appeared to be a place worth the keeping, and capable to be made secure against a good army. Clarendon.
 Here we may reign secure, and, in my choice,
 To reign is worth ambition, though in hell. Milton.
 Haste hither Eve, and worth thy sight behold,
 Eastward among those trees, what glorious shape Comes this way moving. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Whatsoever
 Is worthy of their love is worth their anger. Dehham.
 This is life indeed; life worth preserving;
 Such life as Juba never felt till now. Addison's Cato.
 I have long had it in my thoughts to trouble you with a letter; but was discouraged for want of something that I could think worth sending fifteen hundred miles. Berkeley to Pope.
 Many

WOR

Many things are worth enquiry to one man, which are not to another.
 3. Equal in possessions to.
 Dang'rous rocks,
 Which touching but my gentle vessel's side,
 Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
 Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks;
 And in a word, but even now worth this,
 And now worth nothing.
 Although worth nothing, he shall be proffered in marriage the best endowed, and most beautiful virgin of their island.
Sandy's Journey.

WORTHILY. adv. [from worthy.]
 1. Suitably; not below the rate of.
 The divine original of our souls hath little influence upon us to engage us to walk worthily of our extraction, and to do nothing that is base.
 2. Deservedly.
 They are betray'd
 While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
 To loathsome sickness, worthily, since they God's image did not reverence in themselves.
 You worthily succeed, not only to the honours of your ancestors, but also to their virtues.
 3. Justly; not without cause.
 Christian men having, besides the common light of all men, the great help of heavenly direction from above, together with the lamps of so bright examples as the church of God doth yield, it cannot but worthily seem reproachful for us to leave both the one and the other.
 The king is present; if 't be known to him
 That I gain say my deed, how may he wound,
 And worthily, my fallhood.
 A Christian cannot lawfully hate any one; and yet I affirm that some may very worthily deserve to be hated; and of all, the deceiver deserves it most.

WORTHINESS. n. f. [from worthy.]
 1. Desert.
 The prayers which our Saviour made were for his own worthiness accepted, ours God accepteth not, but with this condition, if they be joined with a belief in Christ.
 2. Excellence; dignity; virtue.
 Determining never to marry but him, whom she thought worthy of her; and that was one in whom all worthiness were harboured.
 He that is at all times good, must hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance.
 Who is sure he hath a soul, unless
 It see and judge, and follow worthiness,
 And by deeds praise it? he who doth not this,
 May lodge an inmate foul, but 'tis not his.
 What set my thoughts on work was the worthiness and curiosity of the subject in itself.

3. State of being worthy; quality of deserving.
 She is not worthy to be loved, that hath not some feeling of her own worthiness.
 WORTHLESS. adj. [from worth.]
 1. Having no virtues, dignity, or excellence.
 You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour,
 Keep off aloof with worthless emulation.
 A little time will melt her frozen thoughts,
 And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.
 Chiding the worthless crowd away.
 2. Having no value.
 My anxious pains we all the day,
 In search of what we like, employ;
 Scorning at night the worthless prey,
 We find the labour gave the joy.
 Am I then doom'd to fall
 By a boy's hand? and for a worthless woman?

WORTHLESSNESS. n. f. [from worthless.] Want of excellence;
 want of dignity; want of value.
 But that mine own worthlessness spoils the conceit, I could think our company parallel to the seven wife men of Greece.
 A notable account is given us by the apostle of this windy insignificant charity of the will, and of the worthlessness of it, not enlivened by deeds.

WORTHY. adj. [from worth.]
 1. Deserving; such as merits; with of before the thing deserved.
 She determined never to marry any but him, whom she thought worthy of her, and that was one in whom all worthiness were harboured.
 Further, I will not flatter you,
 That all I see in you is worthy love,
 Than this; that nothing do I see in you
 That should merit hate.
 Thou art worthy of the way,
 To whom the heav'n's in thy nativity
 Adjudg'd an olive branch and laurel crown.

2. Valuable; noble; illustrious; having excellence or dignity.
 If the best things have the perfectest and best operations, it will follow, that seeing man is the worthiest creature on earth, and every society of men more worthy than any man, and of society that is the most excellent which we call the church.
 He now on Pompey's basis lies along,
 No worthier than the dust?
 A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles in point of religion and honour; though hope of success might invite some other choice.
 Think of her worth, and think that God did mean,
 This worthy mind should worthy things embrace:
 Blot not her beauties with thy thoughts unclear;
 Nor her dishonour with thy passion base.
 Happier thou may't be, worthier canst not be.
 3. Having worth; having virtue.
 The doctor is well money'd, and his friends
 Potent at court; he, none but he, shall have her;
 Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her.
 The matter I handle is the most important within the whole extent of human nature, for a worthy person to employ himself about.
 We see, though order'd for the best,
 Permitted laurels grace the lawless brow,
 Th' unworthy rais'd, the worthy cast below.
 4. Not good. A term of ironical celebration.
 My worthy wife our arms militia'd,
 And from beneath my head my sword convey'd;
 The door unlatch'd; and with repeated calls
 Invites her former lord within my walls.
 5. Suitable for any quality good or bad; equal in value; equal in dignity.
 Flowers worthy of paradise.
 Thou, Drances, art below a death from me:
 Let that vile soul in that vile body rest,
 The lodging is well worthy of the guest.
 My full rings for you make your heart my due;
 Be worthy me, as I am worthy you.
 6. Suitable to any thing bad.
 The mercilefs Macdonald,
Worthy to be a rebel, for to that
 The multiplying villanies of nature
 Do swarm upon him.

7. Deserving of ill.
 What has he done to Rome that's worthy death.
 If the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, the judge shall cause him to be beaten.
 WORTHY. n. f. [from the adjective.] A man laudable for any eminent quality, particularly for valour.
 Such as are conflagrated unto knowledge come short of themselves if they go not beyond others, and must not sit down under the degree of worthiness.
 What do these worthies
 But rob and spoil, burn, slaughter, and enslave
 Peaceable nations.
 No worthies form'd by any mule but thine
 Could purchase robes, to make themselves so fine.
 For this day's play, and for thy former acts,
 Thou Arthur hast acquir'd a future fame,
 And of three Christian worthies art the first.
 The next worthy came in with a retinue of historians.

To WORTHY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To render worthy;
 to aggrandize; to exalt. Not used.
 He conjur'd, trip'd me behind;
 And put upon him such a deal of man,
 That worthied him; got praises of the king.
 For him attempting, who was self-subdu'd.
 To WORTHY. v. n. [from worth.] To know; to be aware.
 Of which the preterite was wor, knew; which by degrees was mistaken for the present tense. To know; to be aware. Obsolete.
 The salve of reformation they mightily call for, but where,
 and what the forces are which need it, as they wor full little, so they think not greatly material to search.
 Well I wor, compar'd to all the rest.
 Of each degree, that beggar's life is best.
 More water glideth by the mill
 Than wets the miller of.

WORTHY. v. n. [from worth.] To know; to be aware.
 Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing.
 WOVE. The preterite and participle passive of weave.

WOU

WOU. The preterite and participle passive of wound.
 They took the body of Jesus and wound it in linen cloths, with the spices.
 All will be but like bottoms of thread close wound up.
 The young men wound him up, and buried him.
 These mathematical engines cannot be so easily and speedily wound up, and so certainly levelled as the other.
 The parliament being called here, and the main settlement of Ireland wound up in England, and put into the Duke of Ormond's hands to pass here into an act, all persons came over in a shoal.

WOUNDLESS. adj. [from wound.] Exempt from wounds.
 WOUNDWORT. n. f. [from wound.] A plant.
 It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose tubular and turgid empalement arises the pointal, which afterward becomes a short pod, filled with roundish seeds: the pod is enclos'd in a membranous bladder was before the empalement.
 WOUNDY. adj. Excelling. A low bad word.
 We have a world of holidays; that 'tis a woundy hindrance to a poor man that lives by his labour.
 These stockings of Susan's cost a woundy deal of pains the pulling on.

WOX. } The preterite of wax. Became. Obsolete.
 WOXE. }

 That all the three the great wox much afraid.
 WOXEN. The participle of to wax. Obsolete.

WRACK. n. f. [from wrack, Dutch; piece, Saxon, a wreck; the poets use wrack or wreck indifferently as rhyme requires, the later writers of prose commonly wreck. See WRECK.]
 1. Destruction of a ship by winds or rocks.
 Now, with full sails into the port I move,
 And safely can unlade my breast of love;
 Quiet and calm: why should I then go back,
 To tempt the second hazard of a wrack.
 2. Ruin; destruction. This is the true Saxon meaning.
 With use of evil, growing more and more evil, they took delight in slaughter, and pleased themselves in making others wrack the effect of their power.
 A world devote to universal wrack.
 To WRACK. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To destroy in the water; to wreck. [See WRECK.]
 2. It seems in Milton to mean to rack, to shake.
 Each on his rock transfix'd, the sport and prey
 Of wracking whirlwinds.
 3. To torture, to torment. This is commonly written rack, and the instrument of torture, always rack.
 Merab rejoic'd in her wrack'd lover's pain,
 And fortify'd her virtue with disdain.
 Pharaoh's and Joseph's dreams are oftentimes wracked beyond their symbolization.

To WRANGLE. v. n. [from wrangle, Dutch. Minnew. wrong, Skinner.] To dispute peevishly; to quarrel perversely;
 to altercate; to squabble.
 Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle,
 And I would call it fair play.
 Some unhatch'd practice
 Hath puddled his clear spirit; and in such cases,
 Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
 Though great ones are their object.
 How wounding a spectacle is it to see those who were by Christ designed for saviors of men, picking up shells on the shore, and unmanly wrangling about them too.
 In incomplete ideas we impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others.
 Amongst unthinking men, who examine not scrupulously ideas, but confound them with words, there must be endless dispute and wrangling.
 His great application to the law had not infected his temper with any thing litigious; he did not know what it was to wrangle on indifferent points.

 later writers of prose commonly wreck. See WRECK.]
 1. Destruction of a ship by winds or rocks.
 Now, with full sails into the port I move,
 And safely can unlade my breast of love;
 Quiet and calm: why should

WR A

Fill'd with the sense of age, the fire of youth,
A scorn of wrangling, yet a zeal for truth.
And all the question, wrangle e'er so long.
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong.

WRANGLER, n. f. [from the verb.] A quarrel; a perverse dispute.
The giving the priest a right to the tithe would produce law-suits and wrangles.

WRANGLER, n. f. [from wrangle.] A perverse, peevish, disputative man.
Tell him he's made a match with such a wrangler,
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chafes.

WRANGLER, n. f. [from wrangle.] A perverse, peevish, disputative man.
Lord, the house and family are thine,
Though some of them repine;
Turn out these wrangles, which defile thy seat:
For where thou dwellest all is neat.

WRANGLER, n. f. [from wrangle.] A perverse, peevish, disputative man.
You should be free in every answer, rather like well-bred gentlemen in polite conversation, than like noisy and contentious wrangles.

WRANGLER, n. f. [from wrangle.] A perverse, peevish, disputative man.
To WRAP, v. a. [from wrap, Saxon, to turn; wreffer, Danish.]

WRE

How now, your wrathful weapons drawn?
The true evangelical zeal should abound more in the mild and good natured affections, than the vehement and wrathful passions.

WRATHFUL, adv. [from wrathful.] Furiously; passionately.
Gentle friends, molest not this
Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully.

WRATHFUL, adv. [from wrathful.] Furiously; passionately.
WRATHLESS, adj. [from wrath.] Free from anger.
Before his feet, so sheep and lions lay,
Fearless and wrathless, while they heard him play.

WRATHFUL, adv. [from wrathful.] Furiously; passionately.
To WRECK, v. a. Old preterite and part. pass. of wreke, [from wreke, Saxon; wrecken, Dutch; recken, German.]
1. To revenge.
In an ill hour thy foes thee hither sent,
Another's wrongs to wreak upon thy self.

WRATHFUL, adv. [from wrathful.] Furiously; passionately.

Another, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clasp from the sternon.

To play or wrestle well, it should be used with those that do it better.

1. To struggle; to contend.
Or firmer in the wrestling press the ground.

I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedict,
To with him wrestle with affection.

And never to let Beatrice know of it.

He knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies, and so abhorred to be entangled in such.

WRESTLER. n. f. [from wrestle.]
One who wrestles; one who professes the athletic art.

Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here?

When the young wrestlers at their sport grew warm,

'Tis not from whom, but where we live;

The place does oft those graces give:

Great Julius, on the mountains bred,

A flock perhaps, or herd, had led;

He that the world subdu'd, had been

But the best wrestler on the green.

2. One who contends in wrestling.

So earnest with thy God, can no new care,

No sense of danger, interrupt thy prayer?

The sacred wrestler, till a blessing giv'n,

Quits not his hold, but halting conquers heav'n.

Two wrestlers help to pull each other down.

WRETCH. n. f. [preca, Saxon.]

1. A miserable mortal.

When I loved, I was a wretch.

She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;

He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd;

That the poor wretch, for grief can speak no more.

The butcher takes away the calf,

And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strives.

Illustrious wretch! repine not, nor reply:

View not what heav'n ordains, with reason's eye;

For bright the object is, the distance is too high.

2. A worthless sorry creature.

Bale-minded wretches, are your thoughts so deeply bemoir'd

In the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain some poultry wool may yield you, to let so much time pass without knowing perfectly her estate?

Has these poor men in question: never saw I

Wretches so quake; they kneel, they kiss the earth,

Forfear themselves as often as they speak.

Title of honour, worth and virtue's right,

Should not be given to a wretch so vile.

When they are gone, a company of starved hungry wretches shall take their places.

3. It is used by way of slight, or ironical pity, or contempt.

When soon away the wisp doth go;

Poor wretch was never frighted so;

He thought his wings were much too slow,

O'erjoy'd they for were parted.

Then, if the spider find him fast beset,

She flies forth, and runs along her loom:

She joys to touch the captive in her net,

And drags the little wretch in triumph home.

4. It is sometimes a word of tenderness, as we now say poor thing.

Chastened but thus, and thus his lesson taught,

The happy wretch she put into her breast.

WRETCHED. adj. [from wretch.]

1. Miserable; unhappy.

These we should judge to be most miserable, but that a wretcheder sort there are, on whom, whereas nature hath be-flowed ripe capacity, their evil disposition seriously goeth about thewith to apprehend God, as being not God.

O cruel death! to those you are more kind,

Than to the wretched mortals left behind.

Why do'st thou drive me

To range all o'er a waste and barren place,

To find a friend? The wretched have no friends.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.

Sorry; pitiful; paltry; worthless.

When God was served with legal sacrifices, such was the miserable and wretched condition of some mens minds, that the best of every thing they had, being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor, starved, or diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God.

Affected noise is the most wretched thing.

That to contempt can empty scribbles bring.

Forgive the many failings of those who, with their wretched art, cannot arrive to those heights that you possess.

3. Deplicable; hatefully contemptible.

An adventure worthy to be remembered for the unused examples therein, as well of true natural goodness as of wretched ungratefulness.

WRETCHEDLY. adv. [from wretched.]

1. Miserably; unhappily.

From these two wars, so wretchedly entered into, the duke's ruin took its date.

2. Meanly; despicably.

When such little shuffling arts come once to be ripped up, and laid open, how poorly and wretchedly must that man speak,

who finds himself guilty and baffled too?

WRETCHEDNESS. n. f. [from wretched.]

1. Misery; unhappiness; afflicted state.

My misery cannot be greater than it is: fear not the danger of my blind steps, I cannot fall worse than I am, and do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchedness.

He can inquire

What hard mishap him brought to such distress,

And made that cat's-paw the thrall of wretchedness.

To lowest wretchedness; and is there then

Such rancor in the hearts of mighty men?

When they are weary of wars, and brought down to extreme wretchedness, then they creep a little, and live for grace,

'till they have recovered their strength again.

I love not to see wretchedness of exchange,

And duty in his service perishing.

We have with the feeling lost the very memory of such wretchedness as our forefathers endured by those wars, of all others the most cruel.

2. Pitifulness; despicableness.

WRETCHLESS. n. f. [This is, by I know not whose corruption, written for reckless.] Careless; mindless; heedless.

For any man to put off his present repentance, on contemplation of a possibility that his latter repentance may serve the turn, is the most wretchedly presumption, and hath no promise of mercy annexed to it.

If persons of so circumspect a piety have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wretchedly oisancy?

Government of the Tongue.

To WRIGGLE. v. n. [prigan, Saxon; ruggelen, Dutch.] To move to and fro with short motions.

If sheep or thy lamb fall a wriggling with tail,

Go by and by search it, whiles help may prevail.

The busy importunities of these extentional phantoms I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wriggings up and down of pismires.

The excellency of fawing is to keep kerf exactly in the line marked to be fawn, without wriggling on either side.

To bed went the bridegroom and the bride:

Was never such an ill-paid'd couple ty'd;

Reckless he to'st'd, and tumbled to and fro,

And roll'd and wriggled farther off for woe.

How wildly will ambition steer!

A vermin wriggling in th' usurper's ear.

And both he and his successors would often wriggle in their seats as long as the cushion lasted.

To WRIGGLE. v. a. To put in a quick reciprocating motion;

to introduce by shifting motion.

Ralpho was mounted now, and gotten

O'erthwart his beast with active vaulting,

Wriggling his body to recover

His cast, and cast his right leg over.

A slim thin-gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost.

WRIGGLETAIL. n. f. For wrigglingtail. See WRIGGLE.

My ragged ronts all shiver and shake;

They went in the wind, wagg their wriggletails,

Peak as a peacock, but nought it avails.

WRIGHT. n. f. [pruhta, pruheta, Saxon.] A workman; an artificer; a maker; a manufacturer.

It is impossible duty to consider these things, without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the Divine

Architect, and contemplating the arrogant pretences of the world and animal wrights, and much more the productions of chance.

The verb To write has the same found with wright, a workman, right or equity, and rite or ceremony; but spelled very differently.

To WRING. v. a. preter. and part. pass. wringed and wrung.

[prungan, Saxon.]

1. To twist; to turn round with violence.

The priest shall wring off his head, and burn it on the altar.

2. To force out of any body by contortion.

He thrust the fleece together, and wringed the dew out of it, a bowl full of water.

The dregs all the wicked shall wring out and drink.

The figure of a sturdy woman, done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloths; in which act the wringing out the water that made the fountain.

3. To squeeze; to press.

In sleep I heard him say, sweet Desdemona,

Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!

And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand.

4. To writhe.

The filly owner of the goods

Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands.

5. To pinch.

The king began to find where his shoe did wring him, and that it was his depressing the house of York that did rankle and fester the affections of his people.

If he had not been too much grieved, and wrung by an uneasy and freight fortune, he would have been an excellent man of business.

6. To force by violence; to extort.

I had rather coin my heart,

And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring

From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash

By any indirection.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow

To wring the widow from her custom'd right,

And have no other reason for his wrong,

But that he was bound by a solemn oath?

That which I must speak,

Must either punish me, not being believ'd,

Or wring redress from you.

Threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride

To wring from me, and tell to them my secret.

7. To harass; to distress; to torture.

He dives into the king's soul, and there scatters

Doubts, dangers, wringing of the conscience,

Fear and despair, and all these for his marriage.

Pleasure enchants, impetuous rage transports,

And grief defects and wrings the tortured soul.

Didst thou taste but half the griefs

That wring my soul, thou couldst not talk thus coldly.

8. To distort; to turn to a wrong purpose.

To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason.

Lord, how dare these men thus wring the scriptures? Whig.

9. To persecute with extortion.

The merchant-adventurers have been often wronged and wringed to the quick; but were never quick and lively in thanks to those by whose endeavours they were freed.

To WRING. v. n. To writhe with anguish.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience

To those that wring under the load of sorrow;

But no man's virtue nor sufficiency,

To be so moral, when he shall endure

The like himself.

WRINGER. n. f. [from wring.] One who squeezes the water out of cloaths.

One Mrs. Quickly is in the manner of his nurse, his laundress, his washer, and his wringer.

WRINKLE. n. f. [prinkle, Saxon; wrinkel, Dutch.]

1. Corrugation or furrow of the skin or the face.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read:

No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck

So many blows upon this face of mine,

And made no deeper wounds?

She hath continued a virgin without any visible token, or least wrinkle of old age.

To see a beggar's brat in riches brow,

Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow.

Though you and all your senseless tribe,

Could art, or time, or nature bribe,

To make you look like beauty's queen,

And hold for ever at fifteen;

No bloom of youth can ever blind

The cracks and wrinkles of your mind:

All men of sense will pass your door,

And crowd to Stella's at fourscore.

2. Any roughness.

Our British heav'n was all serene;

No threatening cloud was nigh,

Not the least wrinkle to deform the sky.

To WRINKLE. v. a. [princh, Saxon.]

1. To corrugate; to contract into furrows.

It is still fortune's use

To let the wretched man outlive his wealth,

To view with hollow eye and wrinkled brow

They can write up to the dignity and character of their authors. Felton on the Clafficks.
- WRITER. n. ſ. [from writes.]
1. One who practiſes the art of writing.
2. An author.
All three were ruined by juſtice and ſentence, as delinquents;
and all three famous writers. Bacon.
Peaceable times are the beſt to live in, though not ſo proper to furniſh materials for a writer. Addiſon's Freeholder.
Writers are often more influenced by a deſire of fame, than a regard to the publick good.
Would a writer know how to behave himſelf with relation to poſterity, let him conſider in old books what he finds that he is glad to know, and what omiſſions he moſt laments. Swift.
- TO WRITE. v. a. [from wrote, Saxon.]
1. To diſtort; to deform with diſtortion.
It cannot be this weak and written ſhrimp.
Should ſtrike ſuch terror in his enemies. Shakeſp. Henry VI.
Hateful diſtort'd writ d their jaws
With foot and cinders. Milton.
Her mouth the writ d her forehead taught to frown,
Her eyes to ſparkle fires to love unknown;
Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did ſhew,
And ev'ry feature ſpoke aloud the curſtneſs of a ſhrew. Dry.
2. To twiſt with violence.
Then Satan fiſt knew pain,
And writ d him to and fro convolv'd. Milton's Parad. Loſt.
Amid' the plaited ſcales it took its courſe,
And in the ſpinal marrow ſpent its force;
The monſter his'd aloud, and rag'd in vain,
And writ d his body to and fro with pain;
He bit the dart. Addiſon.

line of virtue are wryed to theſe crooked ſhifts? Sidney.

X

Is a letter, which, though found in Saxon words, begins no word in the English language.

X.

YAW

Y, At the beginning of words, is a consonant; at the end, and when it follows a consonant, is a vowel, and has the sound of i. It is used at the end of words, and whenever two i's would come together; and in words derived from the Greek, to express the v. Y was much used by the Saxons, whence y is found for i in the old English writers.

YACHT. n. f. A small ship for carrying passengers.

YARD. n. f. [zeap, Saxon.]

1. Inclosed ground adjoining to an house.

One of the lions leaped down into a neighbour's yard, where, nothing regarding the crowing of the cocks, he eat them up. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Xanthus one day sent Ælop into the yard, and bade him look well about him. E'strange.

His wanton kids with budding horns prepar'd, Fight harmless battles in his homely yard. Dryden.

2. [zeap, Saxon.] A measure of three feet.

A peer, a counsellor, and a judge, are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace. Bacon.

The arms, spread cross in a straight line, and measured from one end of the long finger on one hand, to that of the other; made a measure equal to the stature, and is named a fathom. Half of that, viz. from the end of the long finger of either arm, to spread, to the middle of the breast is, with us, called a yard. Hulder on Time.

An aqueduct of a Gothic structure, that conveys water from mount St. Francis to Spoletto, from the foundation of the lowest arch to the top, is two hundred and thirty yards. Add.

3. The supports of the sails.

A breeze from shore began to blow. The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row. Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails. Let fall to court the wind. Dryden.

YARDWAND. n. f. [yard and wand.] A measure of a yard.

All the revolutions in nature can give it nothing more than different degrees of dimensions. What affinity has thinking with such attributes? no more than there is between a syllable and a yardwand. Collier.

YARE, adj. [zeappe, Saxon.] Ready; dextrous; eager.

Yare, yare, good Iros, quick;—methinks I hear Antony call. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

I do desire to learn, Sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your turn, you shall find me yare. Shakespeare.

YARELY, adv. [from yare.] Dextrously; skilfully.

The fiken tackle.

Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands That yarely frame the office. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

YARN. n. f. [zeap, Saxon.] Spun wool; woollen thread.

You would be another Penelope; yet they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses's absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipt them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherish'd by our virtues. Shakespeare.

Yarn is a commodity very proper to this country, which of all others ought to be most encouraged. Temple.

It may be useful for the reeling of yarn. Wilkins.

The fates but only spin the coarser clue, The finest of the wool is left for you.

Spare me but one small portion of the twine, And let the sisters cut below your line.

The rest among the rubbish may they sweep, Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap. Dryden.

To YARR. v. n. [from the found, birrio, Lat.] To growl, or snarl like a dog.

YARROW. n. f. A plant which grows wild on the dry banks, and is used in medicine.

YAWL. n. f. A little vessel belonging to a ship, for convenience of passing to and from it.

Y.

YEA

To YAWN. v. n. [zeonan, Saxon.]

1. To gape; to oscitate; to have the mouth opened involuntarily by fumes, as in sleepiness.

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum, Delivering o'er to executors pale The lazy, yawning drone. Shakespeare. Hen. V.

In yawning, the inner parchment of the ear is extended. When a man yawns, he cannot hear so well. Bacon.

At length shook off himself, and ask'd the dame; And asking yawn'd, for what intent she came? Dryden.

To whom the yawning pilot aleep, Me didst thou bid, to trust the treacherous deep? Dryden.

2. To open wide.

The gaffes, That bloodily did yawn upon his face. Shakespeare.

'Tis now the very witching time of night, When churchyards yawn. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth, For swallowing up the treasure of the realm. Shakespeare.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd, Like vomit, from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

Hell at last Yawning receiv'd them whole, and on them clos'd. Milton.

Down fell the beauteous youth; the yawning wound Gush'd out a purple stream. Dryden.

High he rear'd her arm, and with her sceptre struck The yawning cliff: from its disjointed height Adown the mount the gushing torrent ran. Prior.

3. To express desire by yawning.

The chiefest thing at which lay-reformers yawn, is that the clergy may, through conformity in condition, be poorer the apostles were. In which one circumstance, if they imagine to great perfection, they must think that church which hath such store of mendicant friars, a church in that respect most happy. Hester.

YAWN. n. f. [from the verb.] Oscitation.

Thce, Paridel, she mark'd thee, there Stretch'd on the rack of a too easy chair; And heard thy everlasting yawn confest. Pope's Dunciad.

The pains and penalties of idleness.

2. Gape; hiatus.

Hence to the borders of the marsh they go, That mingles with the baleful streams below; And sometimes with a mighty yawn, 'tis said, Opens a diurnal passage to the dead.

Who, pale with fear, the rending earth survey, And huddle at the sudden flash of day. Addison.

YAWNING, adj. [from yawn.] Sleepy; slumbering.

Ere to black Hecat's fummons The hard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums, Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done A deed of dreadful note. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Y'CLAD, part. for clad. Cloathed.

Her fight did ravish, but her grace in speech, Her words yel'd with wisdom's majesty, Make me from wordy fall to weeping joys. Shakespeare.

Y'CLEPED. [The participle passive of clepe, to call; cleap, Saxon; with the increasing particle y, which was used in the old English in the preterites and participles, from the Saxon ge.] Called; termed; named.

But come, thou goddess, fair and free, In heav'n yel'd'd Euphrosine, And by men, heart-easing mirth. Milton.

YDRA'D. The old pret. of to dread. Spenser.

YE. The nominative plural of thou.

Ye are they which justify yourselves. Luke xvi. 15.

YEA, adv. [ea, or yea, Saxon; ja, Danish, German, and Dutch.] Yes. A particle of affirmation.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd. Shakespeare.

A rascally, yea, forsooth, knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security. Shakespeare.

YEA

All the promises of God are yea, and amen; that is, are verified, which is the importance of yea, and confirmed, which is meant by amen, into an immutability. Hammond.

They durst abide Jehovah thund'ring out of Zion, thron'd Between the cherubim; yea, often plac'd Within his sanctuary itself their shrines. Milton.

Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day? Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham.

Notwithstanding this great proximity of man to himself, yea, and notwithstanding the observations made in all ages, we still remain ignorant of many things concerning ourselves. Hale.

To YEAD, or YED. v. n. [preticite yade.] [This word seems to have been corruptly formed from yead, the Saxon preterite of gen.] To go; to march. Obsolete.

They wander at will, and stay at pleasure, And to their folds yead at their own leisure. Spenser.

Then had the knight this lady yead aloof, And to an hill her self withdrew aside, From whence the might behold that battle's proof, And eke be safe from danger far deserv'd. Fairy Queen.

Yet for the yead thereat half agast, And Kiddy the door spar'd after her fast. Spenser.

That same mighty man of God, That bloud red billows like a walk'd front, On either side disparp'd with his rod. Spenser.

'Till that his army dry-foot through them yead. Spenser.

To YEAN. v. n. [eanian, Saxon.] To bring young. Used of sheep.

The skilful shepherd peef'd me certain wands; He struck them up before the fulsome ewes, Who, then conceiving, did in yeaning time Sole party-colour'd lambs. Shakespeare.

So many days my ewes have been with young: So many weeks, ere the poor fools will yean. Shakespeare.

This I scarcely drag along, Who yeaning on the rocks has left her young. Dryden.

Ewes yean the polled lamb with the least danger. Martinet.

YEANLING. n. f. [from yean.] The young of sheep.

All the yeanlings which were streak'd and pied, Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakespeare.

YEAR. n. f. [zeap, Saxon.]

If one by the word year mean twelve months of thirty days each, i. e. three hundred and sixty days; another intend a solar year of three hundred sixty-five days; and a third mean a lunar year, or twelve lunar months, i. e. three hundred fifty-four days, there will be a great variation and error in their account of things, unless they are well apprized of each other's meaning. Warr's Logic.

See the minutes, how they run: How many makes the hour full compleat, How many hours bring about the day, How many days will finish up the year, How many years a mortal man may live. Shakespeare.

With the year Seasons return, but not to me returns Day, or the sweet approach of morn. Milton.

Oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them, to serve them for many years laying, allowing such a proportion for every year, as will serve for one or two incubations. Ray on the Creation.

He accepted a curacy of thirty pounds a year. Swift.

It is often used plurally, without a plural termination. Shakespeare.

I fight not once in forty year. Shakespeare.

3. In the plural old age.

Some mumble-news, That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd, Told our intents. Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost.

There died also Cecile, mother to king Edward IV. being of extreme years, and who had lived to see three princes of her body crowned, and four murdered. Bacon's Hen. VII.

He look'd in years, yet in his years were teen, A youthful vigour, and autumnal green. Dryden.

YE'RLING, adj. [from year.] Being a year old.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke; Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

YE'RLY, adj. [from year.] Annual; happening every year; lasting a year.

The yearly course that brings this day about, Shall never see it but a holiday. Shakespeare. K. John.

Why the changing oak should shed The yearly honour of his flately head; Whilst the distinguishing yew is ever teen, Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.

YE'RLY, adv. Annually; once a year.

He that outlives this day, and sees old age,

YEL

Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours, And say, tomorrow is Saint Crispian. Shakespeare. Hen. V.

For numerous blessings yearly shower'd, And property with plenty crown'd; For freedom still maintain'd alive; For these, and more, accept our pious praise. Dryden.

To YEARN. v. n. [eanian, Saxon.] To feel great internal uneasiness. In Spenser it is sometimes earn.

He despis'd to tread in due degree, But chaff'd, and foam'd, with courage fierce and stern, And to be eas'd of that bale burden still did yearn. Spenser.

Make the libbard stern Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn. Spenser.

Though peeping close into the thick, Might see the moving of some quick; But were it fairy, fiend, or snake, My courage earned it to wake, And manfully therat shot. Spenser.

Falt'ring, he is dead, And we must yearn therefore. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

Joseph made haste; for his bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he fought where to weep, and he enter'd into his chamber. Gen. xlii. 30.

When the fair Leucothoe he spy'd, To check his steel, impatient Phoebe yearn'd, Though all the world was in his course concern'd. Waller.

Yet for all the yearning pain Y' have suffer'd for their loves, in vain, I fear they'll prove so nice and coy, To have, and t' hold, and to enjoy. Hudibras.

Where our heart does but relent, his melts; where our eye pities, his bowels yearn. South's Sermons.

At beholding the miseries of others, they find such yearning in their bowels, and such sensible commotions raised in their breasts, as they can by no means satisfy. Calamy.

Your mother's heart yearns towards you. Addison.

Unmov'd the mind of Isaac remain'd; But Antichus, unable to controul, Spoke loud the language of his yearning soul. Pope.

To YEARN. v. a. To grieve; to vex.

She laments for it, that it would Yern your heart to see it. Shakespeare.

YEST. n. f. [zejt, Saxon.]

1. The foam, spume, or flower of beer in fermentation; barm.

Yeast and outward means do fail, And have no power to work on ale. Hudibras.

When drays bound high, they never cross behind, Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind. Gay.

2. The spume on a troubled sea.

Now the ship boiling the moon with her main-mast, and anon swallow'd with yeast; and froth, his you'd thrust a cork into a hogthead. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

YE'STY, adj. [from yeft.] Frothy; spumy.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the yesty waves Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

YELK. n. f. [from zealepe, yellow, Saxon.] The yellow part of the egg. It is commonly pronounced, and often written yolk.

The yolk of the egg conducteth little to the generation of the bird, but only to the nourishment of the fame; for if a chicken be opened, when it is new hatched, you shall find much of the yolk remaining. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

That a chicken is formed out of the yolk of an egg, with some ancient philosophers the people still opinion. Brown.

All the feather'd kind, From th' included yolk, not ambient white arose. Dryden.

To YELL. v. n. To cry out with horror and agony.

Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells; Nor grily vultures make us once affraid. Spenser.

Each new morn, New widows howl, new orphans cry; new sorrows Strike heav'n on the face, that it reounds, As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like syllables of dolour. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Now worse than e'er he was before, Poor Puck doth yell, poor Puck doth roar, That wak'd queen Mab, who doubted fore Some treason had been wrought her. Drayton's Nymphiad.

Telling monsters, that with ceaseless cry Surround me. Milton.

Night-struck fancy dreams the yelling ghost. Thomson.

YELL. n. f. [from the verb.] A cry of horror.

With like tim'rous accent and dire yell, As when, by night and negligence, the fire Is spread in populous cities. Shakespeare's Othello.

Hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains Of founding ladies, and of dragging chains.

The Trojan stood astonish'd at their cries, And ask'd his guide from whence those yells arise. Dryden.

YEO

Others in frantick mood
Run howling through the streets; their hideous yells Rend the dark welkin. Philips.
YELLOW, adj. [yaleye, Saxon; ghelaeor, Dutch; giallo, Italian.] Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.
Only they that come to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakspeare, Henry VIII. Prologue.
He brought the green ear and the yellow sheaf. Milton.
After a lively orange, followed an intense bright and copious yellow, which was also the best of all the yellows. Newton.
Negligent of food,
Scarce seen, he wades among the yellow broom. Thomson.
YELLOWBOY, n. f. A gold coin. A very low word.
John did not starve the cause; there wanted not yellowboys to see council. Arbutnot's John Bull.
YELLOWHAMMER, n. f. A bird.
YELLOWISH, adj. [from yellow.] Approaching to yellow.
Although amber be commonly of a yellowish colour, yet there is found of it also black, white, brown, green, blue, and purple. Woodward's Natural History.
YELLOWISHNESS, n. f. [from yellowish.] The quality of approaching to yellow.
Bruised madder, being drenched with the like alkalize solution, exchanged its yellowishness for a redness. Boyle.
YELLOWNESS, n. f. [from yellow.]
1. The quality of being yellow.
Apples, covered in lime and adhes, were well matured, as appeared in the yellowness and sweetness. Bacon's Natural Hist.
Yellowness of the skin and eyes, and a saffron-coloured urine, are signs of an inflammatory disposition of the liver. Arbutnot.
2. It is used in Shakspeare for jealousy.
Shakspeare.
Ford I will possess with yellowness.
YELLOWNESS, n. f. A disease in horses. It owes its original to obstructions in the gall-pipe, which are caused by slimy or gritty matter; or to the stoppage of the roots of those little ducts opening into that pipe, by the like matter; or to a compres-sion of them by a fulness and plenitude of the blood-vessels that lie near them. When the gall-pipe, or the roots rather of the common ducts of that pipe, are any wise stopped up, that matter which should be turned into gall is taken up by the vein, and carried back again into the mass of blood, and tinctures it yellow; so that the eyes, inside of the lips, flaves, and all the parts of the horse, that are capable of shewing the colour, appear yellow. Farrier's Dict.
His horse sped with flavins, and raled with the yellow.
Shakspeare's Taming of the Shrew.
To YELP, v. n. [zealpan, Saxon.] To bark as a beagle-hound after his prey.
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shak. II. VI.
YEMAN, n. f. [Of this word the original is much doubted;
the true etymology seems to be that of Janius, who derives it from german, Frick, a villager.]
1. A man of a small estate in land; a farmer; a gentleman farmer.
Gentlemen should use their children as the honest farmers and substantial yeomen do theirs. Locke.
He that has a spaniel by his side is a yeman of about one hundred pounds a year, an honest man; he is just qualified to kill an hare. Addison.
2. It seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers: whence we have full yeomen of the guard.
Tall yeomen seemed they, and of great might,
And were enraged ready still for fight. Fairy Queen.
You, good yemen,
Whose limbs were made in England, flew us here
The mettle of your pasture. Shakspeare, Henry V.
He instituted, for the security of his person, a band of fifty archers, under a captain, to attend him, by the name of ye- men of his guard. Bacon's Henry VII.
Th' appointment for th' ensuing night he heard;
And therefore in the cavern had prepar'd
Two brawny yeomen of his trusty guard. Dryden.
At Windsor St. John whispers me i' th' ear;
The waiters stand in ranks, the yeomen cry
Make way for the dean, as if a duke pass'd by. Swift.
3. It was probably a freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.
His grandfather was Lyonel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England:
Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root? Shak. H. VI.
It seems to have had likewise the notion of a gentleman servant.
A jolly yeoman, marshal of the hall,
Whose name was appetite, he did bestow
Both guests and meats. Spenser.
YEMANRY, n. f. [from yeoman.] The collective body of yeomen.
This did amortize a great part of the lands of the kingdom unto the hold and occupation of the yeomanry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon.

YET

To YERK, v. a. [Of unknown etymology.] To throw out or move with a spring.
A leaping horse is said to yerk, or strike out his hind legs, when he flings and kicks with his whole hind quarters, stretching out the two hinder legs near together, and even, to their full extent. Farrier's Dict.
Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Shakspeare.
YERK, n. f. [from the verb.] A quick motion.
To YERN, v. a. See YEARN.
I am not covetous of gold;
It yerns me not, if men my garments wear. Shak. H. V.
YES, adv. [yipe, Saxon.] A term of affirmation; the affirmative particle opposed to no.
This were a fit speech for a general in the head of an army, when going to battle: yet, and it is no less fit speech in the head of a council, upon a deliberation of entrance into a war. Bacon.
Yet, you despise the man to books confin'd,
Who from his study rails at human kind,
Though what he learns he speaks. Pope.
YESTER, adj. [ghifler, Dutch; yesternus, Latin.] Being next before the present day. It is not often used but in composition with another word, as day or night.
Love might as well be fow'd upon our sands,
As in a breast so barren:
To love an enemy, the only one Remaining too, whom yester fun beheld Must ring her charms. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
YESTERDAY, n. f. [gyr-candæg, Saxon.] The day last past;
the day next before to-day.
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
We are but yesterdays, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow.
You are both fluid, chang'd since yesterday;
Next day repairs but ill last day's decay;
Nor are, although the river keep the name,
Yesterday's waters and to-day's the same. Dante.
If yesterday could be recall'd again,
E'en now would I conclude my happy reign. Dryden.
Yesterday was set apart as a day of publick thanksgiving for the late extraordinary successes. Addison.
Mrs. Simper sends complaint in your yesterday's Spectator.
Addison's Spectator.
Naked from the womb
We yesterday came forth; and in the tomb
Naked again we must to-morrow lie:
Born to lament, to labour, and to die. Prior.
YESTERDAY, adv. On the day last past.
Martius gave us yesterday a representation of the empire of the Turks, with no small vigour of words. Bacon.
YESTERNIGHT, n. f. The night before this night.
YESTERNIGHT, adv. On the night last past.
Eleven hours I've spent to write it over;
For yesternight by Cateley was it sent me. Shakspeare, R. III.
The distribution of this conference was made by Eupolis
yesternight.
YET, conjunct. [yē, zē, zeta, Saxon.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; however.
They had a king was more than him before;
But yet a king, where they were nought the more. Daniel.
Though such men have lived never so much upon the reserve, yet if they be observed to have a particular fondness for persons noted for any fin, it is ten to one but there was a communication in the fin, before there was fin in affection. South.
The heathens would never suffer their gods to be reviled, which yet were no gods; and shall it be allowed to any man to make a mock of him that made heaven and earth? Jilios.
He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole tragedy; yet these imperfections being balanced by great virtues, they hinder not our compassion for his miseries. Dryden's Duffresnoy.
Let virtuous in five years be writ,
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit. Dryden.
YET, adv.
1. Beside; over and above.
This furnishes us with yet one more reason, why our Saviour lays such a particular stress on acts of mercy. Atterbury.
2. Still; the state still remaining the same.
Philoclea would needs have her glove, and not without so mighty a lout as that face could yield. Sidney.
The mind of man desireth evermore to know the truth,
according to the most infallible certainty which the nature of things can yield. Hobbes.
If you take the idea of white, which one parcel of snow yielded yesterday to your sight, and another idea of white from another parcel of snow you see to-day, and put them together in your mind, they run into one, and the idea of whiteness is not at all increased. Locke.

YIE

At this time; so soon; hitherto: with a negative before it.
Thales being asked when a man should marry, said, young men not yet; old men, not at all. Bacon.
5. At least; at all. Noting uncertainty or indetermination.
A man that would form a comparison betwixt Quintilian's declamations, if yet they be Quintilian's, and the orations of Tully, would be in danger of forfeiting his discretion. Baker.
6. It notes increase or extension of the sense of the words to which it is joined.
Shake not his hour-glass, when his hasty sand
Is ebbing to the last:
A little longer, yet a little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit without a winter storm. Dryden.
Yet a few days, and those which now appear
In youth and beauty like the blooming year,
In life's swift scene shall change. Dryden.
7. Still; in a new degree.
He that takes from a thief, that which the thief took from an honest man, and keeps it to himself, is the wicked thief of the two, by how much the rapine is made yet blacker by the pretence of piety and justice. L'Estrange.
8. Even; after all. A kind of emphatical addition to a negative.
If any man neglect his duty, his fault must not be ascribed to the rule appointed, neither yet to the whole church. Whit.
Men may not too rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor yet the evidence against them; for the witches themselves are imaginative, and people are credulous, and ready to im-pute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon.
Nor yet amidst this joy and brightest morn
Was absent, after all his mischief done,
The prince of darkness. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
9. Hitherto.
Hope beginning here, with a trembling expectation of things far removed, and as yet but only heard of, endeth with real and actual fruition of that which no tongue can express. Hook.
YEVEN, for given.
Wants not a fourth grace to make the dance even?
Let that room to my lady be given;
She shall be a grace,
To fill the fourth place,
And reign with the rest in heaven. Spenser.
YEW, n. f. [y, Saxon; yew, Welsh.] This is often written
yew; but the former orthography is at once nearer to the found and the derivation. See YUGH. A tree of tough wood.
It hath amantaceous flowers, which consist of many apices, for the most part shaped like a mushroom, and are barren; but the embryos, which are produced at remote distances on the same tree, do afterward become hollow bell-shaped berries, which are full of juice, and include seeds somewhat like acorns, having, as it were, a little cup to each. Miller.
The shooter yew, the broad-leav'd yewamore,
The barren plantane, and the walnut found;
The myrrhe, that her soul fin doth still deplore,
Alter the owner of all waterfin ground. Fairfax.
Slips of yew,
Shiver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
They would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew. Shakspeare, Titus Andronicus.
He drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough yew. Dryden.
The distinguishing'd yew is ever seen.
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.
YEWEN, adj. [from yew.] Made of the wood of yew.
His stiff arms to stretch with yewen bow.
And many legs still passing to and fro. Haberd's Tale.
YEWRE, adv. [yeepe, Saxon.] Together.
To YIELD, v. a. [zelean, Saxon, to pay.]
1. To produce; to give in return for cultivation or labour.
When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. Gen. iv. 12.
Strabo tells us the mines at Carthage yielded the Romans, yet them, to the value of twenty-five thousand drachms, eight hundred and seven pounds five shillings and ten pence. Arbutnot.
2. To produce in general.
He makes milch kine yield blood. Shakspeare.
The wilderness yielded food for them. Job xxiv. 5.
All the substances of an animal, fed even with acetic substances, yield by fire nothing but alkaline salts. Arbutnot.
3. To afford; to exhibit.
Philoclea would needs have her glove, and not without so mighty a lout as that face could yield. Sidney.
The mind of man desireth evermore to know the truth,
according to the most infallible certainty which the nature of things can yield. Hobbes.
If you take the idea of white, which one parcel of snow yielded yesterday to your sight, and another idea of white from another parcel of snow you see to-day, and put them together in your mind, they run into one, and the idea of whiteness is not at all increased. Locke.

YOK

4. To give as claimed of right.
I the praise
Yield thee, so well thou hast this day purvey'd. Milton.
5. To allow; to permit.
I yield it just, said Adam, and submit. Milton.
Life is but air,
That yields a passage to the whistling sword,
And closes when his gone. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
6. To emit; to expire.
Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast and wand'ring air. Shak. Rich. III.
He gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost. Gen. xlix. 33.
7. To resign; to give up.
He not yielding over to old age his country delights, especially of hawking, was at that time, following a merlin, brought to see this injury offered unto us. Sidney.
Thus I have yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory. Shakspeare, King John.
She to realities yield, all her shows. Milton.
Tis the pride of man which is the spring of this evil, and an unwillingness to yield up their own opinions. Watts.
8. To surrender.
The enemies sometimes offered unto the soldiers, upon the walls, great rewards, if they would yield up the city, and sometimes threatened them as fast. Krollier.
They laugh, as if to them I had quitted all,
At random yielded up to their misrule. Milton.
To YIELD, v. n.
1. To give up the conquest; to submit.
He yields not in his fall;
But fighting dies, and dying kills withal. Daniel.
All is not lost: immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield. Milton.
If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopp'd, it suddenly yields to nature, and dies. Walton's Angler.
There he saw the fainting Grecians yield,
And here the trembling Trojans quit the field, Purs'd by fierce Achilles. Dryden.
2. To comply with any person.
Considering this present age so full of tongue, and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker.
I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark, how they whisper. Shakspeare, King John.
This supernatural solliciting, if ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success?
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair?
With her much fair speech she caused him to yield. Pope.
The Jews have agreed to deliver thee that thou wouldst bring down Paul; but do not thou yield unto them. Acts xxiii. 21.
3. To comply with things.
There could be no secure peace, except the Lacedemonians yielded to those things, which being granted, it would be no longer in their power to hurt the Athenians. Bacon.
If much converse
These satiate, to short absence I could yield. Milton.
4. To concede; to admit; to allow; not to deny.
If we yield that there is a God, and that this God is almighty and just, it cannot be avoided but that, after this life ended, he administers justice unto men. Hakewill.
5. To give place as inferior in excellence or any other quality.
The fight of Achilles and Cygnus, and the fray betwixt the Lapithæ and Centaurs, yield to no other part of this poet. Dry.
Tell me in what more happy fields
The thistle springs, to which the fly yields?
YIELDER, n. f. [from yield.] One who yields.
Briars and thorns at their apparel snatch,
Some sleeves, some hats; from yielders all things catch. Shak.
Some guard these traitors to the block of death, Treason's true bed, and yielders up of breath. Shak. Hen. IV.
YOKE, n. f. [geoc, Sax. joek, Dutch; jugum, Lat. joug, Fr.]
1. The bandage placed on the neck of draught oxen.
Bring a red heifer, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke. Numb. xix. 2.
A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.
2. A mark of servitude; slavery.
Our country sinks beneath the yoke; Shakspeare's Macbeth.
It weeps, it bleeds;
In bands of iron fetter'd you shall be; Dryden's Aurengz.
3. A chain; a link; a bond.
This yoke of marriage from us both removes,
Where two are bound to draw, though neither love. Dryd.
4. A couple; two; a pair.
Those that accuse him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men. Shakspeare.
His lands a hundred yoke of oxen would. Dryden's Æn.
A yoke

YOR

- A yoke of mules outgoes a yoke of oxen, when set to work at the same time; for mules are swifter. Broom.
- To Yoke. v. a. [from the noun.]
- To bind by a yoke to a carriage.
This Stretes promised to do, if he alone would yoke together two brazen-hoofed bulls, and, plowing the ground, sow dragons teeth. L'Estrange.
Four milk-white bulls, the Thracian ufe of old,
Were yok'd to draw his ear of burnish'd gold. Dryden.
  - To join or couple with another.
My name
Beyok'd with his that did betray the best. Shakespeare.
Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb,
That carries anger as the flint bears fire. Shak. Jul. Cesar.
Seek not in Latian bands to yoke
Our fair Lavinia. Dryden's Æn.
  - To enslave; to subdue.
These are the arms
With which he yoketh your rebellious necks, Razeth your cities. Shakespeare.
  - To restrain; to confine.
Men marry not; but chuse rather a libertine single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.
The words and promises, that yoke
The conqueror, are quickly broke. Hudibras.
Xerxes, the liberty of Greece to yokes,
Over Hellepont bridg'd his way. Milton.
Yo'KE-ELM. n. f. A tree. Answer.
Yo'KE-FELLOW. n. f. [yoke and fellow, or mate.]
Yo'KE-MATE. n. f. [yoke and fellow, or mate.]
- Companion in labour.
Yokefellow in arms,
Let us to France. Shakespeare's Henry V.
  - Mate; fellow.
You cannot think me fit
To be th' yokefellow of your wit,
Nor take one of so mean deserts
To be the partner of your parts. Hudibras.
Before Toulon thy yokemate lies.
Where all the live-long night he sighs. Stepney.
Those who have most distinguished themselves by railing at the sex, very often chuse one of the most worthless for a companion and yokefellow. Addison's Spectator.
YOLD, for yielded. Obsolete. Spenser.
YOLK. n. f. [See YELK.] The yellow part of an egg.
Nature hath provided a large yolk in every egg, a great part whereof remaineth after the chicken is hatched; and, by a channel made on purpose, serves instead of milk to nourish the chick for a considerable time. Ray on the Creation.
- YON.* adv. [geon, Saxon.] Being at a distance within YONDER. v. view.
Madam, yond young fellow swears he will speak with you.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Good mother, do not marry me to yon fool. Shakespeare.
Would you not laugh to meet a great counsellor of state in a flat cap, his gloves under his girdle, and yond haberdasher in a velvet gown furred with fables? Ben. Jonson's Dipsomachia.
Tigranes, being encamp'd upon a hill with four hundred thousand men, discovered the army of the Romans, being not above fourteen thousand, marching towards him: he made himself merry with it, and said, yonder men are too many for an ambassage, and too few for a fight. Bacon's Natural History.
For proof look up,
And read thy lot in yon celestial sign. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Yon flow'ry arbors, yonder allies green. Milton.
Let other swains attend the rural care,
But nigh yon mountain let me tune my lays. Pope.
- YON.* adv. At a distance within view. It is used when YONDER. v. we direct the eye from another thing to the object.
- The fringed curtains of thine eyes advance,
And say what thou see'st yond. Shakespeare's Tempest.
First, and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon soars on golden wing,
Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne,
The cherub, contemplation. Milton.
Yonder are two apple-women scolding. Arbutn. and Pope.
YOND. adj. [I know not whence derived.] Mad; furious:
perhaps transported with rage; under alienation of mind, in which sense it concurs with the rest.
Then like a lion, which hath long time fought
His robbed whelps, and at the last them found Amongst the shepherd swains, then waxeth wood and yond;
So fierce he laid about him. Fairy Queen.
Nor those three brethren, Lombards, fierce and yond. Fairy Queen.
YORE, or of Yore. adv. [geogana, Saxon.]
  - Long.
Witness the burning altars, which he swore,
And, guilty, heavens of his bold perjury;
Which though he hath polluted oft and yores,
Yet I to them for judgment just do fly. Fairy Queen.

YOU

- Of old time; long ago.
Ther bright-ey'd Vesta long of yore
To solitary Saturn bore. Milton.
There liv'd, as authors tell, in days of yore,
A widow somewhat old, and very poor. Dryden.
In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd;
Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd.
The dev'l was piqu'd such saintship to behold,
And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old;
But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
And tempts by making rich, not making poor. Pope.
- You. pron.* [eop, iuh, Saxon: the accusative of ge, ye.]
- The oblique case of ye.
Ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God,
which is given me to you ward. Eph. iii. 2.
I thought to show you
How easy 'twas to die, by my example,
And haufel fate before you. Dryden's Cleomenes.
  - It is used in the nominative; and though first introduced by corruption, is now established.
You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames Into her scornful eyes. Shakespeare's King Lear.
  - It is the ceremonial word for the second person singular, and is always used, except in solemn language.
Madam, the fates withstand, and you
Are destin'd Hymen's willing victim too. Pope.
  - It is used indefinitely, as the French on.
We call'd by what was one of those rivers of burning matter: this looks, at a distance, like a new-plow'd land; but as you come near it, you see nothing but a long heap of heavy disjointed clouds. Addison on Italy.
- YOUNG. adj.* [cong, yeong, Saxons; jong, Dutch.]
- Being in the first part of life; not old.
Guests should be interlard'd, after the Persian custom, by ages young and old. Cervin's Survey of Cornwall.
He woos both high and low, both rich and poor,
Both young and old. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakespeare.
I firmly am resolv'd
Not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakespeare.
Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are faster than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
He ordain'd a lady for his prize,
Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in house-
wiferies. Chapman.
In timorous deer he hanfels his young paws,
And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws. Cowley.
Nor need'st by thy daughter to be told,
Though now thy spry blood with age be cold,
Thou hast been young. Dryden.
When we say a man is young, we mean that his age is yet but a small part of that which usually men attain to; and when we denominate him old, we mean that his duration is run out almost to the end of that which men do usually exceed. Lact.
It will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion, by God's ordination, belonged to the eldest son; because Jacob the youngest here had it. Lact.
From earth they rear him struggling now with death,
And Nestor's youngst stops the vents of breath. Pope.
  - Ignorant; weak.
Come, elder brother, thou art too young in this. Shakespeare.
  - It is sometimes applied to vegetable life.
There be trees that bear best when they begin to be old, as almonds; the cause is, for that all trees that bear must have an oily fruit; and young trees have a more watry juice, and less concocted. Bacon.
- YOUNG. n. f.* The offspring of animals collectively.
The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakespeare's King Lear.
So many days my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks ere the poor fools will year. Shakespeare.
The eggs disclos'd their callow young.
The reason why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is because there might be more plenty. Milton.
Not for her young; for their unequal line
Was heroes make, half human, half divine;
Their earthly mold ohnoxious was to fate, Dryden.
The immortal part assum'd immortal state.
Those insects, for whose young nature hath not made provision of sufficient sustenance, do themselves gather and lay up in store for them. Ray on the Creation.
- YOUNGEST. adj.* [from young.] Somewhat young.
She let her second room to a very genteel youngest man. Tet.
YOUNGLING. n. f. [from young; yeongling, Saxon.] Any creature in the first part of life. Morse.

YOU

- More dear unto their God, than younglings to their dam.
Fairy Queen.
- Youngling*, thou canst not love so dear as I. —
—Grey beard, thy love doth freeze. Shakespeare.
When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown.
Encourag'd thus the brought her younglings nigh. Dryden.
The stately beast the two Tyrreidae bred, Snatch'd from his dam, and the tame youngling fed. Dryden.
- YOUNGLY. adv.* [from young.]
- Early in life.
Say we read lectures to you,
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continu'd, and what flock he springs of. Shakespeare.
  - Ignorantly; weakly.
YOUNGLY. n. f. [from young.] A young person. In contrast with YOUNGER.
How like a younger or a prodigal
The scarfed bark parts from her native bay, Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind. Shakespeare.
What, will you make a younger of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall have my pocket pick'd.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.
- See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun;
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trim'd like a younger prancing to his love. Shakespeare.
Fame tells, by age fame reverend grown,
That Phœbus gave his chariot to his son;
And whilst the younger from the path declines, Admiring the strange beauty of the signs,
Proud of his charge, he drove the fiery horse,
And would outdo his father in his course. Creech.
The younger, who at nine and three,
Drinks with his sisters milk and tea,
From breakfast reads till twelve o'clock,
Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes and Locke. Prior.
- YOUNGSTER. n. f.* [from young.] Youth. Obsolete.
The mournful muse in mirth now lift ne mark,
As he was wont in youngth and summer days. Spenser.
- YOUTH. pronoun.* [eopep, Saxon.]
1. Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak of more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.
Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized
by a tride. Shakespeare.
- YOUTH* is used in an indeterminate sense.
Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; so every true man's apparel fits your thief.
There is a great affinity between coins and poetry, and your medallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison on ancient Medals.
A disagreement between these seldom happens, but among your antiquaries and schoolmen. Faeton on the Classics.
  - Youth* is used when the substantive goes before or is understood; as this is your book, this book is yours.
Pray for this man and for his issue,
Whole heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
That done, our day of marriage shall be yours,
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shakespeare.
This kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:
Conceive and face thee well. —
—Yours in the ranks of death. — Shakespeare's King Lear.
He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east. Shakespeare.
While the sword this monarchy secures,
'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.
My wealth, my city and myself are yours. Dryden.
It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.
- Yours'LE. n. f.* [your and self.] You, even you; ye, not others.
If it stand as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honour; be assur'd,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
I'll all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare.
O heav'n's!
If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourself are old,
Make it your cause. Shakespeare's King Lear.

YUX

- YOUTH. n. f.* [yeozu, Saxon.]
- The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty eight.
But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need;
Then these delights my mind might move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Shakespeare.
See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun;
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trim'd like a younger, prancing to his love. Shakespeare.
His stary helm unbuckled show'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.
The solidity, quantity, and strength of the aliment is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbutnot.
  - A young man.
Siward's son,
And many unrough youths even now,
Protect their first of manhood. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
If this were seen,
The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book and sit him down and die. Shakespeare.
About him exercis'd heretic games
Th' unarmed youth of heav'n. Milton.
O'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd
Androgæus' death, and off rings to his ghost;
Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet
The fate appointed by revengful Crete. Dryden.
The pious chief
A hundred youths from all his train elects,
And to the Latian court their course directs. Dryden.
  - Young men. Collectively.
As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the openest and clearest; as Lyly before Salust, Sidney before Donne. Ben. Jonson.
The graces put not more exactly on
Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won,
Than that young beauty by thy care is dress'd,
When all your youth prefers her to the rest. Waller.
- YOUTHFUL. adj.* [youth and full.]
- Young.
Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful flocks unyok'd they took their course,
East, west, north, south. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
There, in a heap of slain, among the rest,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd
Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.
  - Suitable to the first part of life.
Here be all the pleasures
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
Brisk as the April buds in primrose season. Milton.
In his years were seen,
A youthful vigour and autumnal green. Dryden.
The nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pope.
  - Vigorous as in youth.
How is a good Christian animated by a steadfast belief of an everlasting enjoyment of perfect felicity, such as, after millions of millions of ages is still youthful and flourishing, and inviting as at the first? no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity. Bentley.
- YOUTHFULLY. adv.* [from youthful.] In a youthful manner.
YOUTHLY. adj. [from youth.] Young; early in life. Obsolete.
True be thy words, and worthy of thy praise,
That warlike feats dost highest glorify,
Therein have I spent all my youthly days,
And many battles fought and many frays. Fairy Queen.
- YOUTHLY. adj.* [from youth.] Young; youthful. A bad word.
The scribbler had not genius to turn my age, as indeed I am an old maid, into rallery, for affecting a youthly turn than is consistent with my time of day. Spectator.
- YOUTH. part.* [y and pight, from pitch.] Fixed.
That same wicked wight
His dwelling has low in an hollow cave,
Far underneath a craggy cliff youth,
Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spenser.
- YUCK. n. f.* [jucken, Dutch.] Itch.
YULE. n. f. [geol, yeol, yehul, Saxon.] The time of Christmas.
YUX. n. f. [yeox, Saxon.] The hiccough.

ZE A

Z, Is found in the Saxon alphabets, set down by Grammarians; but is read in no word originally Teutonic: its found is uniformly that of an hard S.

ZA'FFAR. n. f.
ZA'FFIR. n. f.

Powder the calx of cobalt, very fine, and mix it with three times its weight of powdered flints, this being wetted with common water, the whole concretes into a solid mass called zaffre, which from its hardness has been mistaken for a native mineral.

Cobalt being sublimed, the flowers are of a blue colour; these, German mineralists call zaffir.

The artificers in glass tinge their glass blue with that dark mineral zaphara.

ZA'NV. n. f. [Probably of zanti.] The contraction of Giovanni or fanna, a scoff, according to Skinner. One employed to raise laughter by his gestures, actions and speeches; a merry Andrew; a buffoon.

Some carrytale, some pleafman, some flight zany,
Some mumblenews, some trencher knight, some Dick,
Told our intents before.

Then write that I may follow, and so be Thy echo, thy debtor, thy foil, thy zany,
I shall be thought, if mine like thine I shape,
All the world's lion, though I be thy ape.

Oh, great restorer of the good old stage,
Preacher at once, and zany of thy age.

ZA'RNICH. n. f. Zarnich is a solid substance in which opment is frequently found; and it approaches to the nature of opment, but without its lustre and foliated texture. The common kinds of zarnich are green and yellow; and to this we owe the distinction of opment into these colours, though there is no such substance as green opment. Zarnich contains a large quantity of arsenick in it.

ZEAL. n. f. [zēlos, zelos, Latin.] Passionate ardour for any person or cause.

This present age, wherein zeal hath drowned charity and skill; meekness will not now suffer any man to marvel, whatsoever he shall hear reproved by whomsoever.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor show doth better; this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.

Among the seraphims
Abdiel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe,
The current of his fury thus oppos'd.

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will.
She with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,
As women, where they will, are all in haste;
The father, mother, and the kin beside;
Were overbore by the fury of the tide.

The princes applaud with a furious joy,
And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy.

Seriousness and zeal in religion is natural to the English.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety by over-acting some things in their religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned.

True zeal seems not to be any one single affection of the soul; but rather a strong mixture of many holy affections; rather a gracious constitution of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, (swaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions; all not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent.

Z E N

When the fins of a nation have provoked God to forsake it, he suffers those to concur in the most pernicious counsels for enslaving conscience, who pretend to the greatest zeal for the liberty of it.

This rebellion has discovered to his majesty, who have espoused his interests with zeal or indifference.

A corn of flattery and a zeal for truth.

ZEALOT. n. f. [zelator, French; ζηλωτης, Greek.] One passionately ardent in any cause. Generally used in disparage.

The fury of zealots, intestine bitterness and division were the greatest occasion of the last fatal destruction of Jerusalem.

Are not those men too often the greatest zealots who are most notoriously ignorant? true zeal should always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unwearied passion, for what it once knows to be worthy of such passion.

No wonder that so many of these deluded zealots have been engaged in a cause which they at first abhorred, and have with- ed or acted for the success of an enterprise, that might have ended in the extirpation of the protestant religion.

ZEALOUS. adj. [from zeal.] Ardently passionate in any cause.

Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we act our temporal affairs with a desire no greater than our necessity, and in actions of religion we be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit.

This day, at height of noon, came to my sphere,
A spirit, zealous, as he seem'd to know
More of the Almighty's works.

We should be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of those snares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive.

It is not at all good to be zealous against any person, but only against their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for persons: but then it should be only for good things; a rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for ill things, all manner of zeal for little things.

Being intrusted only in the general, and zealous in the main design; and as finite beings, not admitted into the secrets of government, the last resorts of providence, or capable of discovering the final purposes of God, they must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends in which alone they can oppose each other.

ZEALOUSLY. adv. [from zealous.] With passionate ardour.

Thy care is fixt, and zealously attends,
To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light,
And hope that reaps not shame.

To enter into a party as into an order of friars, with so resigned an obedience to superiors, is very unsuitable with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously assert.

ZEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from zealous.] The quality of being zealous.

ZE'CHIN. n. f. [So named from zecha, a place in Venice where the mint is settled for coinage.] A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

ZEDORA. n. f. [zaidaira, French.] A spicy plant, somewhat like ginger in its leaves, but of a sweet scent.

ZED. n. f. The name of the letter z.

Thou whoreson zed, thou unnecessary letter.

ZENITH. n. f. [Arabic.] The point over head opposite to the nadir.

Fond men! if we believe that men do live
Under the zenith of both frozen poles,
Though none come thence, advertisement to give,
Why bear we not the like faith of our souls?

These seasons are designed by the motions of the sun, when they approach nearest our zenith, or vertical point, we call it summer.

Z O N

ZEPHYRUS. n. f. [zephyrus, Latin.] The west wind; and poetically any calm soft wind.

As zephyrus blowing low the violet. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Zephyr, you shall see a youth with a merry countenance, holding in his hand a swan with wings displayed, as about to sing.

Forth rush the levent and the ponent winns, Eurus and Zephyr.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes,
Their every music wakes,

Whence blending all the sweeten'd zephyr springs.

ZEST. n. f.
1. The peel of an orange squeezed into wine.
2. A relish; a taste added.

To ZEST. v. a. To heighten by an additional relish.

ZETHEUS. n. f. [from ζητος.] Proceeding by enquiry.

ZETHEUS. n. f. [from ζητος.] A figure in Grammar, when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplement, as lute overcame flame, boldness fear, and mad- nels reason.

ZOCLEA. n. f. [In architecture.] A small sort of stand or pedestal, being a low square piece or member, serving to sup- port a busto, statue, or the like, that needs to be raised; also a low square member serving to support a column, instead of a pedestal, base, or plinth.

ZODIACK. n. f. [zodiaque, French; ζωδιακος, Greek.] The living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it in globes. The track of the sun through the twelve signs; a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac in his glitt'ring coach.

Years he number'd scarce thirteen,
When fates turn'd cruel;
Yet three full zodiacs had he been
The stage's jewel.

By his side,
As in a glitt'ring zodiac hung the sword,
Satan's dire dread; and in his hand the spear.

It exceeds even their absurdity to suppose the zodiac active, and planets to be efficient of, and antecedent to themselves, or to exert any influences before they were in being.

Here in a shrine that cast a dazzling light,
Sat fixt in thought the mighty Stagyrite;
His sacred head a radiant zodiac crown'd,
And various animals his sides surround.

ZONA. n. f. [ζωνη, zona, Latin.]

1. A girdle.

The middle part
Girt like a starry zone his waist, and round
Skirted his loins, and thighs, with downy gold
And colours dipp'd in heav'n.

An embroider'd zone surrounds her waist.
Thy statues, Venus, though by Phidias' hands
Design'd immortal, yet no longer stands;
The magic of thy shining zone is past,
But Salisbury's garter shall for ever last.

FINIS.

Z O O

Scarce could the goddess from her nymph be known,
But by the crescent and the golden zone.

2. A division of the earth.

The whole surface of the earth is divided into five zones: the first is contained between the two tropicks, and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the arctic polar circle: the southern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumscribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centers.

True love is still the same: the torrid zones,
And those more frigid ones,
It must not know:
For love grown cold or hot,
Is lust or friendship, not
The thing we flow;
For that's a flame would die,
Held down or up too high:
Then think I love more than I can express,
And would love more, could I but love thee less.

As five zones th' ethereal regions bind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd:
The sun, with rays directly darting down,
Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone.

3. Circuit; circumference.

Scarce the sun
Hath finish'd half his journey, and scarce begins
His other half in the great zone of heav'n.

ZOOGRAPHER. n. f. [ζωον and γραφω.] One who describes the nature, properties, and forms of animals.

One kind of locust stands not prone, or a little inclining upward; but a large erections, elevating the two fore legs, and sustaining itself in the middle of the other four, by zoo- graphers called the prophet and praying locust.

ZOOGRAPHY. n. f. [of ζωον and γραφω.] A description of the forms, nature, and properties of animals.

If we contemplate the end of the effect, its principal final cause being the glory of its maker, this leads us into divinity; and for its subordinate, as it is designed for alimental sustenance to living creatures, and medicinal uses to man, we are thereby conducted into zoography.

ZOOLOGY. n. f. [of ζωον and λογω.] A treatise concerning living creatures.

ZOOPHYTE. n. f. [ζωοφυτον, of ζωον and φυτον.] Certain vegetables or substances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.

ZOOPTICK COLUMN. n. f. [In architecture.] A statuary column, or a column which bears or supports the figure of an animal.

ZOOPTORUS. n. f. [ζωοπορευς.] A part between the architraves and cornice, so called on account of the ornaments carved on it, among which were the figures of animals.

ZOOTOMIST. n. f. [of ζωοτομία.] A dissector of the bodies of brute beasts.

ZOOTOMY. n. f. [ζωτομία, of ζωον and τομή.] Dissection of the bodies of beasts.
